"The Key to Power"

A DRAMA of the COALFIELDS

Here's a thriller—a timely drama, based on the present coal situation. It has real punch and heart interest.

Claire Adams and Hugh Thompson are the leading players; the direction is by William Parke, and the story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and Caroline Gentry.

Five reels of entertainment—splendidly produced.

"ON WITH THE DANCE"

—the gold endures,
the dross is burned away.

Into the great Manhattan caldron are poured the destinies of four lives, there to brew as their wills and the fates decree. New York—ruthless, sinful, profligate, base, accursed? Yes for the weak, the vicious and the uncourageous.

But New York—magnificent, flashing, awakening, prodigal, inspiring—for the brave, the pure in heart and the strong.

Which shall it be? And where the end?

Let the play proceed! On with the dance!

The very spirit of tumultuous, seething, wonderful, thrilling New York is in this sumptuous, enthralling picture drama.

"Over Tavish's shoulder I saw it, too. It looked like. . . . I clutched Tavish for support"

Illustrations by W. H. D. Koerner

Behind the Door

by Gouverneur Morris

I COULDN'T sleep for a cent. I was either wide awake and worrying about things that weren't of the slightest importance, or else I was ridden by nightmares. This was natural enough, but mighty unpleasant. Tavish, the mate, was having a bad night, too. Sometimes, when we were both awake at the same time, we talked.

"Dammation," said Tavish once, "you might know that soon or late the German streak would crop out in him; never showed a sign of it before, though."

"Blood's a thick thing," I answered. "Personally, though, I didn't want to see the man drown. And I'd started to turn away when the skipper jumped — how high is the bridge above sea level?"

"A good thirty-five feet."

"In or out of the movies," I said, "I never saw a finer rescue."

"Oh, that part was all right. What gets my goat is the way the skipper coddled the brute when he got him aboard; puts him in his own bed, has blankets and grog heated special. That torpedo didn't much more than get by."

Tavish shivered as if he were cold. I could hear him. "I suppose," I said, "that when you've saved a man's life you can't help kind of softening toward that man — but what a peach of a shot Ryan made! First crack right out of the box! I suppose they felt so sure the torpedo would get home that they came up. Idiots!"

"How does Captain Krug know," said Tavish, "that the German commander — what is he, a lieutenant? — hasn't murdered women and children? By Gawd, I think it's sickening, and I'll tell him so."

"I won't go as far as that," I said, "but it sickens me, too."

Tavish got up, stepped into his sea boots, and went

ONE exhibitor writes in: "Powerful in its perfection and production quality. Situations that thrill to the marrow. Star wonderfully adapted to the leading role. A story that rivets the audience's attention."

Another exhibitor writes in: "The Arcade Theater opened a week's engagement of 'Behind the Door' yesterday to turn away attendance both afternoon and evening. The consensus of opinion was that the picture is really something unusual in the line of photoplay offerings. The subject is handled in a masterly manner and there is no question but that it gets the audiences all the way through and sends them away talking. We were pleasantly surprised at the opening of the picture, which is all the more remarkable as it is just before Christmas when business usually starts to slump."

As a matter of fact, "Behind the Door" is an unusual picture—there never has been one like it before. And it is destined to make unusual money for the wise showman that plays it right. It will cause more talk (the kind of talk that fills theatres) than any picture you have ever shown.

"The 13th COMMANDMENT"

A Paramount-Artcraft Picture

A Vital Drama of Love and Life from the Noted Novel by Rupert Hughes

"What's fair for the man is fair for the woman," she said. And marriage to her was a matter of "fifty-fifty."

Do you think a wife should tamely accept a salary from her husband for being faithful and pretty?

The married, the single, the betrothed, the jilted, the young, the old, the rich, the poor are going to flock to see "The Thirteenth Commandment" for it is one of the best pictures of this year or any other year. See for yourself!

(in Five Parts)

A Vivid and Colorful Story of a Picturesque People engaged in their Daily Business of Life, Entertainingly Woven into a Romance of Lovers.

A REAL NOVELTY—The First of

TALES OF THE TROPICS

Through swamp and virgin forest; over mountain trails; into the craters of volcanoes; floating down tropical streams; digging into half-buried ruins thousands of years old; into the heart of the real Indian country we traveled, ever seeking the unusual, the primitive and the beautiful.

To those who love life and nature, to the student and to the stay-at-home with the love of adventure, "TALES OF THE TROPICS" will make an immediate appeal through their fidelity to detail, wealth of tropical color, and primitive picturesqueness.

Some territories are still open for live-wire independent exchangemen.

THE LORD LOVES THE IRISH

By MONTE M. KATTERJOHN

Directed by
ERNEST C. WARDE

VARIETY says: For once at any rate we agree with the producer and distributor claims for a picture. "The Lord Loves the Irish" is the best of all the J. Warren Kerrigan pictures. It has a smashing finale that will tempt any exhibitor to tear the necessary amount of rental from his bank-roll. And also: ably directed and photographed.

THE LONE WOLF'S DAUGHTER

By

Louis Joseph Vance

Combining the famous characters of
"THE LONE WOLF" & "FALSE FACES"

Wid's SAYS:

"'The Lone Wolf's Daughter' is without doubt a big picture. It has all the evidence of a special and surely must have cost quite a bit to produce. Throughout there is considerable display of wealth and it contains some of the best performances on the part of the players seen in some time.

"You can book this and feel safe from a box-office angle for it is that kind of an attraction. It should make money and will probably stand a long run, profiting by word-of-mouth advertising. Use the name of the star liberally in connection with your announcements. There are numerous possibilities for financial return in this production and you should get your share.

"Louis Joseph Vance has written a real mystery story with plenty of secret passages, sliding doors and other intricate things. From a production standpoint 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter' has been picturized in a big way—lavish sets, a magnificent display of wealth in furnishings and enough of the spectacular to create a dramatic climax. There is enough interest and action alone in the short prologue for a complete picture in itself.

"There is swift action here and the spectacular finale, a fire, works up a dramatic climax preceding the happy ending. You can safely make promises for this production."

The PENNY PHILANTHROPIST

PEGGY O'NEILL
One of the big reasons that this picture will make you much money.

is a name you are going to hear repeated many times during the coming months, because it is the name of one of the biggest, most unusual pictures that has reached the screen this season.

"The Penny Philanthropist" is the picture extraordinary of the year. No picture ever screened is even nearly like it. Never before has such a combination of story, star and keen presentation been offered on the basis upon which we offer this picture.

Ralph Morgan and Peggy O'Neill are the stars, two names that mean much to those interested in the progress of the silent art.

Clara Laughlin is the author. Who doesn't know her?

REALART PICTURES

WHEREVER motion pictures are shown, there the name of R. A. Walsh is known! "Regeneration" was his. And "Carmen," "Blue Blood and Red," "The Silent Lie," "The Serpent," "Evangeline" and "The Honor System," too! Milestone after milestone of achievement marks the long trail of successes this pioneer director has blazed!

He was a member of the old Biograph family. He trekked across the Continent with the first Griffith caravan. He sought locations in the Rockies, on the great Western plains, through New England, in the Seminoles, writing, directing and editing romances that have entertained millions throughout the world.

And now—at thirty-three, a veteran when most men begin work — he comes into his own— severs all other ties and joins Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to make R. A. Walsh Productions!

A Mayflower achievement!

A Realart triumph!

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION

REALART PICTURES

R. A. Walsh is to make super-features exclusively. And when Realart says super-features it means just this. Mr. Walsh is to be provided with the biggest stories available, and will be unhampered by financial or time restrictions or the whims of film editors. He will choose his own stories, do the casting, direct his productions to meet his own ideas, and personally cut, edit and title all of his film.

This is Realart production policy—to make pictures in the studio, rather than in the counting room. It is Mayflower policy. It is the policy that has made possible Mayflower's partnership with some of the world's greatest directors. It is a successful policy—as witness "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Miracle Man."

In the past, R. A. Walsh pictures frequently have bulged the lid of the box office cash box. Mr. Walsh now promises to rip it off altogether. He will be backed to the limit in production by Mayflower faith and Mayflower cash. Realart expects from him one of the greatest series of productions ever offered to exhibitors.

So wrote Miss Harriet Underhill, in the New York Tribune, after she had seen "BROKEN BLOSSOMS." And so have countless thousands said after her.

The appreciation of things beautiful varies; no great work has ever found universal praise; even the Bible has its defamers—but the whole world of art recognizes that the greatest screen achievement, the supreme contribution to cinema progress, is "BROKEN BLOSSOMS."

And every theatre that seeks to foster the best traditions of the motion picture, every house that is growing with the art of the film, must number among its presentations

To the self-styled Executive Committee of the so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America:

Let us have facts.

It is about time that certain facts be brought to the attention of the Exhibitors of the United States, so that they may determine how best to conserve their present and future interests in securing a just revenue from the use of their screens for industrial and advertising purposes.

That Exhibitors are entitled to this revenue is now universally recognized.

It is clearly apparent now, for reasons that have since developed, and which will be alluded to hereafter, that the delegation from the New York State Exhibitors League to the St. Louis Exhibitors Convention, attended for one of two reasons: Either to gain control of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, so that it could be run by a handful of men—or, to do everything possible to break up the League. Both purposes were intended to serve the purely personal ends of the delegation.

The ensuing controversy has been well aired in the trade papers, and needs no further comment here.

Early in the fall the writer, feeling that it was for the best interests of the Exhibitors of the United States, held several conferences with Messrs. Cohen, Reilly and Berman, in the hope that all differences could be settled and that one united exhibitors' organization could be perfected.

He realized that in the many changes now taking place in this big industry that such an organization was absolutely necessary if exhibitors' interests were to be safeguarded.

For a time it seemed as though harmony would prevail. The reason it did not being the insistence of Messrs. Cohen, Reilly and Berman that the chairman of our Tax Committee, against whom these gentlemen apparently had a personal grievance, resign. This request was positively refused. A compromise was made to allow Mr. Berman or another man designated by said gentlemen to act as Secretary of the Tax Committee and such an agreement was very nearly entered into. In support of this settlement several conferences were held by them in connection with our taxation committee prior to going to Washington.

During these conferences the question of the use of the screen for national advertising came up. This was important because we had already attempted in behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America to organize a " Motion Picture Lovers " contest, whereby our treasury would be greatly assisted, and we had also discussed other forms of national advertising that might tend to serve the interests of all exhibitors and bring a very necessary revenue into the treasury of our national organization.

Can these gentlemen deny that they were very much interested in national advertising as affecting motion picture exhibitors of the United States or that they were even more interested as to just where they would personally participate in the revenue from same?

Can they deny that a suggestion was made to perfect an arrangement whereby a favored few could add to their personal gain by getting certain exclusive contracts for national advertising?

Can they deny that the writer stated that in endeavoring to perform the duties of his office as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, he could not use such office for personal gain, and that whatever could be arranged must be for the absolute benefit of the Motion Picture Exhibitors individually and for the treasury of the national organization?

Can they deny that from that time on there seemed to be a very lukewarm attitude on their part in the matter of one big harmonious exhibitors' movement, or that one or two further attempts at conference to perfect such harmony were side-stepped?

Can they deny that they are in the national motion picture advertising development for personal gain and that the best interests, so called, of the motion picture exhibitors of America is secondary to them in this unseemly squabble?

Can they deny that the opening up of screens of America whereby the picture theatre owners will receive a fair revenue for the use of their screens from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and later as they make similar agreements, from other companies that are in a position to offer such services, which will also finance the national organization, is a big progressive step forward?

Can they deny that the theatre owner is better off in having competition for his screen advertising than he is to have the same controlled by a handful of men, who may or may not work to his (the theatre owner) best interest, or who may or may not work entirely for their own personal gain?

The cards are face up. We are clean on this proposition. We are not looking for personal gain but we do want the screens of America to receive the remuneration to which they are justly entitled.

What has this handful of men done to attempt to tie up such screen advertising? This is the age of competition. Most of us face it every day in our picture business.

What have you self-elected saviors of the exhibitor got to offer the national advertisers, who are given credit for being the brightest men in the business world?

What have you to offer the exhibitor?

What reputation have you for making motion pictures of the kind and character that the public will pay money to see?

Are you incorporated—and who are your stockholders?

on the Table

Why do you propose personal censorship when you, along with the entire industry are fighting every kind of censorship?

Don't you know it would take you many months before you could give the exhibitors of this country any kind of revenue, even though you were organized to produce pictures today?

Are you prepared to lay all your cards on the table by stating whether you propose to produce these industrial and advertising films, and if so, by what kind of contract, and who will finance said company or companies, and who would get the profit?

Who is paying for the pages of advertising that you are running in the trade papers, and the postage for sending circular matter to the national advertisers?

Who is paying for the traveling expenses of your representatives who you say you are sending all over the country?

Who is paying for your ads in Printers' Ink, which are written for the purposes of telling the national advertisers that you can deliver to them the screens of the country, when on the other hand in the trade papers you tell the exhibitors it is bad business to allow advertising on the screen?

How does it come that in Printers' Ink, a trade paper which the advertising man is in the habit of reading, you call your organization the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and in the Motion Picture World you call your organization The Committee organized for the Protection of the Screen?

Can you deny that to make good your bluff you have called on the leading industrial producers for films to distribute—and that you have been turned down in every instance?

Had you first consulted the exhibitors of the country and had their permission to do so, as you claim industrial motion picture companies should have done in the past?

What did you have in mind when you started your trade paper campaign asking the exhibitors of the country not to sign a contract with any film company until they had first seen you?

Do you mean to tell me or the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., that after you have censored an industrial or educational picture for which you have guaranteed distribution to the advertiser, that you will be pledged not only to run that picture on my screen but on every other screen of the country?

Are you not "putting a mortgage on a piece of property to which you have no title?"

What prompted you to reproduce in Printers' Ink newspaper clippings which misquoted Mr. Tim Thrift regarding the value of screen advertising, and which Mr. Thrift had already asked the newspapers to retract?

If you did not know that as Chairman of the Film Committee of the Association of National Advertisers, Mr. Thrift has heartily endorsed the screen medium; if you are no closer than this indicates to the development and progress of industrial picture production, how can you safeguard the interests of the exhibitors of America?

What picture have you or your backers ever produced or distributed that qualifies you to speak on the subject, either to advertise in Printers' Ink, or to the exhibitors in the trade press?

Knowing as you must that the arrangement made between the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., and the Universal has never been advertised as exclusive, why do you distort the facts and what is your object in your holier-than-thou pose?

Why do you not come clean, and disclose your real purpose, your backers and their object?

Who or What is the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Films, Inc.?

Industrial pictures are here to stay. The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has officially recognized the fact. Having made the first great forward step toward an open screen and the protection of theatre owners; having made public the details of this step, including, the name of the first producer to recognize the exhibitors rights, as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., I demand that you too lay your cards on the table, and let the exhibitors and the advertisers pass judgment.

A knife flashed in the gloom of an opera box, and Monty Paliser crumpled up in a lifeless heap.

Who killed him? Was it the woman he wronged? Was it the man he betrayed? Was it the crippled father of the woman?

Who killed Monty Paliser?

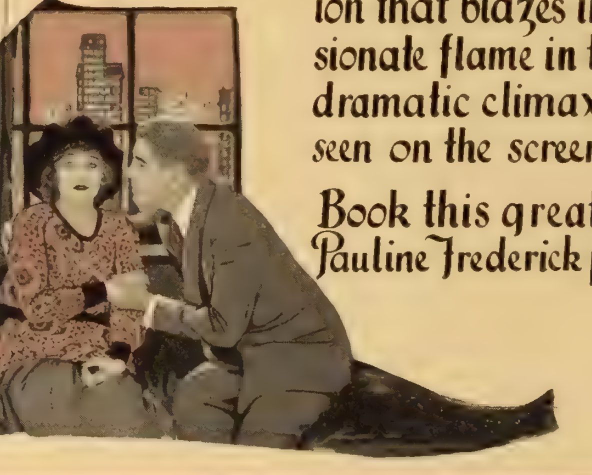
The PAULINE FREDERICK PICTURES

Bare, blunt box-office logic tells you that a Pauline Frederick Picture is a super-attraction.

Her amazing record of consistent success has built up a loyal, unswerving following that simply stampedes to see her whenever she is billed.

Pauline Frederick plays "Cassy" the woman in the Paliser Case, with a smouldering repression that blazes into passionate flame in the most dramatic climax ever seen on the screen.



Book this greatest of Pauline Frederick pictures!

MY HUSBAND'S OTHER WIFE

WITH SYLVIA BREAMER AND ROBERT GORDON

The old adage "marry in haste and repent in leisure" could be parodied to "divorce in haste and repent in leisure." Here is a punchy story of a woman who divorced in haste because she thought she loved another man, but time proved that her first husband still held her heart. A good title and a good picture for a good business!

BLANCHE SWEET in FIGHTING CRESSY

Adapted from Bret Harte's famous story, "Cressy." Bret Harte wrote such good stories that they have been translated into practically every civilized language. They are human, appealing and dramatic, brightened by many subtle touches of humor. "Cressy" is such a story. All the subtle charm and vigorous and vivacious youth that Bret Harte put into the story have been translated into the photoplay... A fine story, extremely well acted and produced. The technique is faultless. Blanche Sweet gives an exquisite portrayal."

One of the first exhibitors in the United States to thoroughly appreciate the possibilities of motion pictures and to realize the necessity of a proper and dignified presentation, with proper music, was Samuel L. Rothapfel, formerly director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, New York City, and now director of the new million dollar theatre, The California, Los Angeles, California.

Every succeeding year since Mr. Rothapfel entered the business, he has shown constant improvement in his methods, and a deeper conception of the possibilities, until today, exhibitors all over the world, consider him without a superior in his line of work, and agree he is a past master in judging the quality of a motion picture from the standpoint of the theatre patron.

In a letter dated December 4th, to Mr. H. H. Hicks, Manager of the Los Angeles Branch of Vitagraph, MR. ROTHAPFEL SAID:—

> "The Larry Semon comedy, THE HEAD WAITER, which I played at the California Theatre, week of November 30th, I consider as good as any comedy that I have seen during the past year.
> "Nothing but favorable comments have been heard and the people laughed continuously, and from their tummies.
> "No exhibitor can make a mistake in booking this comedy and featuring it in a big way.
> "It will make a great many friends for Larry and I am looking forward anxiously for the Larry Semon comedies that are to follow."

A Producer's Year

¶ This will be a year of remarkable production.

Or, to express the situation more clearly, we might say: This will be a remarkable year in production.

In the brief history of production, in fact, we are in the midst of its most significant era.

Let's review briefly.

The star was the all desirable picture element last year and in several previous years.

This era began when we ceased to say: "It's a Biograph" and said, "It's a Mary Pickford."

The era reached its culmination, we believe, over a year ago, when a veritable picture pit took place on the famous "million dollar rug" in a Los Angeles hotel; and when the excitement had cleared away one producer and three stars decided to break off with the producer-distributor and go it alone.

That, by the way, was not the chief result of this, the most dramatic event in this industry's history.

So alluring were the prizes sought that defiances were hurled back and forth which today lie at the root of this industry's most serious economic struggle—namely, the invasion of each other's field back and forth by the producer and the exhibitor.

At any rate, however, the star was the prize, because the picture was the prize, and the star, it was thought, made the picture.

Today the picture is just as much, even more, the prize; but there has come a change.

We have previously looked to stars for pictures; today we are also looking for directors for stars.

We say this without the least intention of overlooking the very important box-office part a star plays in a picture—and always will. The big stars are still big stars. Nevertheless we say it emphatically, because we believe a most important development in present and future picture making has come about.

We read our own history piecemeal. We know that something is moving on, but we don't grasp its full significance till we lump it all together.

Consider the following list of names.

Men of producing ability have moved forward in mass this year. Some names are new—they have found their place in the picture sun this year. Others have been known for some time; but will any say that they did better work in any previous year.

Here's a roster, and it only partially includes all the present and coming factors:

David Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, Cecil De Mille, Mack Sennett, Raoul Walsh, Sydney Franklin, Edgar Lewis, Allan Dwan, Victor Shertzinger, the Whartons, J. Gordon Edwards, Donald Crisp, Thomas Heffron, Emile Chautard, John Adolfi, Clarence Badger, Harry Lehrman, Al Christie, J. Stuart Blackton, the Blaches, Charles Brabin, Rupert Julian, George Foster Platt, William D. Taylor, Edward Jose, T. Hayes Hunter, Jesse Hampton, Wilfrid Lucas, Harry Beaumont, Ernest Warde, Henry King, King Vidor, Henry Otto, George Loane Tucker, Ed. J. Le Saint, Rollin Sturgeon, Tod Browning, Lloyd Ingraham, Hobart Henley, Reginald Barker, Eric Von Stroheim, Tom Terris, Burton King, Chester Withey, Marshall Neilan, Jack Conway, George D. Baker, William C. Cabanne, Albert Capellani, Edwin Carewe, William P. S. Earle, John Emerson, George Fitzmaurice, Charles Giblyn, Allen Holubar, George Irving, Harley Knoles, Frank Lloyd, George Melford, Charles Miller, William Nigh, Sidney Olcott, Maurice Tourneur, Lois Weber, James Young.

The important fact is that where producing ability a few years ago was limited to a handful of directors, today a formidable phalanx has it well in hand.

These men, these many men, will each make a few pictures each this year; but in the aggregate there will be more good pictures by far than any previous year has seen, and they will come from many sources to the exhibitor.

We have said right along to the exhibitors of the country: You are going to get plenty of good pictures, no matter what happens within the industry.

The above list of names is in itself the argument for and guarantee of this most important fact.

These men will make pictures—good pictures. They will receive the necessary backing, the necessary distribution, the necessary exhibition—for these pictures.

No force can stop this, because no force can stop either demand or supply—in this or any other business.

There is an identity of interest between the man who makes good pictures and the man who wants good pictures which no force can separate—for long.

That's what we meant when we said: Good pictures will always get good theatres and good theatres will always get good pictures.

These are the two interests in this business which natural law itself will always hold supreme—despite any temporary confusion—the maker of good pictures and the man who gives them good exhibition.

Key Cities—A Startling Charge

MORE than passing attention will be aroused by the exclusive article in this week's NEWS which we have appropriately headed, "Dynamite from Carl Laemmle."

The Universal executive delivers a startling indictment against one of the most important factors in the business when he declares that key city bookings "are not all that they appear to be."

That his charge will be answered goes without saying. But one probable "answer that does not answer" Mr. Laemmle disarms to some extent with his closing statement: "Sour grapes? Hell, No! Just a few uncomfortable facts."

This leaves it to the critics to confine themselves to the merits of the case.

Frankly, as part of our own comment on the letter, we must state the truth that Mr. Laemmle is not the only film man who has expressed similar views on the matter within the past month. If their declarations are borne out by the evidence then a cancerous condition is revealed, certain to spread its evil influence further and further, certain to wreak harm beyond calculation.

Our investigations into the matter have been hampered by an unwillingness on the part of film men to be quoted on so touchy a matter. No individual cares to be "the goat."

Perhaps Mr. Laemmle's explosion will toss the cover off the boiling kettle.

Our pages are open.

What have you to say—"key city" exhibitors and village exhibitors; producers, big and little.

Aim both the brickbats and the bouquets towards Mr. Laemmle; our role is that of the Innocent Bystander.

Who speaks up first?

Signs of Progress

LAST week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS saw the establishment of a new department in the Service Bureau devoted to a recognition of the work being done by exploitation men in the various exchanges.

Which is, indirectly, a sign of progress in the industry.

For it must be admitted that only a little over a year ago the mention of "Exploitation Experts" brought something of a smile. Many were the quips and anecdotes told concerning some of the alleged "experts."

But this factor in the industry has progressed steadily. Incompetents didn't last long; better men were attracted to the work from month to month; the good men developed after jumping the hurdles of "a new game."

The director of our Exhibitors' Service Bureau gives us eloquent testimony of the good work that is now being done by these exchange exploitation men in every section of the country. It is to give louder voice to this testimony that the new department has been established. Watch it.

Make Way—National Advertisers

ARE the old line "national advertisers" to feel a taste of motion picture competition along the lines of our trade paper campaigns?

The thought is prompted by the spectacle of five pages in the current Saturday Evening Post bearing the signature of Lewis Selznick.

We can picture to ourselves the stir created in the office of Printer's Ink and Advertising and Selling. We can imagine the gasps in the advertising departments that devote their energies to tires, soaps and chewing gums.

Five pages. Shades of thirty-two page trade paper inserts! Make way all you pikers with your trifling half million dollar advertising appropriations.

When—and Then!

A MAN who is now an exhibitor, and who has been a film salesman, exchange manager and a producer, says that nothing will ever come of percentage until it is based upon confidence between the exhibitor and exchange.

It's about as sensible and solid a letter as this office has ever had from the trade.

He says that confidence does not now exist—by a long shot. And, he says, that the film salesman and the exchange are largely at fault because the home office is at fault, and the home office is at fault because of lack of contact with, and understanding of, the exhibitor throughout the field.

In other words, there is no real distributor—exhibitor cooperation—despite the fact that this is the main plank in the advertised policy of practically every concern in the industry.

The sad part of it is that he's right.

And he's equally right when he says that neither percentage nor any other better method of film rentals will ever come about until both sides quit "strafing" and act like allies in a common cause.

But we'll let him say it:

"When this dog-eat-dog, devil-take-the-hindmost policy of chasing the immediate dollar, without any thought of tomorrow, is abandoned for a regular business policy of making a sincere and consistent effort to give a real service to the customer for money received;

"When the conscientious and constructive exchange manager rather than the skillful thrower of bull will be encouraged and upheld by his home office in his effort to establish and maintain a sympathetic relation with his customers; when scrupulous care is taken to account properly for every cent received, and when, as must inevitably happen in every exchange, an error is made and an overpayment received, the exhibitor is given the privilege of his money back if he wants it;

"When exchange managers, bookers and salesmen will learn a little about their stock in trade and intelligently try to select subjects suited to localities and occasions, and are permitted to use common sense in establishing the rental prices for the various communities in their territory.

"Then in my humble opinion, it will not be necessary to quarrel about whether the companies are to be paid by a flat rental system or on a percentage basis, because having an eye for the future, it will be the effort of the exchange man to work with and not against his customer and nurse him along until he will be able and willing to pay all the traffic will bear for the worthy pictures handled by the exchange.

"And until such time, there is no method on earth which will work automatically to cure the abuses which the trade is heir to by reason of the practices which have cursed it from its very inception."

COAST WIRE BRIEFS

"A TELEGRAM received from Los Angeles states that Margaret de La Motte was internally injured and sustained cuts on her shoulder, face and head when the automobile in which she was traveling was struck by a trolley car at Cahuenga street and Santa Monica boulevard, and carried for a distance of a hundred yards. Miss de La Motte's parents, who were accompanying her at the time, are also reported to have been hurt badly. The actress was on her way to the Metro studio, where she had the lead in "The Hope," when the accident occurred.

The same telegram advises of the marriage of Gloria Swanson to H. K. Somborn, president of the Equity Pictures, on December 20th, at the Hotel Alexandria. The actress will continue her work with C. B. DeMille, it is said.

Adolph Zukor is reported to have closed with Claud Jensen and J. Von Herberg for the controlling interest in their theatres in Portland, Seattle, Butte and other Northwestern locations.

Dealing in Personalities

WE thank you—boys, one and all. For those kind words you said about the Christmas issue. For the encouragement you have given us to strive for better issues with each week of the new year.

People often say that there are more knockers to the square foot in the film game than in any other on record. But we are here to say that there are more regular fellows anxious to go out of their way to say "Good luck!" than we ever thought existed.

Again we thank you, boys.

And we add that it was considerably cheering to get out of the slough of strike conditions with such a bang-up issue as last week's with its two hundred and two advertising pages.

There's a mark for all to shoot at.

A little less time devoted to childish knock might help some of them in getting better aim.

Our advice is free.

You're welcome.

Met J. D. Williams this week. Back from his cross-country jaunt. Smiling broadly—like the cat that ate the canary. All in all, there's an air of confidence and faith about that First National Headquarters that you can't help feeling. Always those First National boys give you the impression that they have something up their sleeves—and the feeling that they know it will be the right thing at the right moment when they pull it.

AFTER getting away from the subject of last week's issue we are here to remark that this week's NEWS is nothing to sneeze at.

We feel a little proud for example over those holiday greetings we present from such notables as Secretary of War Baker, General March, and Cardinal Gibbons.

Proud for one thing because we are motion picture workers, and that the motion picture has reached the stage where leaders of the nation's thought so whole-heartedly express their feelings of good cheer to the industry.

And just a wee bit proud also that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been the medium to secure these expressions and convey them to the industry.

Wouldn't news weekly trailers made from these messages be a good idea? To help sell the motion picture to any who may still incline to scoffing? Here's the suggestion—go to it, Pathe, Kinograms, International.

We know that any exhibitor will thank you when he sees the trailer on his screen. For he will be quick to make use of the holiday greetings in his ads and through slides.

Go to it. But—

Give us credit, boys!

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., is off for the coast. It's his first trip there—showing that in one respect at least Yours Truly classes with Mr. Brunet as a film man. Rumor has it that the trip is connected with important plans for Associated Theatres. We understand that twenty franchises in Associated have already been disposed of with the prospect that the rest will be cleared in a short time.

THOSE holiday messages aren't the only good thing in this week's issue. If you don't read that letter from Carl Laemmle on "key cities" you are missing the communication about which they are all going to be talking for the next few weeks.

It's a case of TNT floating in nitro-glycerine. And heading towards a burning oil tank.

It's all of that and then some.

Red hot isn't the word.

For example, Mr. Laemmle says, "The campaign for 'key city' bookings has reached the point where it amounts to little less than bribery."

Won't that start something?

We expect to have our columns sizzling with excitement for the next few weeks as a result of Mr. Laemmle's defy. Unless the subject is such a touchy one that no one is willing to speak on it.

There might be something in that latter statement. Because, from conversations we have had in many quarters, we know that Carl isn't alone in his thoughts.

But Carl is always ready to say what he thinks.

You have to hand it to him.

Seems that all our news this week concerns cross-country trips. Victor Kremer strolled into the sanctum with reports of a successful jaunt around the state rights centers on behalf of his Chaplin subjects. Reports the market in satisfactory condition and gives a hint that he may soon announce some new purchases.

BEFORE you make up your mind that you have read all the features in this issue after concluding that Laemmle sizzerino, keep right on moving until you come to that discussion of Percentage Booking.

It's a two-page spread; a two-sided debate. A producer and an exhibitor do the talking, but both speakers have been through the picture mill from start to finish.

They have much the same experience behind them—but, nevertheless, they reach diametrically opposite conclusions.

Another feature you want to read is the Sydney Cohen article—"Don't Be Stampeded."

And then turn to "With First Run Theaters"—the livest trade paper feature now appearing. Red hot off the griddle this department tells each week just what programs are being played the current week in all the leading first run theaters.

It's all telegraph stuff—last minute information, not stale weeks old copy drifting in through the mails.

Just to do it up in "ace high" shape, we also give you in this department reproductions of the advertising used by those first run houses on these self-same bills.

That's tying the prize package up with all the trimmings, isn't it?

Our Star Reporter set out last week to track down a rumor that C. L. Yearsely had become "Director of Advertising and Publicity" for Goldwyn. Mr. Yearsley denied the truth of the rumor. Mr. Block asserted that it was news to him. Finally the S. R. found a proofreader and compositor at Williams Printing Company who confessed to having started the merry tale. The juggling of a few lines of type in last week's News made us swap a few jobs around. Our apologies to all concerned.

THIS was house organ week in our mail. First came the initial issue of Select's Motion Picture Times, a bang-up publication that shows the expenditure of considerable money and quite a work of printing art.

Next the holiday issue of the Pathe Sun. Oh, boy! That almost took our breath away. Almost as thick as the holiday number of THE NEWS; and overflowing with color effects. Every part of the organization is represented in the issue, right through the home office and clear around the exchange circle. It's an issue to be proud of.

And finally "Contact"—the inter-organization First National publication. Here's our ideal of a house organ. No hokum; but page after page of really valuable trade discussions and exchanges of ideas. If each issue of "Contact" doesn't increase the efficiency of every member of First National's organization then we miss our guess by a mile.

A few days ago we read "A Thought for the Weak. Interviews with prominent film men are not secured from the publicity department."

You said it, Les, and sometimes they're not secured from the "prominent film men." As, f'rinstance——

Which should be inspiration enough to prompt an addition to the "Thoughts of the Weak."

GREETINGS!

From some of the Country's Leaders to the Entire Motion Picture Industry contained in Letters written to Motion Picture News

From Secretary of War Baker

With church and school and printing press, the screen has taken its place as one of the major educational agencies. It lies within the power of the leaders of the industry to make it more and more the university of the average citizen.

From Cardinal Gibbons

Following is the message the venerable prelate desires the motion picture screen to convey to the nation:

" The best guarantee for the stability of our beloved country is obedience to all lawfully constituted authority."

From General Peyton C. March

The work of the motion picture industry in showing on the screen the danger of Red agitation and the necessity for the complete support of American institutions is of the greatest value to the country. Holiday greetings to all the industry and congratulations on its valuable work for Americanization.

Dynamite from Carl Laemmle

"The Campaign for 'Key City' Bookings Has Reached the Point Where it Amounts to Little Less Than Plain Bribery"—A Sizzling Exclusive Article

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

WILL you stand for some plain talk with regard to the importance, or lack of importance, of theatres in key cities?

I have been reading your editorials on this subject. In theory you are absolutely right when you say "Good pictures will always get good theatres; and good theatres will always get good pictures," but in practice it doesn't work out that way.

When the producers discovered that the best way to "make" a picture was to run it in a big theatre in each key city, they almost immediately began to exercise all their ingenuity to get their pictures into those key houses. This campaign has now reached the point where it amounts to little less than plain bribery.

It is the commonest thing in the world for a producer not only to charge these big houses little or no rental, but in addition, actually to spend large sums of money to "put the picture over" in such houses. The owner of the big theatre quickly discovered that he could use his house as a club to get pictures for almost no rental at all. He also discovered that he could make the producer do his local advertising for him by pitting one producer against another.

NOW then, I would like to agree with you that "good pictures will always get good theatres," but the cold hard fact is (at the present time) that many a good picture cannot get into many a good house, simply because of the conditions which I have outlined above.

I can show you by the Universal's books that whenever we get one of our pictures into enough of the key houses, our business on that picture is enormous, proving that at the present time the smaller exhibitors are doing their booking according to the key houses and nothing else. This is absolutely regardless of the real quality of the picture itself. In other words, it is possible under the present crazy system to do a bigger business on a mediocre picture than can be done on a fine picture, provided the poorer one gets into the key houses.

Another thing too, the exhibitor, where he controls three or four houses in a town, or in fact, all of the houses in a town, forgets the quality of pictures. You walk in with your picture—he knows that it's absolutely great, that it will get him money, yet at the same time because he has the town tied up, he forgets quality—forgets what the picture will bring him, and offers a ridiculously low price. No matter how big the picture might be—no matter what the drawing power might be, he simply offers what he feels like paying.

I believe from the bottom of my heart, and hundreds of people (including screen critics) agree with me, that the Universal is making, and during the past year has made, by far the best pictures and the biggest pictures on the market. But you would be amazed to know how hard it is to make any real profit on them unless we first get into the exploitation theatres. And the only sure way of getting into some of these houses is by giving the picture away or worse.

Is SOME Lead

It Proves Who Covers the Field

MANY of the finest theatres in the country are showing the worst pictures, because they are controlled by the distributor or producer. This can lead to nothing but disaster in the end, but the end has not come yet. And until it does come, until the "good theatre gets good pictures" it is hard sledding for the man with the good pictures.

Your theory, as I said before, is fine. But you are far ahead of the actual facts and conditions. The day will come when the merit of the picture will be the only factor of importance in booking. But at present, the merit of the picture cuts the least ice.

Look about you. Go through the country. Visit some of the fine theatres right here in New York and you will see some of the rottenest pictures on earth being exploited and shown in the most gorgeous environment and with the best possible music and settings. All this is being done to force poor pictures into success, and meanwhile it is killing general interest in pictures and putting new life into the stage and into vaudeville.

THE producer who makes pictures and also owns a theatre is going to use his own pictures in his own house, and you can't change that fact if you theorize till you're red, white and blue in the face. He may kill his theatre but he will "make" his picture!

Some of America's very finest theatres are on the down grade right this minute because it is almost impossible to get a good picture into them without something more than quality and salesmanship.

And the point of it is simply this: How long will it take you to arouse the exhibitors to the fact that the key house is no longer a key because it doesn't unlock anything? The question for the exhibitor, great and small, to stare in the face right now is the old darky's question, "Is you goin' to be quality or is you ain't?"

Is the small exhibitor going to fall for a poor picture just because the big theatre in his territory GOT PAID FOR RUNNING IT, or is he going to do his own thinking?

Is the big theatre owner going to run his house to please his patrons or is he going to run it to exploit punk pictures and fool his patrons and fool himself?

I don't know the answer. Neither do you. But I'll thank heaven when the day comes that quality, and nothing else, is all that can get a picture into a theatre! When that day comes I'll be doing a bigger gross than I'm doing today and I won't have any close seconds.

Sour grapes? Hell no! Simply some uncomfortable facts!

Sincerely yours,

CARL LAEMMLE,

President Universal Film Mfg. Co.

"Key Cities" from the Exhibitor Angle

DEAR Mr. Johnston: "I have read your articles about first runs, many times in your paper, also that the producer is getting only ten per cent of the money the exhibitor takes in. Here is my experience: I have just played "Heart o' the Hills." This picture only opened in Philadelphia at about the same time I played it. Harrisburg and the other "Key Towns" had not yet played it. The result is that I did about two hundred dollars less with it than I did with "Daddy Long Legs." The latter picture had played all around me in the larger towns and its fame had spread so that when I played it, it was a clean-up. If "Daddy Long Legs" is a 100% picture, "Heart o' the Hills" is a 120% picture in the way of pleasing the masses. I simply made a mistake in playing the picture too new. I gained nothing as the print I had showed three big wide scratches right down through the centre of the picture, caused no doubt by being shown to these Key theatres or circuit managers, on a bum machine. Let them continue to operate the Key theatres, they are the greatest thing I know of for the smaller town theatres. If they play a picture that has no merit we generally find it out, if they play a real picture, we find it out and our patrons in some way find it out at the same time.

PERCENTAGE

¶One man has been a "legit" theatre manager, a picture theatre owner, an exchange man, and is now a producer.

¶He says "Percentage is the Solution."

¶And offers evidence to support his case in the following exclusive article.

By Louis B. Mayer

I READ with considerable interest William A. Johnston's splendid editorial, "Percentage is Coming" and I have followed with increased interest the general discussion which it has aroused in the motion picture industry.

May I express some of the views gained by my own experience as a legitimate theatre manager, a motion picture exhibitor, an exchange man, a distributor, and now as a producer?

I firmly believe that even the exhibitor has come to realize that the motion picture manufacturer is not receiving rentals commensurate with the value of his bigger productions. On the other hand, I myself will admit that the manufacturer is fairly well compensated for what may be termed "average" or "program" pictures. This being the case, it would seem that the manufacturer has little choice except to continue the making of average or program pictures to the exclusion of big specials, and as the exhibitor is clamoring for the specials without being willing to pay a fair price for them, one of the great evils of the industry has crept in—namely, the camouflaging of many average pictures under the name of specials.

Practically every picture advertised in the trade papers today is called by the manufacturer "a special" and I certainly don't blame first-run exhibitors for objecting strongly to paying increased rentals for such productions.

There is, however, a way out and that way is through the policy of percentage—the policy of presenting pictures absolutely on their merits. This policy would enable the exhibitor to secure the average or program picture at the low price he is accustomed to paying, and compel him to pay the increased price that the special deserves. It would encourage the manufacturer to get away from his routine program production and devote his best energy, regardless of time and expense, to the making of really big pictures.

Going back to the time when I was a legitimate theatre manager playing dramatic productions, I would have been astounded to be asked by a producer to pay a flat rental for the use of a production. To any such proposition I would have answered that I had no way of knowing the value of any attraction in my city until I had played it. And until the public had passed judgment and my box office had spoken, no producer had the right to tell me what that production was worth.

The logical result, of course, was that I, as well as every other legitimate theatre manager, played productions only on a sharing basis.

Then I became a motion picture exhibitor. Like all exhibitors, I fought for the lowest possible rental. I did not try to beat down the price on a picture because I wanted to crowd out the producer. I simply did not know how much money that picture would bring into my box office and for my own self-protection I had to "play safe" and get the rental down to the minimum.

Later on, as an exchange man, I found myself on the other side of the fence. My business was to convince the theatre owner that he should pay a high price for pictures I had to sell him, but the exhibitor would always answer with the same arguments that I had used myself—that he could never be sure of how much a picture would draw.

Now, as a producer, I have realized how inequitable the present basis is. It is unfair to the producer because he is not sure to be rewarded for his best efforts and big capital invested. It is unfair to the exhibitor because it robs him of the co-operation which the producer could give him.

If the big pictures are played on a percentage basis, the manufacturer has no trouble in getting his full quota of profits, because the public quickly discovers a really big production and the box office receipts amply pay for it.

Under the rental plan, if Mr. Manufacturer tells Mr. Exhibitor that he has a great picture—worth five times the usual price—Mr. Exhibitor may think "well—I can't take a chance on it at such a high figure."

Thereupon come reductions in rental figures to a point where Mr. Exhibitor knows he takes the minimum risk. He plays the big picture—gets in the tremendous returns and is highly elated when he finds his box office records have been broken. Does he sit down and write out a check to Mr. Manufacturer and send it to him with the comment—"Your picture did so much better than I expected that I am sending you a check for the difference between what you asked in rental and what I paid you."

I have never known of such an instance. Mr. Exhibitor merely chuckles with glee, puts the extra money in the bank and figures out what a good bargain he has made.

Of course from the exhibitor's standpoint, he has benefited on the deal. Looking at it from a short-sighted standpoint, he has. But in this temporary benefit he has injured the whole indutry—because he has taught the manufacturer a lesson—that it does not pay to make really big and expensive pictures for straight rental distribution.

Let us consider the other angle. If pictures are booked from a percentage basis several results would be manifested. First of all, the picture which would pay best to make would be the really big picture which could stand extended runs. The manufacturer would make each production conform to the highest standard of perfection—because it would pay him in the end. Additionally, he would put behind the picture a selling campaign which would have as its basis real showmanship.

I want to draw a comparison between the motion picture industry and the theatrical industry. In the latter, the manufacturer of plays for the legitimate stage does not expend his energy in "selling" his production to the managers of theatres which are going to play them. Instead, all his energies are directed in selling his plays to the public by direct exploitation. The manufacturer of motion pictures, on the other hand, devotes much of his effort to convincing theatres that they should book his pictures—and then leaves them flat to handle their own problem of bringing the picture he sells them favorably before the public.

I believe that the big future of the motion picture industry will develop from the manufacturer's campaign of direct selling to the public.

By a direct selling campaign I do not mean that every motion picture that comes out must be backed up by a national advertising campaign. That would be entirely ruinous. Let us merely apply the principles of showmanship—the principles that have made the great theatrical concerns of today keep to the time-tried policy of putting personality behind publicity. To me "personality behind publicity" means handling the picture in every important centre with an advance agent. Every theatrical show that goes on the road has its advance agent. No touring company is content to leave the publicity for its local showing up to the local theatre owner. They feel that personality must be put behind the selling campaign in each city which the show visits. In the motion picture industry this time-proved policy of theatredom has been abandoned. A producer makes a picture costing many times what the average stage attraction costs. Once he has made it he devotes his energy to telling the theatres how good it is. Then he is willing to simply sell the picture to them at a rental and let them do their own local exploitation. Under existing conditions there is no reason why he should send an advance agent to a city to back up his picture—it would simply mean a loss out of his own pocket. But under the percentage plan, where out of every dollar that comes into the box office the manufacturer would have his percentage, he is not going to leave exploitation to the discretion of the local theatre manager. He is going to send the best kind of an advance agent to the town and get every penny that can be drawn in by that attraction.

I do not wish to infer that I consider the local managements incapable of handling their pictures, but I will say that I do not consider the motion picture owner as a decidedly greater genius than the manager of the average legitimate attraction house. At the legitimate houses if a show were to announce that it was coming without a press agent, the manager would probably promptly cancel the contract. He knows that it is the outside energy of a new man in town

—TWO SIDES

By J. P. Gruwell

• The other man has been a film salesman, an exhange manager, an exhibitor in small towns and big cities.

• This is J. P. Gruwell, of Grand Rapids, Wisconsin.

• He says "Percentage won't work; we need a house-cleaning, not new or old schemes."

• He talks "Cold Turkey." Read this article.

IN view of what I have to say, my communication may be as welcome as a mourner at a marriage feast, but the policy of THE NEWS is unquestionably constructive and as my opinions are representative of a considerable portion of the trade, I feel they will be welcomed no matter how divergent from your own, because the expression of all sincere views helps the entire industry of which you are one of the principal spokesmen. I don't believe percentage booking will cure the ills which afflict the motion picture business.

My credentials? I have been an exhibitor in both large and small cities, although never in a village of less than 5,000 inhabitants. I've "peddled fillums" in 34 states; held a couple of exchange managerships and been connected in one way and another with several producing companies. My varied experiences have all taught me the same lesson. So I don't believe I am simply a sorehead blowing off steam.

Percentage sounds good and although your figures, based no doubt, on big city engagements, are decidedly off when it comes to the country at large, it can be successfully worked with exceptionally big productions and between exchange managers and exhibitors who mutually know, like and trust each other. But in a general way the cost of safeguarding the interests of the exchange is bound to add too much to the overhead of exhibition. And apart from that, it would merely shift the controversy from how much flat rental to how much percentage is fair. The exhibitor would be willing to give 25 per cent and the distributor would ask 75 per cent and the dickering would go merrily on, just as it does now as to rental price.

Consider if you please the case of the exhibitors in the smaller cities and towns who in the aggregate, furnish the larger half of the business to the exchanges. They are not and cannot be in personal touch with the exchanges. All they know is a kaleidescopic procession of salesmen, most of whom call but once at least for any one company. It is up to them to sell their wares, honestly if possible, but to sell them anyway, or lose their jobs within a very few weeks. Consequently they are prone to promise overmuch and inasmuch as there is no provision to leave a copy of any contract with an exhibitor for future comparison with the contract as returned with the approval of the home office there is a great deal of temptation to change the provisions so that they will more nearly meet the requirements of "the boss."

Taught to distrust all film exchanges and their ways, by the pernicious methods first introduced by the General Film Company and carefully perpetuated by a majority of its competitors, these exhibitors ofttimes believe they are being swindled when they aren't and they are so many times victims of misrepresentation that they have come to believe that it is no crime to rob a film exchange in any way possible if they can get away with it. Called "hicks" and "rubes" by astute (?) willy-boys from Gotham's slop-over, who are wished onto branch offices by home-office desk warmers, these "small time" exhibitors are usually in a state of bitter revolt, ready to take every possible advantage; justifying themselves with the belief that the exchanges are always ready to take every possible advantage of them. Percentage bookings will not cure this spirit of revolt and it must be removed if we are to advance.

Let me challenge anyone successfully to dispute the statement that the average exchange manager is a mere office boy under the absolute thumb of the home office; so hedged about by red tape and so harassed by continual nagging from salesmanagers who know little or nothing about selling conditions in the various territories, that in order to hold his job he must sacrifice all hope of bettering the relations between his office and his customers by mapping out and patiently maintaining a policy of square toed fairness until such time as a profitable business based on mutual confidence can be built up; but must make a breathless effort each week to squeeze by hook or crook every possible penny, honest or otherwise, out of his territory, so that his Saturday report may not bring a scathing rebuke from New York or a smiling successor about the following Wednesday to take his place.

We are solemnly told by the wise ones that it is not fair to compare the distribution of films with an ordinary wholesale business because we are renting instead of buying films. True, but what the exchanges were intended to do and what they should do, if the industry is to advance, is to provide and sell service to the exhibitor. Then instead of a constant clash of interest between exchange and customer, there would come about a spirit of mutual friendliness and co-operation such as now exists between almost any first class wholesale house and its trusted customers. Then the exchange manager, having been employed because of his fitness instead of because he was a relative or special friend of the boss or of the boss's friends or immediate retainers; and bonded as is any other holder of a responsible position, would be given a broad general sales policy and told to go to it. The measure of his success or failure would be in years rather than in weeks and the efforts of his salesmanager would be confined to matters of policy rather than the relations of the branch with its individual customers. Then it would be possible for an exchange manager to return real money to an exhibitor who had made an overpayment and to give credit for errors made by members of his office force if in his judgment, such credits were justified.

Office bookkeeping, by the way, is a fertile source of controversy. Some of the accounting systems inflicted on branch offices by General Auditors are devised for the convenience of the Home Office rather than the business of the branch and frequently just as the poor bookkeeper has mastered the system, there is a shake-up in New York and another equally as intricate but entirely different system is substituted; or a new branch manager brings with him a new bookkeeper to mix things up. Not long ago, in a film exchange managed by a friend, I tried my utmost to prove or disprove the contention of a customer concerning an overpayment and after I had worked faithfully for a day and a half I was not at all sure then that I knew anything about the mess. Deposits, for example, usually go immediately to the Home Office and no matter what the merits of the case may be, it is easier for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven than it is to recover any of these deposits. That the producing companies are doing business on these deposits is a charge never disproven and recently admitted in very high quarters. No matter how anxious the individual branch manager may be to adjust a difference with an exhibitor any adjustment he may make beyond an occasional "gratis" picture makes him a deal of trouble answering home office questions and too many such adjustments are bound to cost him his position.

I well remember when the president of the first organization I sold serials for, issued instructions to exchange book-keepers to charge a little extra to all customers' accounts each week so that the overpayments from careless exhibitors would help to make up for the losses incurred from carelessness in serving dishonest ones. It was in that office that a splendid customer paid twice for one episode of the serial we were handling at the time. Our bookkeeper came to me and asked me what to do. It happened that the double payment was not discovered until after the final chapter had been used. I instructed him to return the money. However, as he was working for the exchange manager, he went to him and told him of my instructions. "Return the money?" shouted the exchange manager in horror. "Give real money back?" he gasped. "I should say not. Charge it to advertising and balance the account." Now this was not a fly-by-night states rights concern, but one of the big service companies. General Film Co. went broke leaving many exhibitors in the lurch so far as depositors are concerned, I being one of them. So it has been all through the history of the business.

When this dog eat dog, devil take the hindmost policy of chasing the immediate

Can Comission Prices Vary?

Or is a Standard Scale the Best Exhibitor Policy?—An Interesting Discussion of This and Other Exhibitor Problems

By Thomas D. Soriero

IT is my belief that the answer to the question of "What is Wrong with Films Today?" rests in a large measure with the manufacturer. Whatever is weak or cheap in the pictures can be laid directly to the maker. Yet I agree with recent charges made by the General Manager of one of the large exclusive producing companies, that methods of exhibiting films are becoming slipshod. I have noticed this particularly since a tour of some of the larger moving picture theatres of the country.

With such a multiplicity of films—poor, mediocre and good—an exhibitor is confronted with the serious problem of admission charges. Does it pay to maintain a vacillating and gymnastic price list, computed by the so-called advertising and publicity stunts of the house which offers one of the many features now parading before the exhibitors? In other words, some of these feature pictures are feature pictures in ink only, which means that their claim to genuine entertainment above all other pictures is restricted solely to the publicity energy of the men who make and sponsor them. Yet on the other hand we have many so-called mediocre pictures which by their charm and direct appeal to the public (and truly they do possess many good qualities oftentimes), gain instant approval and prove greater box office attractions than the so-called well-advertised feature costing a high rental and withal giving less service than the mediocre picture.

I have the greatest respect for the producer. I think he is striving with all his power to achieve better pictures, cleaner pictures, and hopes to place the art of the films on a par with the stage. There can be no doubt of his sincerity, as proved by many of his efforts, particularly in the past year. Yet in spite of this, can we not trace this policy of counter-balancing really good pictures with heavy and sometimes exaggerated advertising to many of the producers? Of course, as a business proposition it is difficult to blame them for trying to save as much money as possible on mediocre pictures, particularly where a wide publicity has been given the establishment of a standard and high-grade brand of film.

ADMISSION charges are of course the mainspring of any theatre. Upon them depends the success or failure of the playhouse. The policy of admission prices must be carefully watched. As General Manager of a theatre corporation which has nearly a dozen moving picture theatres in New England, I know this to be true. It has been proved to me time and time again, to my bitter experience sometimes, that the instant a house manager changes his admission charge and advances his prices with the introduction of a new and perhaps widely advertised picture, he loses at once the approval of his patrons and in a majority of instances their patronage. This does not apply only in New England. I have talked with managers in many parts of the United States, visited their playhouses, and they have told me that the same conditions apply in their districts, whether it is north or south, east or west.

Mr. Hiram Abrams, General Manager of the United Artists Corporation and without a doubt one of the most able film men in the United States today, striving as he is to establish the motion picture art on a new plane, says in a recent issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

". . . A mistake is made in showing all three kinds of film (cheap, medium, good) on a flat basis of admission prices to the public, irrespective of the quality of the film that we are showing. In other words, this week a theatre shows a picture that costs hundreds of thousands of dollars to produce and say $1,000 to rent, and the audiences are satisfied. Next week the same theatre shows a film that cost perhaps $25,000 or $30,000 to produce and maybe $200 to rent, yet the admission prices for the cheaper film are just the same as the admission prices for the big film."

The ill-will which the public feel towards the theatre because the house manager raised his prices when a so-called feature picture was exhibited is not counter-balanced by their resentment (which does not often occur in this instance) at the same price for the well advertised picture as for the picture that is not so well advertised but oftentimes better liked. Sometimes the commercial success of a film rests upon the amount of advertising it has been given. This does not make it a good film. To proceed on the theory that a star however clever he may be in one picture and adapted to that particular picture and however large the price paid for the use of the rights of the play as a vehicle for the star, is not consistent with the public's appreciation of moving pictures today, as I observe and understand my public. In Mr. Abrams' article he sets forth some very able suggestions and possible remedies; but if he knew how hard it is (and I speak for New England in particular) for me to raise my price and then drop it again, just because I have to pay less money for a picture, he might qualify his plan.

AT my Lowell, Mass., theatre I am now giving my patrons the best possible pictures obtainable, many from Mr. Abrams' own corporation. And while not denying their worth as box office attractions, it would prove disastrous to my house to reduce the price of admission the week subsequent to a projection of his pictures, even though my other features did not cost me as much money, because the public will not reconcile itself to paying one price one week and a higher or a lower price the next week.

The New England mind resents most forcibly any such panicky policy. They hate to be diverted from an established course of conduct, and when they come to their favorite playhouse and see the price of admission raised, merely because a widely advertised picture is being shown, they stamp off in disgust and perhaps another patron is lost to the theatre. I know this condition exists here, because I have tried to follow out, several years ago, this plan but it proved a failure.

Again I submit that it is easier to raise the price of admission and keep it there than to jockey it back and forth, creating unrest among your theatre public and ending in dissatisfaction all around. This fact I know to be true, having tried it in Lowell. I was determined to get the best pictures possible, and I paid the biggest prices also. In view of this it necessitated an increase in my theatre admission. It is true that often I was unable to find for the next week a picture that proved as great an attraction as the one the previous week, yet I dared not lower the price of admission despite the fact, as Mr. Abrams suggests, that the cost of rental was about one-half. I would gladly have done so if I thought the policy was feasible and that it would create good feeling among my public and cause me no loss of patronage. Results in the past have proved this policy a failure, therefore I rejected it. I did not lower my price, yet the public is good natured and without trying to impose on them I am sure they appreciated the fact that it is difficult to get pictures of uniform quality every week.

Here another element enters into this controversy of what is wrong with the pictures today. Even in different sections of New England, I find that what constitutes an appreciation of pictures is different in each locality. In other words, what Maine may applaud Connecticut may reject.

Therefore it presents a perpetual problem to the house manager in studying the wants of his patrons. What may prove a sensation in the south may grow frigid under the cold New England eye. It is not the cost of a picture; it isn't the star's name; it isn't the careful technical achievements involved in the structure of the picture that pleases New England—it is that mysterious something bound up in the conditions and environment under which each locale exists, the psychology of its education, that results either temperamentally or bluntly in an appreciation of the ultimate amusement value in a film.

"Don't Be Stampeded!"

A Scorching Approval of William A. Johnston's Editorial "Don't Be Buffaloed"— A Word to Exhibitors

By Sydney S. Cohen

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I HAVE just read your excellent article "Don't be Buffaloed." Let me congratulate you on the terse but forceful way in which you have summed up a much needed admonition to the exhibitors of the country.

Certain interests are responsible for the spreading of subtle propaganda which seeks to discourage the exhibitor by instilling in him a fear of "monopolistic control." There is such a propaganda and it has its own organ. In my opinion this is the time for the motion picture exhibitors of the United States to keep both feet solidly on the ground and not to permit themselves to be stampeded.

Now as never before the opportunity is presented to the exhibitor of asserting his showmanship and independence. There are many facts and considerations which should encourage us to hold on. Take for instance the millions of new converts to the motion picture screen made during the recent war by the patriotic agitation which was conducted in the motion picture theatres on behalf of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and all other Allied war activities, and I venture to say that twenty million new people were brought to the motion picture theatres because these theatres were the centres of this patriotic work and a very large percentage of them have become permanent patrons.

ANOTHER very encouraging sign is the attitude of the great directors of motion pictures who have recently issued a splendid declaration of independence. There is not a single 100 per cent exhibitor in the country who does not applaud these directors for having refused to sell themselves to "Monopoly." Indeed it has always seemed to me that there is a very strong community of interest between the director and the exhibitor. Both their interests and investments are either visible or tangible. The director is the man who creates entertainment values without which the screen could not exist for a week. It is the genius of the director that brings the crowd to the theatre. On the other hand the exhibitor is the owner of the theatre in which the director's creations are shown to the public. So far both of us have paid extravagant tribute to the middleman.

When you say that we have not sounded the possibilities of the motion picture you restate a fact of which we are apt to lose sight. While a few scores of exhibitors are devoting themselves to exploiting the picture and extracting from it every possible value, the art of presentation has not as many followers and students as it ought to have. With the proper aids in presentation and advertising, the life of even the average picture and its usefulness to the exhibitor as a box office attraction can be materially prolonged.

THE immediate need of the hour is a more compact and efficient exhibitors' organization. Upon that foundation it will be safe to build. United action will enable us to carry out many reforms which at this hour are urgently needed not only for the benefit of the exhibitor but for the benefit of the screen as a means of popular entertainment. The exhibitors have it within their power to nip in the bud any movement for monopolistic control in any branch of the Industry. You are quite right in saying that all previous attempts to impose the control of an individual or a clique upon this Industry have ended disastrously. The last attempt of this nature was made some years ago at a time when the motion picture was little more than a novelty and when the fear of patent litigation proved a powerful weapon in the hands of the monopoly. In spite of these extraordinary advantages, their control was short-lived and has ended in a bankruptcy court.

I earnestly hope that we shall always have such fearless and independent exponents of journalism as you have proven yourself to be in sounding such a powerful note of warning to the men who form the backbone of this Industry.

Sincerely yours,

SYDNEY S. COHEN, President.

"Does it Pay to Give Credit?" : :

Dear Mr. Johnston:

A director, a very able artist and producer, who has just released a picture that has produced a sensation, favors me with a letter in which, after reciting at length some of the difficulties he encountered in making this film, he asks me whether I do not think that he should be given entire credit for the film.

It gave me pleasure to reply to that man that I think he is entitled to all the credit it is possible for him to get, not only as a matter of downright justice, but as an incentive for him to produce more pictures that will be as worthy as his recent one.

He further asks whether or not his name should not appear in as large type as the title of the picture. On consideration, and although we did not make it thus, we would say "yes," because there is no question that it was the director that made the picture and gave it the drawing power it possessed, not the title. But this brings up another question. Is it advisable for a manager to play up an individual's name to any great extent? Is he working to his own interest to do so? Is he stabilizing his business? Is he building on rock or on sand?

COVERING THE FIELD

FROM H. Raczynski, Quo Vadis theatre, Detroit: "Your big size News is the best thing in the film industry. Yet some people say that there's nothing new under the sun. Wishing you success with MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

And L. H. Chandler, New Elite theatre, Bethany, Mo.: "I have previously been a salesman for Pathe out of Kansas City, and I know the value of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to an exhibitor. It is THE trade paper of the trade papers."

LAST year we played up the name of a certain director. He made several big pictures. We played his name up so big in connection with them that the pictures ceased to draw because of their title, or cast, but because of him. We could have played each individual picture on its own merits and its particular cast and had a profitable business. But, instead, we pyramided this man's popularity, picture by picture, by sacrificing all else to advertise him. We are not alone in this respect, but it was done all over the United States. Last year the exhibitors of the United States helped make this man. His name before was big, but not a box office asset. Now it is.

The result has been that his pictures this year are 500 per cent higher, and no better than they were last year. The exhibitors helped make him and are paying the bills. In billing one individual are you creating a Frankenstein that will eventually devour you?

There is no doubt that this man should get more money for his pictures, just the same as any conscientious worker should get more for his labor as he improves his skill and ability, but is there any excuse for such a tremendous hike?

Very sincerely yours,

STANLEY CHAMBERS.

News of the Week

THIS AND THAT

The recently elected directors of the United Picture Theatres of America have pledged themselves to sell $600,000 worth of the preferred stock of the United Picture Productions Corporation. This was one of the most gratifying results of the meetings recently held in New York City.

William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, is soon to build what will, it is claimed, be the largest theatre in Brooklyn, representing an expenditure of more than $1,000,000. This announcement was made Dec. 22 by Mr. Fox through A. S. Kempner, real estate representative of the Fox Theatrical Enterprises.

Mr. Fox has just purchased a plot of ground on the East Side of Flatbush avenue between Tilden avenue and Beverly Road, at the corner of Duryea Place. This is in one of the finest residential parts of the Flatbush District. On the site he will erect a handsome playhouse with a seating capacity of 3,500.

S. J. Rollo director of sales and exchanges for Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation prior to the sale of the company's exchanges, has been elected a director and secretary of the Clark Cornelius Corporation.

Work will be begun this week on the new theatre that B. S. Moss is building to cover the entire block bounded by Webster, Tremont and Carter avenues and 174th street. The playhouse will have a seating capacity of 3,500 and will be the largest in the Bronx. The cost is estimated at $1,000,000.

With the announcement that motion picture exhibitors will receive a fixed sum for the exhibition of each Universal industrial and educational picture, formerly issued to them free of charge, comes word from the Universal studios at Fort Lee, New Jersey, and Universal City, California, that only actors and actresses of the first rank known the country over for their screen drawing powers will have the lead parts in such Universal pictures.

Arrangements have been completed by A. A. Spitz the Providence, R. I., theatre man, and Henry McMahon of Arctic, for the erection of a modern theatre in the latter place for the showing of moving pictures. A Moller organ will be installed.

It has been announced in Detroit that John H. Kunsky, head of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, Inc., and owner of the First National franchise in Michigan, has subscribed nearly half a million dollars in the newly organized Associated First National Theatres, Inc.

Simplex Machine in Big Sale

Mundusfilm Company of Paris Buys Million Dollars Worth of Machines

It is reported that a contract has been negotiated between Mme. Schuepbach of the Mundusfilm Company and E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, involving the purchase of a million dollars worth of Simplex projectors which are made by the Precision Machine Company.

The sole distributors of the Simplex Projector in Continental Europe for the past several years have been the Mundusfilm Company of Paris. J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., have handled Simplex in Great Britain; and in the Scandinavian countries J. L. Nerlien, Akt., have handled this popular projector exclusively.

Immediately following the signing of the Armistice, representatives of various enterprises in the many European countries endeavored to obtain Simplex franchises for their respective countries, but in each instance they were asked to await the termination of the Mundusfilm Company's contract.

Several weeks ago, Mme. Schuepbach arrived in New York and made her official headquarters in the Godfrey Building. It is also stated that Madame Schuepbach acquired the continental European rights to a large number of film productions, including the Nazimova Screen Classics, Louis Joseph Vance features, Jack London pictures and Metro productions.

Mme. Schuepbach was banqueted by leading film executives during her stay in New York, and on Thursday night before sailing for Europe a dinner was given in her honor by Richard Rowland of the Metro Company at which it is stated many leaders in the film industry were present. Mme. Schuepbach sailed for Europe on Saturday noon on the French liner "Rochambeau."

Censor-Board Plan Hits Snag

It is Likely that Grand Rapids' Ordinance Will be Greatly Modified

It is reported that the city commission of Grand Rapids, Mich., is considering an ordinance drafted by the city attorney at the instance of ministers and others, but the section providing for a board of censors will probably go by the board before the ordinance is adopted.

It is said that the ordinance, censor board and all, was apparently headed for passage when it struck a snag. This snag, it is stated, proved to be the statement of the mayor of New York City, given when he vetoed a similar ordinance for that city; and it was suggested by City Attorney Ganson Taggart that the commission would better go slow, as there was a likelihood that if the ordinance were passed, it would be in conflict with that section of the federal constitution regarding the freedom of the press, especially as the ordinance contained a section to restrict the publication of certain pictures and forms of advertising.

The statement of the New York executive was quoted to the city commission, being in effect that an ordinance as proposed could not hold good, in that it restricted the freedom of the press and that a censorship before the production of a picture or other theatrical production, previous to its production, as proposed in the ordinance, would not hold.

"There probably will be an ordinance," Commissioner Daniel Kelly is reported to have said, "but I believe the police should have the power to enforce the ordinance, rather than that the matter should be left to a board of censors. I am of the opinion that there should be a penalty for the exploitation of indecency, either on the screen or on the stage, and I think a good ordinance will be just as much of a preventative of immoral exhibitions as a board of censors."

Elaborate Steps Taken to Reduce Fire Risk

It is said that the culmination of a comprehensive plan on the part of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for lowering fire hazards through erection of specially built film exchange buildings in important exchange centers throughout the country has about been reached. According to reports during the past week, negotiations have been practically closed by representatives of the National Association for buildings approximately $3,000,000 in value. It has been only a few days since the roof was placed on the first film structure to be finally completed under the provisions of the Association's plan—the $500,000 structure erected in Kansas City.

that can put over publicity which is beyond the power of any local man. If pictures were played in the same way it would mean that the local publicity in the larger cities would have the stimulus of a new press agent coming into town with each attraction—it would take away from the "staleness" observable in the handling of many picture theatres, and it would give the really live picture theatre owner—and there are lots of them—a chance to co-operate with an equally live man, who is thoroughly familiar with his attraction, representing the manufacturer.

In my present release, "In Old Kentucky," I am trying out the percentage booking method for myself. I put so much money, time and energy into the making of this picture that I could not possibly be compensated for it by rentals, however high. I want to feel that out of every admission ticket for "In Old Kentucky" I am getting a part—I want to share with the exhibitor in the increased profits which this picture will bring. Therefore, I have laid out a definite policy—"Percentage only, Indefinite Runs." To support this policy I am sending the highest type advance man to cover each large city in exploiting the picture. I am sending new blood into each territory—men enthused with their product, whose one idea is to let the public know what a big picture we have. In a few weeks I will be ready to tell your readers how much more money I received from the picture than would have been possible under a straight rental basis; and at the same time I will show how much more profit the exhibitor made out of the same picture under the percentage plan and aided in his exploitation, than he would have made if "In Old Kentucky" had been handled in a routine, straight rental manner.

Tendency to Longer Runs Is Growing

Exchange Managers of First National Exhibitors' Circuit Have Compiled Instructive Data from Widely Scattered Points in U. S. and Canada

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY more theatres are playing productions for week-stands this year than in 1918; this year five hundred and thirty more theatres are changing programs twice a week than the number last year and nearly seventy per cent of the daily-change theatres have adopted the two-day engagement plan within the last twelve months, according to a summary just completed by First National Exhibitors' Circuits Exchange managers in all parts of the United States and Canada.

Probably the most significant fact arising from the completion of this index to exhibitor tendency is the fact that there is a general inclination on the part of showmen for longer runs. Those who last year showed feature productions for a week are now lengthening the runs into ten days and more; exhibitors who last year booked attractions for three and four days are extending the runs to week-stand engagements.

One-Day Stands on Wane

Perhaps the most startling and radical departure from exhibitor attitude of the last year is—the nation-wide tendency to eschew the daily change. On an average, seventy per cent. of the exhibitors handling First National attractions, and who advocated single-day runs last year, have increased their engagements to two days and sometimes as much as three days.

The situation is not confined to one prosperous locality nor attendant upon the work of several industrious exchange managers. It is as plainly evident in Toronto, Canada, as in Forney, Texas; as true in California, as in the New England states, according to the reports.

A concensus of opinion from explanations given by the various exchange managers indicates that exhibitors have learned by costly experience that a little added exploitation will result in bringing crowds for a two days' showing, and that the print which would in the event of a one-day stand spend the following day in transportation can in many cases be obtained at a smaller proportionate price for the two days.

An illustration of the remarkable increase in the length of runs that has been brought about during the past year is shown by figures compiled by Sam Edwards, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange in San Francisco. Last year there were twenty-five fewer theatres in Mr. Edwards' territory that played attractions for a full week than at the present time. There were forty more theatres playing attractions at the two-a-week rate, the majority playing three and four different pictures each week. And sixty per cent. of the theatres which last year were practising the daily-change system have this year dropped the system in favor of the longer runs.

Marshall Neilan

In the territory served by the First National Exchange of Milwaukee, H. J. Fitzgerald, manager, has authorized the statement that in his territory there are approximately seven theatres running special productions seven days, "that their theatres are not big enough whereas a year ago there were but two; there are five theatres running special productions five days against a maximum limit of three days a year ago; there are fifty theatres running attractions three days against a two-day maximum of a year ago and about one hundred theatres using attractions for two days, whereas the limit last year was a one-day engagement.

Like reports which compare favorably to the results quoted in the foregoing are announced by the various First National Exchanges at Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Chicago; Dallas, Tex.; Denver; Detroit; Indianapolis; Los Angeles; Louisville, Ky.; New Orleans; Omaha, Neb.; Ottawa, Canada; Philadelphia; Pittsburg; Richmond, Va.; St. Louis; Salt Lake City; Toronto, Canada, and Minneapolis.

Of interest to exhibitors is the conclusion drawn by C. E. Holah, manager of the First National Exchange at Omaha, Neb. According to Mr. Holah, the exhibitor in many instances does not lengthen his runs merely to take a chance on winning a larger crowd by exploitation. "Exhibitors are finding out," Mr. Holah states,

A MESSAGE TO EXHIBITORS

THE following telegraphic message to the exhibitors through the medium of the trade press of the country, which, besides carrying a warning gives a hint of the plans of the newly formed Producers' Association, is presented in full as received:

"We are informed that there are many exhibitors throughout the United States who are considering the sale of their theatres on account of being intimidated with the information that they will not be able to get sufficient products in the future in order to make their investment in their theatres safe.

"For your information we wish to say that as soon as our present contract has expired, which will be this coming summer, our entire combined products of personal productions and stars will be available to every exhibitor on an independent basis and on terms that will be fair and equitable to both producer and exhibitor alike.

"Therefore we feel that this information would be an assurance to you and all your brother exhibitors that you need not make any hasty move that will be detrimental to your future welfare as well as to the entire industry. The spirit of independent exhibitors and ourselves is common ground and against the domination of all usurping influences.

"We are sincerely giving you this information straight from the shoulder, so we ask you to weigh the above carefully and take no stock in any propaganda to the contrary, and we will appreciate your conveying this information to all your brother exhibitors."

Full Newspaper Co-operation

Chicago American Goes to Far Limits to Aid Advertisers in "Movie-Week"

NEWSPAPER co-operation that goes the limit in behalf of its theatre advertisers—and then goes just a little further is exemplified in the Chicago-American's Fourth Annual "Go-to-Movie-Week Campaign.

Frederick W. McQuigg, manager of the Amusement Department of the Chicago Evening American, and whose comments and criticisms of pictures and picture players are written under the name of "Bob Reel," has in the following article outlined the effort expended and the purpose behind his paper's campaign.

A story a day to more than a million and a half readers. That's the big punch behind Chicago's Fourth Annual Go-To-Movie-Week, Christmas to New Year. The slogan of the campaign is "Just for Fun."

Film companies and exhibitors alike strive for the high point of entertainment during the holidays. At this time the fans are assured even more for their money than at any other season. The public is so busy with Christmas plans that it stands in need of a little direction pointing the way to utilize the fifth largest industry to advantage. This, of course, has to be done in a way that is unusual. That is where the big newspaper functions.

The newspaper which shows readers how to have fun is remembered in a pleasant way. That means boosters for the newspaper and larger circulation.

The policy behind the Motion Picture Department of the Chicago Evening American, as stated several years ago, includes the declaration that Film Companies, Exhibitors, the Big Newspaper and the public form the chain which means continued greater success of the industry.

Backed by this belief the Evening American suggested a Go-To-Movie-Week to its readers. The idea "caught on" and has been repeated with increasing success each holiday season.

Every day since December 5, the Evening American has printed a Go-To-Movie-Week story. Slides and stickers have ben distributed to the leading theatres of the city. Wagon posters announce the event. Arrangements are made with the theatres so that every orphan in the city is invited to be a guest at a motion picture show between Christmas and New Year.

It is a well known fact that there is a slump in theatre business during the days preceding Christmas. The Go-To-Movie-Week campaign has a tendency to check this. At the same time it serves the readers a good turn by having them maintain their average supply of fun.

There is built up a high point of interest in motion pictures which is of larger value than usual for the film companies and theatres to announce new plans.

This year every big newspaper is facing the problem of white paper. After the readers are taken care of with space devoted to the news of the day, there is a limited amount of space for the advertisers. For that reason the film companies and theatres have not been approched with the fact that Go-To-Movie-Week offers an especially good buy in the newspaper fostering the feature.

Believing, however, that Go-To-Movie-Week, Just For Fun, is now established as a feature which the more than a million and a half readers of the Evening American enjoy, the Motion Picture Department has "carried on" with the campaign for the fourth time.

Rowland Urges Foreign Concessions

American Producer Must Meet Foreign Distributor Half Way While Exchange Rate Is Unequal He Says, or Else He Will Eliminate All Chances of Future Business

THAT American producers must make concessions to foreign distributors because of the present disparity in money exchange, and that the entry of so-called "big business" into the motion picture industry is an inevitable step which need cause no alarm, especially to the independent exhibitor, is the gist of a statement by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Rowland is in a position to speak with authority on the foreign situation and the opportunities for American picture producers that are open in the foreign field. Several weeks ago he returned from a survey of two months in Europe, where he interviewed prominent English, French and Italian manufacturers and distributors of pictures in great number.

Splendid Chance

"There is a splendid chance abroad for the American producer," says the Metro president's statement, "providing that he adopt the wise policy of 'live and let live.' In the first place, the foreign manufacturer cannot supply the present demand for cinema entertainment. European makers of pictures are hopelessly behind in their output because of the disturbed industrial conditions following upon the termination of the war.

"The American manufacturer will have to be fair. He will have to give the European distributor certain concessions in order to interest him in the American product. Obviously he will not handle it if the terms imposed by American manufacturers are too harsh. That is where the disparity in exchange figures.

"The American producer who insists on the American dollar valuation in his dealings with the foreign distributor is going to eliminate himself, because the Englishman or the Frenchman or the Italian will 'chuck the whole business'; he will refuse to purchase American films, and will do his best to eke out the scanty home product. This policy, it seems to Metro, is short-sighted on the part of the American manufacturer.

"Our producers should strive to strike a mean between the extremes of loss and exorbitant profit. They should arrive at a figure that would take into account the present deflation of European currency; a figure mutually agreed upon."

As to the inevitable entrance into the motion picture industry of "big business," variously characterized as "Wall Street" and "large financial interests," the Metro president states that Metro had foreseen this eventually at least two years ago and has been shaping its policies to meet the conditions that would arise.

"Instead of any feeling of pessimism, however," Mr. Rowland declares, "Metro is highly optimistic and sees nothing to fear, either on the part of the independent producer or the independent exhibitor.

DOROTHY DALTON WITH F. P.-LASKY

DOROTHY DALTON, for a long time one of the leading Thomas H. Ince stars, has severed her connections with that producer and has signed a long-time contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to be starred exclusively in Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

This announcement was made yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production. Under Miss Dalton's contract with Mr. Ince she still had a number of pictures to make; but the remainder of her Ince contract also has been taken over by Famous Players-Lasky, so that Miss Dalton went under Paramount-Artcraft management yesterday. In fact she began drawing salary from Famous Players-Lasky as soon as her signature was affixed to the contract.

It also was announced that Miss Dalton's first starring vehicle for Paramount-Artcraft will be Sir James M. Barrie's "Half An Hour."

Lowell Cash Leaves "U" for Selznick

M. Lowell Cash, a genuine Hoosier, who invaded the Metropolis from Indianapolis some months past, as a member of the Universal publicity staff, has resigned his position to accept a similar berth with Selznick Pictures.

Before coming to New York Mr. Cash was photoplay editor of the Indianapolis News. While with Universal he handled exploitation, specializing in copy for the trade papers. In his new position he will work under Lee Kugel and assist in launching some new exploitation plans which are being prepared, designed especially to aid newspapers and exhibitors who handle pictures distributed through the Select, Selznick and Republic exchanges.

Irwin Out of Famous-Lasky

Vice President Resigns for Second Time in Year—Has Had Notable Career

WALTER W. IRWIN announced this week that he had resigned as vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In a statement December 23rd to the trade press, Mr. Irwin said, "This is the second time I have resigned as vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first occasion was last July, but by insistence and urging I was persuaded to withdraw it. This time, however, my resignation stands."

When questioned regarding his future activities, he said that he had just returned from a three weeks' visit to the Coast and expected at an early date to make a definite and interesting announcement to the trade.

Mr. Irwin's career in the Motion Picture Industry has been most progressive and active. It was in May of 1915 that he stepped out of the active practice of the law and incorporated the Vitagraph - Lubin - Selig - Essanay Inc., to handle the feature product of the four manufacturers, of which company he was the general manager and treasurer. At once he introduced into the industry the open booking policy, so extensively employed today, under which were sold the pictures of each producer strictly according to their drawing power or box office value. However, in September of 1917, when the Vitagraph Company purchased the interests in the sales organization of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay Companies, Mr. Irwin, with but one brand of product to handle, introduced what was known as the Rotary Star System and which was thereafter followed by other companies under the designation of the star series system.

Likewise he introduced into the industry what was said to have been the first profit sharing and bonus systems by which the employes shared in a definite percentage of the profits, and each branch organization also received a percentage of the gross proceeds over and above a given quota assigned to it.

Mr. Irwin is credited with founding the Motion Picture Board of Trade in 1915, and the present National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is and has been the chairman of the executive committee since its formation.

Two Sides

dollar without any thought of tomorrow is abandoned for a regular business policy of making a sincere and consistent effort to give a real service to the customer for money received.

When the conscientious and constructive exchange manager rather than the skillful thrower of bull will be encouraged and upheld by his home office in his effort to establish and maintain a sympathetic relation with his customers; when scrupulous care is taken to account properly for every cent received and when, as must inevitably happen in every exchange, an error is made and an overpayment received, the exhibitor is given the privilege of his money back if he wants it.

When exchange managers, bookers and salesmen will learn a little about their stock in trade and intelligently try to select subjects suited to localities and occasions and are permitted to use common sense in establishing the rental prices for the various communities in their territory.

Then in my humble opinion, it will not be necessary to quarrel about whether the companies are to be paid on a flat rental system or on a percentage basis, because having an eye for the future, it will be the effort of the exchange man to work with and not against his customer and nurse him along until he will be able and willing to pay all the traffic will bear for the worthy pictures handled by the exchange.

And until such time, there is no method on earth which will work automatically to cure the abuses which the trade is heir to by reason of the practices which have cursed it from its very inception.

Big Body Backs Up Selznick's Plan

Miami Valley Exhibitors' League Whole Heartedly Casts Lot with National Picture Theatres, Inc.; Crandall a Vice-President; What Is Coming EXPRESSING their confidence in the precepts behind the National Picture Theatres, Inc., proposition, fathered by Louis Selznick, the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, known as one of the largest and most influential organizations of its kind in the country, has cast its lot with National Picture Theatres.

Important as the support and affiliation of the League is, which fact Louis J. Selznick verified, it was learned on good authority that within the next few weeks an announcement would be made which would, through its importance and scope of the line-up in back of National Theatres, prove a surprise to even the most optimistic supporters of the proposition.

At the same time Mr. Selznick announced that Harry M. Crandall, the big Washington exhibitor, had been named one of the vice-presidents of National Picture Theatres, Inc.

Heavy Guns in Support

"The Miami Valley organization saw the value of our proposition. Many others, whom I cannot at the moment name, have seen it. Why? Because it is a proposition that is by, for and of the exhibitor. Whoever says to himself the exhibitor is blind and cannot see what is best for him, does not known what he is talking about."

Such was Mr. Selznick's comment on the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League coming into line. From other sources which are "in the know" it was learned that within a short time a number of names will be announced as vice-presidents of National Theatres and as members of the Exhibitor Board, the prominence of which will create something of a furore in the industry, and that organizations will be lined up which will assure National Theatres of support throughout the country second to none.

A committee from the Miami Valley League composed of John Seifert, president; A. F. Kinsler, secretary, and Peter Zender, one of the most active members of the League, came to New York for the purpose of discovering flaws, irregularities or imperfections in the proposition as outlined by Selznick.

They spent four days investigating this proposition from all angles, and were in close consultation with the officials of the New York State Exhibitors' League at all times. The officials of the New York League were a unit with the Miami Valley Exhibitors in approving the proposition as the one way to protect the independent exhibitor.

Returning to Dayton the committee called a special meeting of their body, and in their report unanimously indorsed and recommended the National Picture Theatres, Inc.

John Siefert, President of Miami Valley Exhibitors' League

Mr. John Seifert, president of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, said when interviewed: "I am for the National Picture Theatres, Inc., tooth and nail. To me it represents the best possible means of combatting the octupus that is threatening to strangle the exhibitor and put out of business the thousands of hard-working men who have made it possible for the producer to prosper and grow fat.

"I don't give a whoop what the other fellow makes out of the proposition if it insures me adequate profit and continued existence, and this is exactly what National Picture Theatres, Inc., does do.

"With its Exhibitor Board of twenty-six members chosen from the field of exhibitors and its freedom from the enormous wasteful expenses usually associated with the producing game, the exhibitor at last has a chance to really decide what kind of a picture he will show and when."

Film Board Shows Its Value

Kansas City Body by Publicity Campaign Forces Re-opening of Theatres

A TIMELY demonstration of the value of local Film Boards of Trade and Motion Picture Exhibitors' organizations has just been given in Kansas City, where the co-operative work of the showmen resulted in opening local amusement houses and the revoking of an opinion by the Kansas City Fuel Administration.

In the face of the serious coal-shortage which was especially pronounced in Kansas City, the fuel administration ordered the closing of all schools and theatres. For several days the theatres remained closed, while petitions of the motion picture exhibitors beseeching a re-opening were refused point blank.

The film men carried their point when, under the leadership of L. D. Balsly, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of Kansas City, the Kansas City Film Board of Trade, commenced a plan of newspaper advertising intended to arouse public opinion. Walter F. Lamkin, an attorney and formerly fuel administrator of Kansas City, was employed to present the side of the motion picture exhibitors.

Advertisements in each Kansas City daily, headed, "Why Should the Motion Picture Theatres Carry the Largest Burden?" set forth the advantage of keeping the motion picture theatres in operation. Among the reasons why the theatres should run, according to the advertisement, were the facts that a conservation of fuel brought about by the gathering of thousands of persons in a few places instead of dividing them in family groups where individual fires would be burned, would naturally be effected and the fact that other non-essental commercial industries were allowed to operate and that the discrimination was unfair.

The persistent efforts of the board of trade led to the granting of a re-opening privilege during Sunday.

Philadelphia Exchange Men Form Body

Following a conference of the managers of Philadelphia exchanges on December 21, announcement was made that the Exchange Managers Association of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce had been organized. Harry M. White, Goldwyn, was named chairman; George Denbow of Fox, vice-chairman, and John Clark, Paramount, secretary and treasurer.

Plans for this organization had been underway since last April but nothing definite heretofore accomplished.

It is understood the first act of the Association will be to work in conjunction with the National Committee on Censorship toward the modification of the Pennsylvania censorship laws.

Alfred Black Reiterates Purpose of His Assn.

Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., in an advertisement appearing in this week's issue of the NEWS, re-states the purpose and policies of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America to protect the exhibitor and secure for him a just revenue for the use of his screen in showing industrial and educational pictures. At the same time, Mr. Black issues a call for a show of "all the cards on the table" by opposition forces that have arisen since the association of which he is president first proclaimed its plans to get for the exhibitor a share in the profits accruing to production companies from industrial and educational films.

Lie Given to Pickford "Statement"

Adolph Zukor Flatly Denies Words Credited to Him by the Exhibitor's Trade Review Insinuating Possibility of Negotiations by Famous-Lasky with Miss Pickford

STATEMENTS put into the mouth of Adolph Zukor in the course of what was announced to be an "exclusive interview" printed in the Exhibitor's Trade Review in its issue of December 27 under a scare head across the page, were branded as absolutely false and misleading by Mr. Zukor in the course of a telephonic conversation with a Motion Picture News representative on December 23.

The statement which aroused the ire of the Famous Players-Lasky official, and which had brought forth previously a heated protest from United Artists, had to do with Mary Pickford. The Exhibitor's Trade Review quoted Mr. Zukor as follows in summarizing points gathered in the alleged interview:

That while he (Mr. Zukor) personally has no plans in which Mary Pickford is interested he would not say definitely that the officials in the production department have not in mind some sort of a plan to star her.

A "scene behind the scenes" during the filming of "The Return of Tarzan," a Numa Pictures Corporation production. Gene Pollar and Estelle Taylor play the principal roles

Made Up From Whole Cloth

In emphatic denial that he had said or hinted anything to this effect, Mr. Zukor said to the NEWS representative:

"The interview I had with the Exhibitor's Trade Review was merely a telephone conversation such as I am holding with you. I never made such a statement as that credited to me about Mary Pickford. On the contrary I particularly tried to stay clear of conversation involving her in order that nothing I might say could be misconstrued as it has been. All that I did say was that I had no plans, nor in fact anything whatever to do with Miss Pickford."

Mr. Zukor's attention was called to the statement issuing from the United Artists Corporation in which Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Miss Pickford said: "I can only assume that Mr. Zukor has been misquoted." In this connection Mr. Zukor said:

"I would have been more pleased had United Artists come directly to me for a denial rather than send out a lengthy statement denying the facts in the alleged interview attributed to me. The matter would have been thus more quickly settled."

In conclusion he stated, "I want to emphasize that this statement credited as coming from me is false. If things I do say are falsely quoted—well, then I will start making statements."

This statement sent from the United Artists Corporation to the trade press on the appearance of the article in the Exhibitors Trade Review follows:

The Exhibitor's Trade Review, dated December 27th, carried what purported to be an exclusive interview with Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky Company.

Among other things, Mr. Zukor was credited with saying "That while he personally has no plans in which Miss Pickford is interested, he would not say definitely that the officials in the production department have not in mind some sort of a plan to star her."

Should Make You Think

Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Miss Pickford, when asked for a comment on Mr. Zukor's statement, said: "I can only assume that Mr. Zukor has been misquoted.

"Miss Pickford has absolutely no plans beyond her present arrangement for the release of her productions through United Artists Corporation. Her arrangement with United Artists Corporation is for a period of three years, and during that period Miss Pickford's time and attention will be given to the making of productions for release solely and exclusively through United Artists Corporation, for exhibition in motion picture theatres.

"I can say for her, that she is happier than she ever has been before, so far as her business arrangements are concerned, and her whole thought is to make the kind of pictures the public wants to see her in. She believes that she has now completed, as her first release for United Artists Corporation, the finest picture of her career and she is ready to leave the judgment of this to her admirers.

"She is making pictures absolutely independently and all pictures that she makes during the next three years will be released through United Artists Corporation. No other producing or distributing organization enters into Miss Pickford's plans in even the remotest say."

Hiram Abrams was likewise asked for a comment on Mr. Zukor's statement and he merely said, "Any attempt by Mr. Zukor or anybody else, to give an impression that Miss Pickford has plans beyond United Artists Corporation, is fourteen karat bunk."

"Rotary" Portable Projector Sent Abroad

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, has paved the way for the international distribution of the "Rotary" Portable Projector on a large scale, since his announcement of the control of the world's rights, a few weeks ago.

One of the first machines to leave the factory was shipped to the Educational Films Company, Ltd., of London, and Mr. Hammons is now in England, building up the sales organization which is to operate the new department in the United Kingdom. Another sample machine has been shipped to an Educational agency in India, and the Kelwin Film Company, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, have been made authorized dealers for export trade. Other contracts, with Educational connections abroad, will become operative when the factory can deliver machines in larger quantities.

State Rights for "The Blindness of Youth"

It is reported that many inquiries from territorial buyers in all parts of the country are being received daily by Murray W. Garson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation, who soon will place at the disposal of state right buyers the first of a series of productions, "The Blindness of Youth."

The picture is virtually complete, it is stated, and announcement of the initial trade showing will be made within the next few days. The publicity and advertising work, which is being conducted for the purpose of paving the way for both the state right buyers and the exhibitor, will be continued throughout the time the various independent buyers are carrying on their sales campaign, thus aiding in every way possible the success of the production, it is stated.

Chicago F. I. L. M. Ass'n Holds Annual Session

The following committees have been appointed by the new president:

Grievance Committee: Messrs. Aiken, Vandarwalker, Greswell, Grauman, Flaherty and Seery (Sec.).

Legislative Committee: Messrs. Schindler, Weiss and Creswell.

Advertising Publicity Committee: Messrs. E. A. Eshman, Brockell and Herz.

Business Efficiency Committee: Messrs. Eshman, Brockell, Grauman, Cropper and Zambrino.

Committee on Credits: Messrs. Beadell, Burhorn, Spanuth and Herz.

New Head of Lasky N. Y. Exchange

Announcement is made by Al Lichtman, General Manager, Department of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of the appointment of Harry H. Buxbaum as Manager of the New York Exchange, succeeding Arthur G. Whyte, who has resigned.

Mr. Buxbaum, who is one of the most efficient as well as popular exchange men in the industry, for the past year has been serving Famous Players-Lasky as Special Representative, with supervision of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Cleveland offices.

The appointment was effective Monday, December 15th.

Looping the Loop in the Windy City

Walter H. Hill, recently exploitation manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, out of the Chicago office, has resigned. Mr. Hill has not announced his future plans to date, but it is rumored he is about to accept an important position.

Sprague Green, one of the veteran salesmen of the Chicago district, has returned from Indiana, after a trip through that state for Beehive. He reports business is fine in the Hoosier state and that many exhibitors are eagerly awaiting for their "Red Viper" dates.

Frank Heller, manager of a chain of Indiana theatres, announces that he expects to open a new picture theatre at Kokomo on Christmas day.

C. R. Lindau, for three years head booker, has been promoted to assistant branch manager of Vitagraph at Chicago, succeeding Tom E. Delaney, who has been transferred to branch manager at Omaha.

Work is being rushed on the $600,000 Blackstone Theatre at South Bend, Indiana, and the structure is now completed up to the first story. It will be the biggest moving picture house in the state when finished.

J. D. Williams and Harry Schwalbe of the First National home office were Chicago visitors last week.

Fred Creswell of Paramount, after January 1st, is planning to spend part of his time among the country exhibitors.

Chicago employes of First National are happy over their Christmas presents of two weeks' extra salary.

J. A. Humphrey, sales manager for Vitagraph in Indiana, fell on the ice in East Chicago last week and suffered a severe injury to his right knee, but is now able to hobble about and is back on the job.

Dale Loomis, owner of the Isis and Victoria Theatres at Peru, Indiana, will erect a new 1500-seat house and construction will start about March 1st. He recently has purchased the Colonial Theatre, formerly owned by Carl Kruetzer, which gives Mr. Loomis control of all Peru moving picture houses.

Joe Brandt was in Chicago for a couple of days last week, after a one-week trip which took him as far south as Dallas. During the week he sold state rights on "Confession" to the First National, Minneapolis, for Minnesota; North and South Dakota to Siebers of St. Louis for eastern Missouri; to Richens Flynn of Kansas City for their territory. Options are also closed on Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas.

Lewis S. Geffen, Realart publicity representative with Constance Binney, is busy promoting the interests of the pretty "debutante" movie star and stage favorite in Chicago. Mr. Geffen expects the run of "39 East" featuring Miss Binney at the Princess to continue for months, so that ample time will be given to complete the new Realart picture which is being filmed with Miss Binney as the star, at the Essanay Studios.

P. K. Anton of New Castle, Indiana, will run an "American Week" of "Flying A Specials" at the Royal theatre, starting Jan. 16th. "Eve in Exile," "The Hellion," and "Six Feet Four" make up the series.

Joseph Rodderick, Middle West sales manager for Universal, has returned from Kansas City and reports "The Right to Happiness" is making a record two weeks' run at the Liberty theatre there. He also attended a sales convention in Kansas City, at which sales plans for 1920 to exploit the Universal's "Money-Making Twelve" were taken up. Universal men at the convention were Harry Berman, general sales manager; Barney Rosenthal, of St. Louis; J. H. Calvert (alias Curley), of Omaha; Smiling Sam Benjamin, of Oklahoma City; M. J. Frisch, of Des Moines; William J. Wilkerson, Kansas City and Julius Bernheim.

Jack Ford, aged twenty-one years, the youngest director in the moving picture business, went through Chicago last week on his way to the West Coast after a visit to his home in Maine. Before leaving California he completed "The Prince of Avenue A," featuring Jim Corbett and on his return will start work on "Out Done," with the same star.

Beatrice Barrett has resigned from the Interstate Review to handle publicity and advertising for Fitzpatrick & McElroy, who own twenty Michigan theatres and are exploiting the Ford Educational Weekly.

Milton Schoenberger, who organized the Industrial and Educational Department of Universal at Cleveland, has arrived to take the place of Al Brandt, whose resignation from Universal was reported two weeks ago, and who has left for New York.

Manager Fred Aiken, of Vitagraph, has accomplished the unusual feat of booking a feature picture to play two pre-release loop houses at the same time and the Earl Williams production, "When A Man Loves," will open at the Ziegfeld and the State-Congress for a week's run on December 28th.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the two famous comedy stars, who have just signed a long-term contract with Universal, were in Chicago last week for a few days, on their way across the continent to the Pacific Coast. They were accompanied by Mr. Caulfield, owner of two Los Angeles theatres and widely known as state right buyer, who acted as the personal representative in closing the contract with Universal.

The Chicago office of Metro reports "Stronger Than Death," the new Nazimova feature, is being booked rapidly and that already such key cities as Milwaukee and Indianapolis have booked this big production for two weeks and smaller cities, such as Fort Wayne and Terre Haute, for a week's run, opening about January 18th, on which date it will be shown in eighteen cities simultaneously. "Stronger Than Death" is just completing a five weeks' showing in the Chicago loop.

One of the big, new Indiana theatres opening in January is the Grand at Lincoln, Illinois, and Manager Matthew Reinhardt is at present making bookings for the new house.

O. F. Spahr, of the Enterprise Optical Company, has returned to Chicago after a trip covering the Mississippi Valley cities as far south as New Orleans and going as far west as Denver. Mr. Spahr says that throughout this big territory exhibitors are doing a wonderful business and are purchasing the finest of equipment to improve their projection.

Carl Harthill, of the Beehive Exchange, was highly honored last week and presented with a number of beautiful gifts, when he retired as master of Welfare Lodge, F. & A. M. A large number of film men were present to take part in the presentation ceremonies which marked the passing of Mr. Harthill, who had made a wonderful record as chief of this lodge.

Mrs. Ella Rogers of Chicago, said to be the only living relative of William Stowell, the Universal star who was killed on December 9 in a Belgian Congo railroad accident, is to make a claim for the $17,000 estate left by Mr. Stowell.

Among the big improvements being made by the Bijou Dream theatre is the installation of a Hope Jones organ, which, it is said, will cost in the neighborhood of $35,000.

George West is on his way back to Chicago from California where he has been establishing coast connections for the Cropper Distributing Corporation.

William C. Cook, city salesman for the First National, Chicago office, is spending a week in New York, combining business and pleasure.

Joseph Erber, owner of theatres in East St. Louis and Belleville, Illinois, has taken over a theatre in Collinsville, Illinois.

Ralph W. Crocker entertained a host of friends at the Elks Club in Elgin, Illinois, recently. Among Chicago visitors were Harry Weiss, of the First National, and J. W. Calloway, of the Greater Stars Company.

Exhibitors in Southern Illinois have a lot of business to attend to in St. Louis, Missouri, lately, according to Harry Weiss, of the First National, Chicago, who seems to be making frequent trips there himself. (The town is wide open since the court handed down a decision in the favor of the wets.)

Mrs. Harvey B. Gould, owner of a string of theatres in Southern Illinois, was a visitor to the Chicago Stock Show last week. One of Mrs. Gould's hobbies is prize horses, which she has displayed at various shows and exhibitions throughout the country.

Longer Runs

to take care of the results of a big picture by only playing it two days and I find they have turned away people on a two-day booking and have enough of a crowd left over to play a third day. From many reports I understand that often the crowds and box office receipts are as large on the third day as on the first day, sometimes both are larger."

Into Texas the spirit of longer runs for attractions has spread, and the First National officials at Dallas announce that every city of 75,000 population or over is running attractions for a minimum of one week. Undoubtedly, the investigation shows, the encouragement given exhibitors by the exchange to exploit the attractions heavily is in a considerable measure responsible for this record An instance is cited where Forney, a town of 1,500 population, ran "Daddy Longlegs" four days in succession with the result that the last day's receipts were larger than the first.

The records of the First National Exchange of Indiana contain much encouragement for those who are striving for bigger pictures, higher admissions and longer runs. According to Floyd Brown, manager, the special attractions are playing week runs in eight towns outside of Indianapolis, whereas last year four days was the limit in each of these centers.

Indianapolis records further show that there are approximately forty theatres which formerly changed three or four times a week that are now running attractions three and four days.

"I think the daily change will soon be a thing of the past," said Mr. Brown. "Of course, there will be a few exceptions. Even some of the very smallest towns in the State, towns of less than 1,000 population, buy occassional pictures for a two days' run. More people go to the motion picture theatre now than ever before and as the admission prices are soaring, the average working man's family can't afford to go to the theatre every night. Longer runs are therefore advisable for this reason. It is unquestioned that longer runs increase patronage and constantly add new customers.

Aside from this, the exhibitor is realizing that he has been losing some business through over-feeding his patrons. And the surest way of maintaining continued patronage is to give just enough instead of too much, and of the quality that will give them a thirst for more instead of disgusting them."

The value of a more thorough standardization of the motion picture is making itself clear to exhibitors, according to a number of Exchange managers who declare that the showman is now thoroughly aware that the public respect evidenced toward his theatre and the manner in which it is conducted will guide in a great measure the ultimate success or failure of the highest intent of the industry.

Ass't General Manager of Crandall Circuit

Harry M. Crandall, owner of the chain of Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., to which the eighth house, the York, was added November 26th, last week announced the appointment of John J. Payette to the position of assistant general manager of the entire Crandall circuit. Mr. Payette was formerly manager of Crandall's Metropolitan theatre in Washington.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

Something in Service You Will Welcome

COMING in contact constantly as we do with both exhibitors and newspapers has confirmed a long standing suspicion that these two professions are not for the most part co-operating as they should. They are working at cross purposes. Neither the theatre manager of the newspaper editor speaking in a broad sense is realiizng that in each other they have a medium which will bring about a greater degree of prosperity for both theatre and publication.

The newspaper sometimes views the exhibitor as a purchaser of his wares, entitled to only such space as he pays for, such assistance a he purchases and that the motion picture business is not to be considered any differently than the dry goods. The exhibitor is looking on the newspaper as an arbitrary institution which holds him up for publicity either in the shape of display or text matter. He doesn't appreciate that the space in a newspaper is the goods which the paper has for sale. Because he, the exhibitor, can't take what he buys of the newspaper away under his arm, he fails to see any thing but 1000 per cent profit for the man to whom he pays his money.

Neither is he looking beyond the immediate profit for himself.

Believing what has been stated to be true the Exhibitor's Service Bureau is attempting to do something which it hopes will remedy the situation to some extent in a series of articles written by the photoplay editors of such newspapers which have inaugerated photoplay departments to the mutual benefit of both publication and the exhibitors of the cities in which the newspaper is located.

We have asked the movie editors to tell our readers if it pays to run a motion picture section and why and how it pays. We will publish these stories so that the exhibitors who are not getting co-operation from his newspaper may take the NEWS up to the sanctum sanctorium of his paper and prove to the short visioned gentleman what he is missing is not giving proper attention to the Fifth industry.

When all this is done we have another idea which we think will be of benefit in this all important problem of getting the exhibitor and the newspaper man together. The details will keep.

Our first article on the above mentioned subject is by Karl Kessler, Features Editor of the Toledo Blade.

Why the Toledo Blade Conducts a Motion Picture Section

NEWSPAPERS seek to print what will interest the majority of their readers. Only when they print what their readers want are they successful. When a newspaper puts on a feature, the circulation manager is a pretty good judge of the pulling power of that feature. So he ordinarily is asked for his opinion.

The Toledo Blade has been conducting a daily motion picture department for some time now, and all are convinced that it is making circulation. We have tried to get away from the old scissors method; we are putting into our department snappy, up-to-the-minute movie news and photographs. We are reaching out and picking up our material everywhere. We aren't content to let the publicity departments of producers be our only source of news; we are watching the magazines, getting news letters, using the telegraph—and writing our own stuff. We look on movie news in the same way that we look on police or any other kind of news. We have torn down the movie page to get in a piece of late copy—something that seemed too good to hold over till the next day.

The department is in the hands of two writers, one watching the local theatres and news, the other handling art and general movie news, features, etc.

It is estimated 250,000 Toledoans attend the movies every week. The Toledo Blade has decided these fans want movie news and plenty of it. We figure that they are "wise ones" and know the difference between warmed over news and the stuff right off the fire. So we don't try to fool them. We give them their movie news while it is hot and appetizing. We satisfy 'em!

What's the result? The fans swear by The Blade. They believe in our movie department. Our Monday editions carry complete reviews of every first-run picture in the eight first-run downtown theatres. Regular reporters cover these theatres on Sunday and they don't kiss anybody's foot in their criticisms. They tell the truth—if a picture is bad, they say so. If it's good they praise it. The managers are with us. It makes our department really valuable to them. We keep in touch with these managers. We call on them, get the news, and we keep their activities before their patrons.

It's all so simple! Everybody is interested in the movies. Kids and grown-ups—EVERYBODY! That's why a newspaper can't afford to pass up the movies. And the quicker the newspaper editor realizes this, the quicker he is going to start the circulation of his paper uphill.

The Blade sees a big future for the industry. That's why The Blade is behind it with daily support. And it's paying—paying big dividends!

But, let the exhibitor bear this in mind: Don't interfere too frequently with those who conduct the movie departments. Remember that it is your advice and aid that they seek, not grumbling and needless disheartening criticisms. The editors are human; they are trying to do their best. Help them. Don't fuss about little things—they are trying to make a movie department and should be more interested in that than in pleasing the managers.

Newspaper and Exhibitor Co-operate to Mutual Profit

WITH the co-operation of the Jackson News, the management of the Washington theatre, Jackson, Mich., conducted a business-pulling contest for Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential." Under the caption, "How Many Pictures of Madge Kennedy Are There Here? It's Strictly Confidential, But Count Them and Win a Prize," there appeared a combination picture of Miss Kennedy in something over one hundred different poses. The heads of the Goldwyn star were so arranged that it was almost impossible to count them twice and arrive at the same total. Theatre tickets were given as prizes to the winning contestants.

One of the Toledo Blade's "Movie" pages, a regular feature of every issue because the Blade has found that the people of Toledo want motion picture news. This section is given all the attention of a news page and according to the Blade's circulation manager has been the means of greatly increasing the paper's subscription list. If you will properly present the facts in the history of what the Blade has done in co-operating with the exhibitors to your editors, they should see the light. Try it.

The Value of the Special Show for Children

Sending a Couple of Hundred Children Out to Talk "Jinx" is Worth While

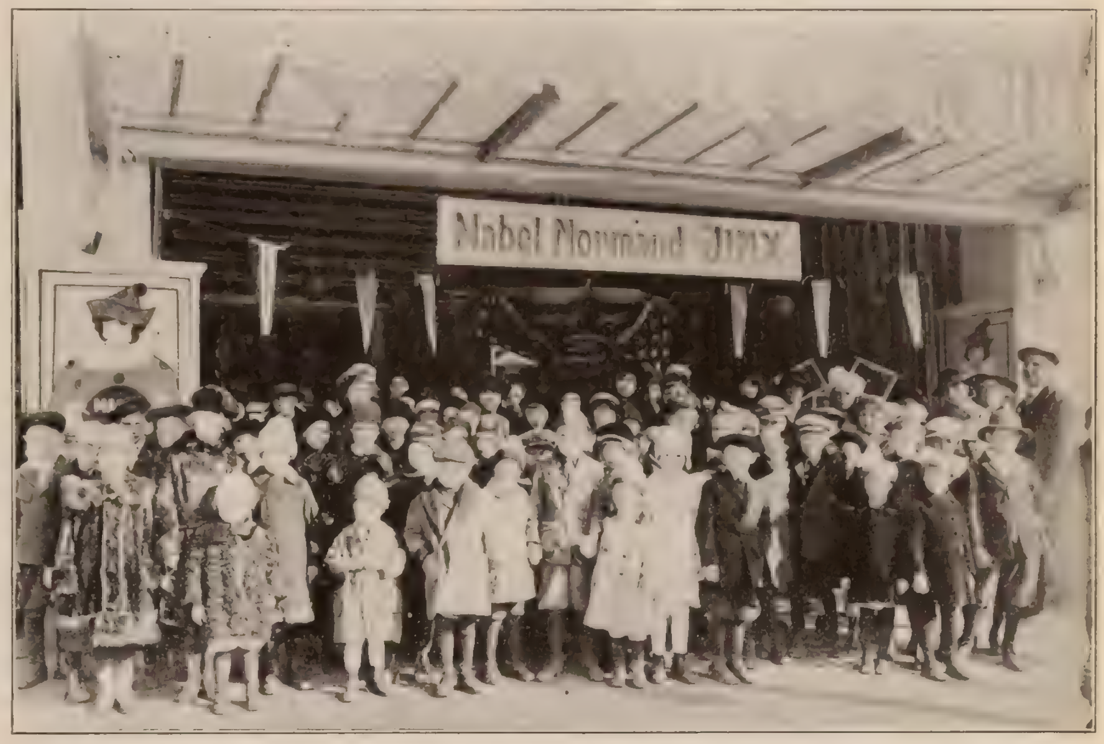
IF you will take a peep at the accompanying cuts you will see two illustrations that should teach you something about publicity, for they are both exploitation stunts. Having dilated on the virtue of lobby displays so often, we will pass this subpect in telling you of the Liberty theatre of Colorado Springs, Col., experience in playing "Jinx" and to discuss at some length the advertising value there is in a "children's party" such as the Liberty staged.

Getting children together in a theatre to see a picture, especially a children's picture is the liveliest kind of exploitation. You can gamble that every one of the little shavers who crowded in the lobby for the photograph from which our cut was taken, went home that night and that their little tongues wagged for days about "Jinx," and if that isn't the best kind of advertising then we don't know anything about exploitation.

Every child shown in this picture was a salesman for the feature and the best kind of a salesman, since they believed in the goods they were extolling.

It was wise showmanship which led the Liberty to stage a special children's performance, and it was also sound judgment which led the Liberty's enterprising manager to carry out the circus idea to the fullest extent in the decoration of his lobby, in the center of which stood the box office made to represent a circus wagon. Striped canvas on the walls and ceiling suggested a circus tent, and the colored pennants strung across the lobby added to the festive appearance.

The management of the Liberty began preparations for "Jinx" several weeks in advance of the showing, and through an exploitation campaign that thoroughly covered the town, succeeded in arousing keen interest in the coming of the latest Mabel Normand picture. The theatre was not large enough to accommodate all of the children that wanted to see the "Biggest Show on Earth."



These "kids" had the time of their lives seeing "Jinx" at the Liberty theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., and then went home to tell all their big and little friends and relatives how good it was. Isn't that good advertising?

A Handsome Profit at the Other Fellow's Expense

JOHN DESTEFANO, manager of the Queen theatre, Dallas, Texas, has just made a handsome profit from the advertising paid for by the Dallas Hippodrome. He analyzed the effect of the heavy exploitation which the Hippodrome had done in connection with the star of a picture and immediately booked another picture by the same star to begin just as the other run ended.

The Hippodrome used the widespread exploitation in connection with Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum." Every stunt of which the picture is capable was employed by Hal Norfleet, manager of the Hippodrome, from a gaily decorated "hoodlum" wagon driven about the streets to cutouts of "Our Mary" sliding down a coal chute. By the time "The Hoodlum" opened there was no one in town but what knew that Mary Pickford was going to be at the Hippodrome, for the star had been exploited as heavily as had the picture.

When the picture went into its second week, still doing a turn-away business, DeStefano noticed that practically everyone in town with whom he came in contact was talking about Mary Pickford. He got his idea then and succeeded in getting "Daddy Long Legs" for the last four days of the week after "The Hoodlum" closed. It was a repeat date for Dallas on "Daddy Long Legs," for the Hippodrome had used this production for a two weeks' run last April.

DeStefano relied almost entirely upon the Pickford vogue which had been established by "The Hoodlum." He used but one advertisement in each of the five Dallas newspapers to announce the dates and let the picture take care of itself. From the first performance the house was packed and he ran an extra show on Saturday night to accommodate those who wanted to see it.

"The reputation made by Mary Pickford in 'The Hoodlum' with the Dallas motion picture fans, without a doubt in the world put over 'Daddy Long Legs' on its second trip," said Mr. De Stefano.

Stage setting for Thangsgiving Week at the Theatre De Luxe, Detroit, which can be called a real novelty

Moeller Monopolizes a Whole Newspaper for His Birthday Showing

A. J. MOELLER, managing director of the Theatre De Luxe of Detroit, recently celebrated the house's first anniversary by monopolizing ing a couple of pages of the "Thanksgiving Edition De Luxe" of the News-Retailer, a weekly newspaper of Detroit which makes a specialty of catering to the neighborhood sections of the city and of staging an elaborate prologue for his Thanksgiving week program.

The newspaper and Mr. Moeller got together on the "De Luxe Edition" and the results for both once more prove that exhibitor and newspaper are kindred enterprises, each able to lend assistance to the other. Mr. Moeller's prologue brought him all kinds of publicity and compliments.

A big practical "pumpkin" was built on the stage with a door opening toward the audience. A five year old girl made her entrance through this door and rendered a pretty butterfly dance costumed as a fairy.

Mr. Moeller lighted his stage effectively, his "little fairy" was clever and all in all it was an event that De Luxe fans will not soon forget. The De Luxe is the first neighborhood house in Detroit to adopt a tri-weekly change of bill and is first run for its section. Only the best of bills are used and the house enjoys a large patronage.

The "Teaser" Method Has Another Inning

THAT good exploitation, no matter where it originates, is sure to be appreciated by the exhibitor is evidenced by the number of showmen who have adopted the producer's suggestion of "subpoenaing" the audience and of adopting "teaser" methods for display advertising, in their exploitation of "The Right to Lie."

An instance of the truth of this assertion is to be found in scanning the exploitation employed by the manager of the Albany theatre, Albany, N. Y., for his "The Right to Lie" engagement.

Teaser advertising he has always found effective, so he opened his newspaper campaign a full week before he was due to play the feature with a query. A double column advertisement, one inch deep, bearing only the words, "Did she have the right to lie?" was inserted the opening day of the campaign, in the Times-Union. It appeared on three different pages. The following day, seven advertisements, with the same query, were inserted in the Journal, another evening paper. The subsequent day the attack was switched to the morning paper, the Knickerbocker Press, three advertisements appearing.

On the evening of that day, the copy was confined to the Times-Union, seven ads being inserted. On Thursday the query was repeated twice in the Journal and four times in the Knickerbocker.

Convinced he had aroused the readers to a state of curiosity sufficient to serve his purpose, the Albany manager gave away his secret on Friday, and for the remainder of the week dwelt on the force of the motion picture. Then on Sunday, he pulled a half-page advertisement in the Knickerbocker Press, and once more the campaign book came to his rescue, for he used the idea of subpoenaing his audience.

The results achieved certify to the merit of the promotion work of the Albany arrangement. The picture went over big, for its box office value was enhanced many per cent. by the common sense advertising efforts.

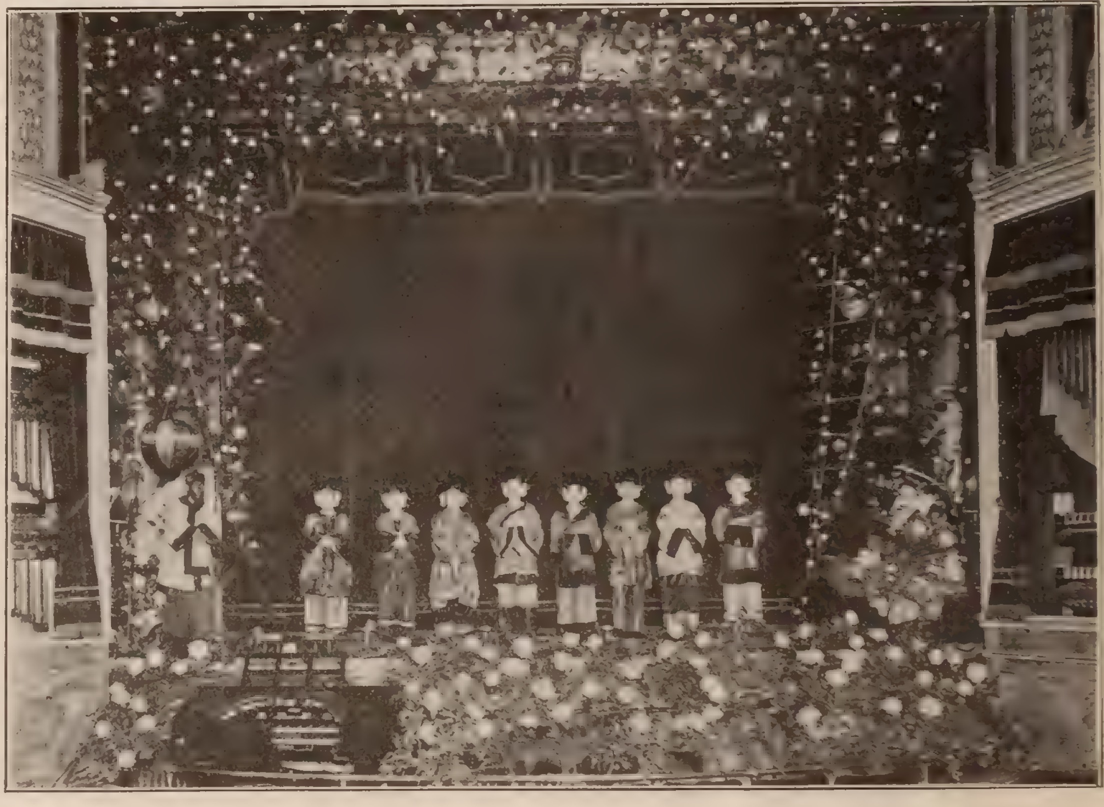
Liberty of Spokane Adopts the Prologue Presentation Idea

THE Liberty theatre of Spokane, Wash. is another house to join the ranks of those which have adopted the prologue and stage setting as a part of proper presentation of motion pictures. Ray Grombacher, secretary and manager of the Liberty, chose "Broken Blossoms" for his initial effort in prologues.

He secured the services of Marie Scammel Smith Lewis, an operatic soprano of considerable fame on the West Coast and presented his prologue with the first curtain.

Reclining on a cot with a stage setting similar to that shown in the "Chinks" room in the picture Mrs. Lewis sang her number and in the middle of the picture and at the right time, the song was again used effectively, sung from behind the scenes. At the end of the picture, she sang the entire verse. The foyer of the theatre, the stage, and the street entrance were beautifully decorated in keeping with the Chinese atmosphere of the play, and the 12 ushers were gowned in elaborate Chinese costumes.

Mr. Grombacher recently opened "The Music Shop," aesthetic in all its appointments, adjoining the Liberty theatre, where the latest song hits are handled exclusively. Slides are used in the theatre of the latest hits, and the audience joins in singing. The chorus is run twice and sometimes three times.



Novel stage settings and attractive decorations were the keynote of the Liberty theatre's (Spokane, Wash.) engagement of "Broken Blossoms"

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

Frank Lacey Turns His Lobby Into a Garden of Lithographs and Cut-Outs for His "Desert Gold" Showing

THE Western picture seems to be a favorite subject for a lobby display, according to the opinion of the exhibitors, especially in the West itself. The accompanying cuts illustrate how manager Frank Lacey of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., decorated his lobby for the showing of "Desert Gold" and how he costumed his house employes and otherwise advertised the Zane Grey attraction.

On one side of the lobby proper, a huge cardboard figure of E. K. Lincoln in western attire, was placed perhaps a foot in front of a landscape desert scene. A spot light put just back of the figure gave it sufficient light to be easily distinguishable and at the same time to give the effect of distance to the desert scene background. A similar means was used in a huge scene placed facade over the lobby.

Girl usherettes, who play no small part in Lacey's exploitation plans were attired in typical Western costumes and looked as if they might have stepped out of the picture itself. The three young men shown in the lower cut are also house employes. They too are attired in typical "Bill Hart" clothes.

The Majestic lobby is spacious permitting of extensive decoration and Mr. Lacey followed out his usual custom in billing "Desert Gold."

A very effective cut-out from a 24 sheet, mounted on board, was placed over the side-street entrance. This cut-out fully identified the sort of picture "Desert Gold" is, a melodramatic romance of the plains as they were in the prospecting days.

Not a small part of the Majestic theatre success is due to the clever costumes and lobbies designed for it by Manager Frank Lacey.

"Desert Gold" enjoyed a week's run at the Majestic, showing to capacity crowds, and Manager Lacey is of the opinion that his attractive lobby decorations were a big factor in the interest displayed on the part of the public in the feature.

The ushers wore the same costumes during the showing of "The Shepherd of the Hills," which also showed at the Majestic some weeks preceding. The photographs from which the accompanying cuts were made were taken after a night show and are a splendid example of night photography.

Johnstown, Pa., Gives "Checkers" Extensive Billing

JOHNSTOWN, PA., again is in the limelight of exploitation with the Nemo theatre's engagement on "Checkers."

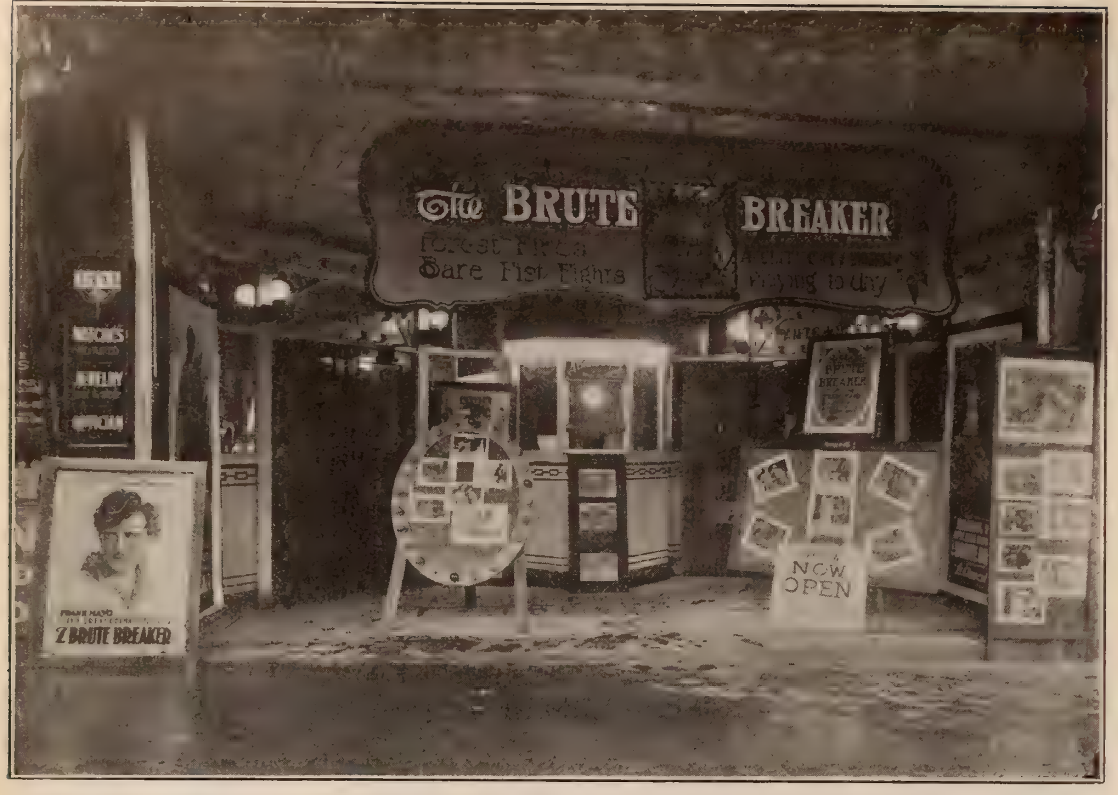
Advertising Manager L. W. Barclay is too good a showman not to fully appreciate the opportunity presented for "cleaning up" and gave the feature such billing as few photoplays receive in a city the size of Johnstown.

He began well in advance of the opening date, by putting out 200 window cards with "Watch for Checkers" printed thereon, and started his newspaper displays with "Watch for Checkers" ads. in small sizes. These displays were later increased to double tens and in the mean time a large number of 24 sheet posters and more cards were gotten up.

Barclay was not satisfied with just doing the ordinary things to get the picture attention of Johnstown fans and built a special lobby, with a large banner painted against a checkered background across the front. Special one-sheets were used in the brass lobby frames, and these were surrounded by five-foot horse-shoes cut from beaverboard, silvered and be-ribboned. On Tuesday night, after midnight, the concrete sidewalk was blocked off and painted in a checkered design. On the three days preceding the showing a singer sang the song "Checkers." In the house program and in newspaper advertising the picture was given the personal guarantee of the theatre.

On the opening night the Kiwanis Club, of which Mr. Barclay is a member, was present as a guest of the theatre. This event brought the Nemo some front page publicity and of course also much word of mouth advertising by the members who attended.

The financial result of the run of the racing drama was the same as that reported in nearly every instance as yet recorded in this section, capacity business.



This is the lobby display which overcome even the handicap of exhibiting in Kansas City during the coal shortage period

Bucking the Coal Famine in Kansas City

MOVING picture theatre managers in the west had to face a peculiar problem due to their enforced closing several hours a day on account of the recent coal shortage. George Christian, owner of the Gayoso Theatre, in downtown Kansas City, realized that if any money was to be made during the few hours he was allowed to operate each day, the theatre would have to be packed.

As his patronage is decidedly transient he decided that he must do something to "pull 'em in," so he took unusual pains with his lobby, since the picture he had booked, "The Brute Breaker," was a good subject for this sort of exploitation.

With the aid of a sign painter, an ornamental banner, two 3-sheet and one 1-sheet posters and some photographs carefully arranged, a striking lobby display was prepared. The display evidently drew the crowds for Mr. Christian reports that business was satisfactory all through the engagement.

A Real Novelty Which Should Find Universal Favor

THE most unusual audience that ever witnessed a motion picture performance served as the basic exploitation ingredient of a promotion campaign launched in behalf of a special feature attraction by R. H. Haines, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of Cincinnati.

As a novelty that may be used by exhibitors with every promise of success Mr. Haines' stunt is declared to be unsurpassed for creating local interest. However, in the previous incident where it was used in Cincinnati, its main accomplishment was to show exhibitors throughout Ohio, what a little novelty preferment can mean.

The central idea around which the plan was formed was to give a motion picture show for those who had never seen a motion picture before in their lives. People who would answer this specification were found through newspaper stories that offered free passes to anyone who would call at the theatre and say they had never seen a motion picture entertainment. In the answers, all of which came by mail, it was discovered that all were invalids, many of whom would never be able to leave wheel chairs.

Arrangements for this entertainment were completed just previous to the release date on Mary Pickford's "Heart O' The Hills." The novelty of the idea was such that the various Cincinnati newspapers carried big front page stories abou the affair which news agencies broadcasted throughout the state.

The Cincinnati Post, sensing the acute human interest in the event, devoted space for a three column illustration of the invalid audience and a story of interesting dimensions. The item was replete with pathetic touches that gracefully blended with the trouble into which Mary Pickford finds herself in "Heart O' The Hills."

One of the audience was blind. However, he experienced as many laugh sensations as any other member, for a considerate friend read subtitles, described the settings and related the plot of the story. Another person suffering from a toothache, disclaimed interest in life temporarily but when he saw how the blind youth was enjoying the show he became happy also.

So successful was Mr. Haines' promotion stunt that exhibitors throughout Ohio are reported to be showing an interest in providing special entertainments for people who have never seen motion pictures before. It is declared to be a method second to none for securing wide publicity.

Lynch Prize Winning Display Merits Praise

MANAGER MURRAY of the Strand theatre, an S. A. Lynch house in Memphis, Tenn., arranged a prize-winning lobby display for the showing of the Rex Beach picture, "The Girl from Outside." To encourage ingenuity among the managers of the theatres on the Lynch string, monthly prizes are given for the most effective lobbies, considered from a commercial as well as an artistic standpoint.

Because of its unusual exploitation possibilities, Manager Murray selected "The Girl from Outside" as the subject for one of the most elaborate displays ever seen at the Strand. As indicated by the accompanying cut, he was particularly fortunate in reproducing the atmosphere of the picture and in giving his lobby an inviting appearance. The log cabin effect arranged for the box office, capped by snow, was cleverly conceived. To further heighten the atmosphere, branches, flecked with snow were placed around the lobby walls above cut-outs of scenes from the production. Altogether the entrance-way to the Strand was well dressed without being overcrowded.

Manager Murray's method of advising the public of the exact time for the beginning of performances by placing a schedule in a conspicuous place at either side of the lobby, is worthy of imitation by other exhibitors, who have not yet realized the value of giving this information to their patrons.

Making Your House Program Work for You

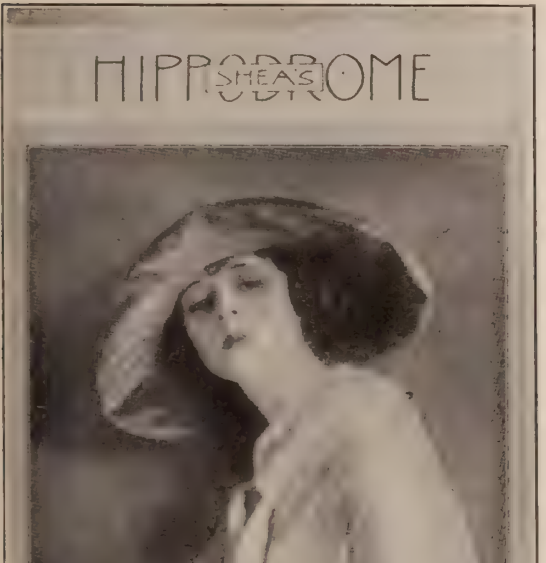
H. B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome Makes His Front Page Advertise Coming Attractions

ONE of the important parts of the publicity at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is its weekly program. Harold B. Franklin has spent much time on this link in his advertising chain in an effort to work out something different, unusual and novel. However, the most of this time has gone into the cover page of the little booklet, with the result that Hippodrome programs each week for several months have been "fronted" with a series of the most attractive pages ever seen on a theatre program.

In discussing this front page proposition, Managing Director Franklin told the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative that any program cover, no matter how attractive in design, is likely to become monotonous if continued week in and week out during the year. Something new catches the eye, he argued, and magazines have recognized the value of an attractive front page on every edition.

At Shea's Hippodrome the program covers are changed each week and not only are the covers attractive, but they serve the purpose of advertising the coming features. They really have the same value as the herald, serving the same purpose, however, with more dignity and naturally attract more attention on the part of patrons. There is no question but that every one who picks up a program at the Hippodrome knows what the next attraction will be, for the front page announcement registers on the mind at once.

These cover pages are prepared by the Hippodrome art department after consultation with Mr. Franklin. The cost, according to the managing director is considerably lower than any leaflet or herald that could be published. Frequently the most effective scene in the play is used as a basis for the illustration and like most Hippodrome advertising has a text that is short and to the point. Half tones are generally used which come out much clearer.



Another example of what Franklin means by saying "Make your house program work for you"

While these cover pages are small things, they are one of the many little stunts that go into a Hippodrome presentation and as a tieup with the newspaper campaign ads, lobby displays, trailers, etc., form the connecting link in the chain that pulls patrons to the box office.

Washington Exhibitors Curtail Lights During Coal Crisis

THE alertness of Washington's theatre managers and their spirit of quick co-operation with the federal and District governments in times of emergency was repeatedly demonstrated during the war and was again exemplified when the crisis seemed to have been reached in the recent coal situation. Resolving themselves into one compact organization, the managers resident in the National Capital—representing the legitimate, vaudeville and burlesque stages as well as the screen—took voluntary action which rendered the issuance of even so much as an official suggestion to them unnecessary when the conservation of coal was paramount.

At a meeting called by Harry M. Crandall, owner of the chain of Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., and held in his office in the Metropolitan theatre building on the afternoon of Thursday, December 4th, Washington theatre managers on their own initiative took definite action with a view to meeting the threatened coal shortage and conserving the visible supply of bituminous coal available for the country's industrial needs. Upon motion of Roland Robbins, manager of B. F. Keith's Washington theatre, it was unanimously decided to curtail the use of electric current for theatrical display to a point representative of the actual business requirements of the Capital's principal theatres.

The plan adopted was put in operation the same night upon the further unanimous determination of the managers to make their saving effective at the earliest possible time. This resulted in the immediate disuse of the large display and flash signs customarily employed to emblazon the names of the downtown theatres or the attractions playing. The legitimate theatres extinguished all outside illumination at 8:30 P. M., upon the seating of the audience. The moton pcture houses abandoned all electrical display except entrance lights necessary to the conduct of the business and public safety.

The curtailment of power and consequent reduction in the consumption of coal was voluntarily continued until the ban was lifted by official order from Mr. Hines, director of rails, on Friday, December 12th. In the meantime orders restricting the Washington shops to open hours from 12 M. to 6 P. M. only, had been issued, as well as orders requiring street cars in the District of Columbia to cut off all heat. In none of these orders was it deemed necessary to direct the theatre managers to take action the necessity of which they had anticipated by a full week and promptly taken of their own accord.

The managers whose quick action provided a splendid example in co-operation for all of Washington's business organizations, were: Harry M. Crandall, who acted as chairman; L. Stoddard Taylor, Shubert-Belasco theatre; W. H. Fowler, National theatre; Clarence Harris, Poli's theatre; Roland Robbins, B. F. Keith's theatre; A. Brylawski, Cosmos theatre; Lawrence Beattus, Loew's Palace theatre; Robert E. Long, Moore's Rialto theatre; Harry Jarboe, Gayety theatre; E. J. Stutz, Loew's Columbia theatre. Mr. Crandall's participation in the discussion was on behalf of his entire chain of eight theatres and Mr. Long represented all of Tom Moore's three houses in the Capital.

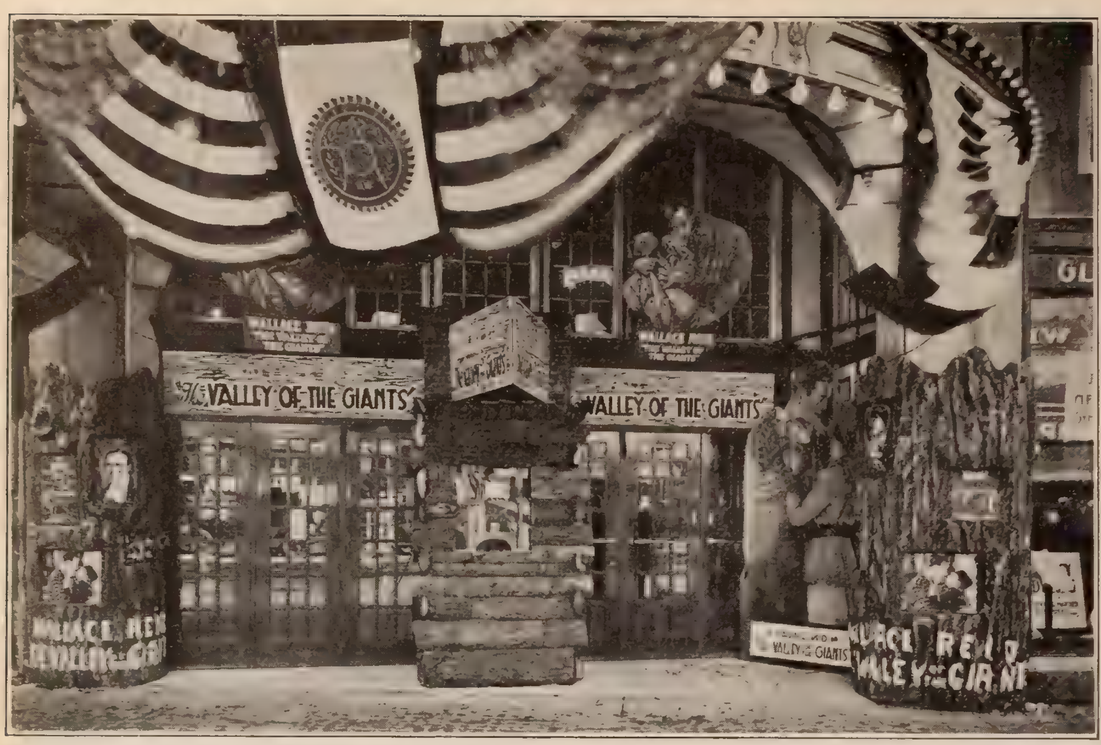
"Music Soothes the Savage Beast"

"JIMMIE" BOYD, a wide-awake Goldwyn exhibitor who manages the Gem theatre at Blytheville, Ark., has evolved a new version of the "town crier." Boyd's town has a population of about 3,000, and he depends largely on his rural trade to pull him through with a profit. So "Jimmie" purchased a euphonium, mounted it on his auto, and instead of parading the city streets to announce current attractions, betakes himself to the country and serenaded every farmhouse within a five-mile radius of the town.

At the conclusion of the concert, Boyd hands out a program or dodger announcing the week's attractions.

The farmers now look for Jimmie's concert every week, and patronize the Gem in large numbers, the theatre prospering accordingly.

Boyd overlooks no bets. Besides doubling the drawing population by enlarging the boundaries of his local concert tour, he also prints his own weekly paper and makes it pay for itself by running merchants' advertisements in the publication.



"Valley of the Giants" Popular Feature for Lobby Display

So far as we have been able to judge by photographs and stories secured, "The Valley of the Giants" has been a release which has inspired exhibitors to build more lobby displays than any picture now showing, perhaps because of the fact that "slab wood" can be used as the decorative material and thereby no great expense is involved in the undertaking.

One of the number who have given the Wallace Reid feature a lobby display of the "wood pile" type is Manager William Koch of the New Aster theatre, Minneapolis. Mr. Koch constructed his "Valley of the Giants" lobby display during the week of visiting American Legionaires to Minneapolis and made a distinct hit with the order by his display of flags on Hennepin avenue and about the lobby of the theatre, but it was his lobby display, especially decorated with artificial tree trunks and foliage to create proper atmosphere for his film offering which pleased. With its combination of flags and special constructed lobby frames, pillars and box office walls the New Aster exterior stood out like a full moon on a dark night. It is also interesting to add that because of his artistry and small increase in newspaper space, Mr. Koch was able to establish a new high mark for Reid pictures in Minneapolis with "The Valley of the Giants."

Exhibitors in Ohio Hire a Famous "Ace" for Exploitation Purposes

THE use of the aeroplane for exploiting continues to be a favorite stunt. Following is the story of how a famous "ace" is now soaring through space in peaceful pursuits instead of chasing German bombing planes as was his vocation some year or so ago.

Theatre owners in Mansfield, Newark, Lima, Dayton and other towns commissioned Lieut. Bob Bartley, a Canadian Ace, to fly above their towns in his Canadian Curtiss plane with the wings carrying banners announcing the exhibition of "Checkers."

Bartley does death-defying tricks with his aeroplane, walks along the wings, rides on the tail, and is one of two men in the United States who have succeeded in leaping from one aeroplane to another while in mid-air. In advertising "Checkers," Bartley drove his machine close to the ground, doing nose dives and loops, and when only a few hundred feet above the heads of the onlookers he threw out thousands of various colored cards with this message:

A Tip From Heaven
Don't Miss "Checkers"
Hi Flyer

These cards made a beautiful sight fluttering to earth in a mass of color glittering in the sunlight. The message that "Checkers" was in town was carried to virtually every resident, as well as to the suburbs and the theatre owners were rewarded for their far-sightedess by packed houses at every showing.

Bartley is a Los Angeles boy, and was in a musical show in Minneapolis when Germany started the big war. He immediately went to Winnipeg and enlisted in the first Canadian contingent that went to France. He was assigned to aviation and soon proved himself a star flier. During the war he brought down a large number of German aeroplanes, and was himself shot down seven times, being severely wounded on each occasion. Once he brought down a dirigible at Huy, but he too crashed to the ground and suffered fractures of both arms and legs and a wound in the abdomen that required ninety-eight stitches.

The aviator wears the decoration of the Gold Legion of Belgium, the Croix de Guerre and the Mons and Belgian ribbons.

The fact that Bartley had such a record as an "ace" was of course duly exploited in the Ohio newspapers and made his engagement in the exploitation interests of "Checkers" doubly effective.

The accompanying cut shows Bartley in flying costume still as youthful looking as when he left the stage to take up the profession of war.

A Real Idea Admirably Carried Out

A BABY SHOW, held in a motion picture theatre during weather that would tend to keep the hardiest fan indoors proved a big success at the Garrick theatre, St. Paul, Minn. The fact that it was such a baby show as can only be staged by a motion picture house has made the result of it extremely interesting to the exhibitors in the Northwest and it is expected that there will be an epidemic of them in that section.

Lieut. Bob Bartley a Canadian "Ace" who is now flying for Ohio exhibitors to advertise pictures

The extreme weather which persisted cut down the attendance at all places of amusement, and Theodore Hays, manager of the Garrick, was racking his brain for a sure fire exploitation that would make his patrons forget the cold. He got the germ of the idea in reading the story told by the production of Anita Stewart in "Human Desire," which deals with mother love and has the universal appeal of little tots, and after a discussion of ways and means with his publicity expert the plan was formed.

Mr. Hays knew that the weather which had cut the patronage, would also keep mothers from bringing their little tots to the theatre so he did not plan on having the youngsters interested in the flesh, but merely photographs of them to be flashed on the screen. The Camera Art Store agreed to take photographs and make a slide of all entries after Mr. Hayes had pointed out that there were very few parents who would not order pictures of their babies if the proofs were good. Then Mr. Hays went gunning for prizes and persuaded the advertising manager of Bannon Brothers' Department store that the value of ten really good prizes was cheap for the advertising which would result from a display of them and the announcement of the store's share in the contest at each performance.

The novelty of the stunt appealed to the newspaper writers and the show received a great deal of free publicity. Mr. Hays also used considerable advertising space for the picture and each of the ads contained cuts of the internationally famous "kewpie dolls." From the first show the attendance taxed the capacity of the Garrick and before the week ended more than 400 entries had been received.

Mr. Hays evolved a plan whereby the whole interest would not be centered about the last night of the run at which the prizes would be awarded. At each performance he ran the slides of the babies entered that day and had the audience select five of them by applause. These five were entered in the final class. On the last night the entries for that day were run for the choosing of five and then the pictures of the favorite thirty-five were flashed on the screen and the ten prize winners selected by the audience.

Demonstrating the Value of the "Teaser" Idea When Properly Used

THE extent to which a teaser campaign can attract the attention of the public if it is continued for a long enough time to really arouse curiosity has just been demonstrated by T. L. Tally, owner of the Minema and Broadway theatres, Los Angeles. Mr. Tally's campaign continued for ten days and brought turnaway business to his two houses for two consecutive weeks.

Billboards, most of them for twenty-four sheet stands, were utilized for the bigger part of the teaser campaign although the newspaper space taken was also extensive. On the first day of the campaign the billboards were covered completely with white paper, and in the upper left hand corner were four animal tracks leading toward the lower right hand corner. The following day four more tracks were added, the next day four more and so forth each day lengthening the line of tracks running diagonally across the white space. Four days before the conclusion of the campaign the first printed word appeared on the billboards. It was "Back." The next day "to" was added, then the following day "God's" and on the final day when "Country" was added, completing the title of the picture, a poster bearing the words "A First National Attraction, All Week at Tally's Kinema" was pasted in the lower left hand corner, and a very effective billboard display was completed.

In conjunction with this newspaper space of the same general shape as the billboards was taken, and the copy was a duplicate of the appearance of the billboard on the day it appeared. Simultaneously, with the climax of the teaser campaign the theatre and a local sporting goods store both opened displays featuring far northern clothing and scenes and pictures of Nell Shipman who is featured in the production.

The attraction played to capacity business at the Kinema for the opening week and the crowds followed it to the Broadway where it was run the week following, the only advertising used being an announcement of the transfer. It was an inevitable result of the interest aroused by the teaser campaign, for during the three or four days preceding the climax the local posting service and the newspaper offices were flooded with inquiries, both by telephone and letter, as to "what the tracks were all about."

"A picture offering the substance for a good teaser campaign is as valuable a one as an exhibitor can book," said Mr. Tally, "but the trouble is that most teaser campaigns are made too brief. Before curiosity is really aroused the disclosure has been made and the results fall far short of what this type of campaign can be made. I would have my campaign on 'Back to God's Country' even longer, but I felt that the word of mouth advertising it would receive after its first showing would bring more business than I could care for and the attendance proved this assumption to be correct."

Fire Department Aids in Exploiting "The Still Alarm"

When "The Still Alarm" played Denver the fire department was induced to come out and demonstrate its fire fighting apparatus during the run of the picture at the American theatre. One of the big exploitation stunts was a contest of ladder climbing in which a number of Denver young women displayed remarkable nerve in climbing the fire ladders and being "rescued" by the Denver firemen. Below is a photograph of the demonstration.

A "Smash" Which "Busted" All Precedence

WHEN you can monopolize the front pages of every newspaper in a city the size of San Francisco, you have the right to "stick out your chest and step high." This is what the publicity department of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, is doing these days after putting over the story of Mary Miles Minter's recent visit to both the Tivoli and the Golden Gate City.

Some idea of the publicity both the Tivoli and the Realart star received may be gained from the following brief description of the pages of the San Francisco newspapers.

The Call of December 2 gave Miss Minter a big headline three columns wide, printed her photograph and a story which killed about a column, same being written by a staff woman, Alma Reed. This was on the front page.

The Call and Post, an evening paper, devoted better than two columns of the issue of December 1 to Miss Minter and also carried a two-column cut.

The Bulletin came across with close to three columns on the front page with a cut and headlines. This was written by a feature reporter, Joseph Bartlett. In addition the Bulletin gave Miss Minter another story in the same issue. This one was written in an humorous vein, being the lament of one of the reporters who hadn't been assigned to an interview with the "movie queen."

The Daily News, not to be outdone in doing honor to San Francisco's visitor sent one of its feature writers, Cynthia Grey, on the assignment when Miss Minter was a guest of honor at a luncheon given by the Ad Club, a prominent San Francisco organization. Miss Grey wrote about three-quarters of a column of her impressions of Miss Minter and was very complimentary.

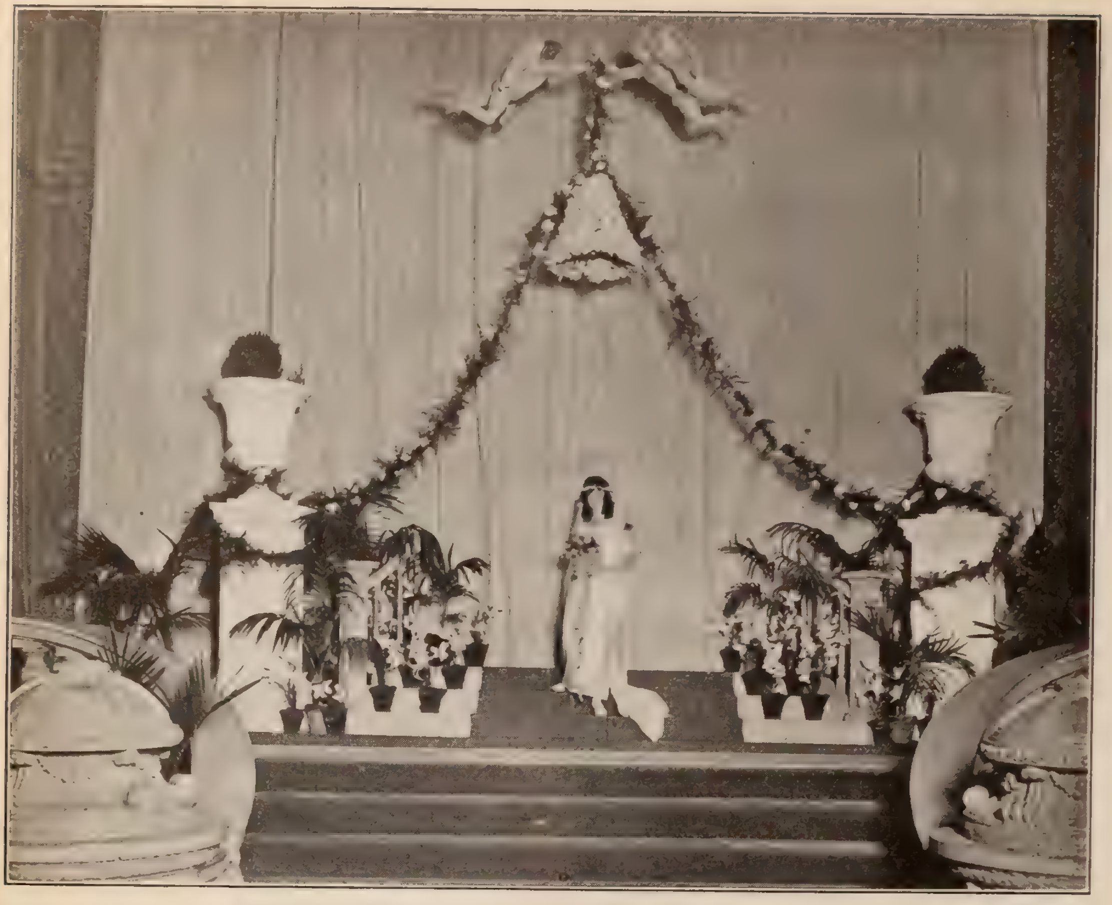
The Chronicle wasn't quite so liberal in free advertising, but it gave the luncheon mentioned quite a story and mentioned that Miss Minter and her mother were there.

The Oakland Inquirer, not to be left out, completely gave the Tivoli and Miss Minter a nice story on its photoplay page with a headline which read "Mary Miles Minter Here."

Likewise the Examiner gave due publicity to the visit of Miss Minter, the luncheon mentioned and the personal appearance of the star at the Tivoli theatre, although page six was used for the story.

Just what all this publicity would have cost without the co-operation of the San Francisco newspapers is something that can not be estimated.

Anyway, it was a "big publicity smash" to use the expression of the chap who brought us the newspapers to prove what we have just written concerning the drive.



Music and the Prologue Add Prestige to the California Programs

THE California Theatre of San Francisco was one of the first theatres to adopt a policy of presenting prologue and stage settings as a part of the regular program and has evolved some wonderfully artistic and appropriate numbers.

None, however, in our minds have eclipsed that presented by Mr. Roth and his able assistants for "Please Get Married."

The California took the "getting married" idea of the film for its prologue theme and had the "bride," the wedding bell, cupids and appropriate wedding decorations all nicely arranged and ready for the inspection of the audience. There is always a sort of a spell cast by the word "wedding" when women are concerned, and for this reason if for no other the prologue for the picture mentioned is considered one of the best the theatre has ever used when actual box office value of such exploitation is considered.

Another feature of the California publicity methods which has proven very successful is the tie-ing in with music houses for window displays. The California makes a specialty of its music and its programs always have all the dignity of grand opera in this respect.

These tie-ups are arranged each week with the various music dealers and at least ten to twelve window displays featuring the orchestra.

Played a Kid Game But It Went Over for Real Exploitation

VISITORS to the annual Interstate Fair at Sioux City, Iowa, were treated to two rare examples of motion picture exploitation by J. C. Duncan, manager of the Plaza Theatre. On the second morning of the fair, which attracts tens of thousands of visitors from all over the state, the first arrivals noted a huge placard high in the clouds. In heavy letters it announced "Auction of Souls All Next Week at the Plaza Theatre."

of the

The sign created a great deal of puzzled inquiry as to what held it up. An aeroplane was the most frequent guess, although that theory was discarded as soon as the sign was observed long enough to note that it was nearly stationary. The secret was due to a gigantic kite which Mr. Duncan had flown up during the night, to a height which made it barely discernible even after its approximate location had been determined.

The second stunt was the dressing of a man in full Arab costume, and supplying him with a horse with the proper Bedouin regalia. The man rode the streets from twelve to two and from five to seven every day announcing the running of the picture at the Plaza.

At the theatre Mr. Duncan directed his girl ushers to adopt Harem costumes, and a local singer rendered, at each performance, the song "Armenian Maid," written especially for the picture by A. E. Shallcross of Omaha. Special music was provided for the orchestra and for the organ with which the theatre is equipped.

Buffalo Exploitation Idea Attracts Attention

THE Strand theatre, Buffalo, introduced Elaine Hammerstein in "The Country Cousin," through a series of unusual exploitation stunts, which forcibly drew attention to the showing and greatly aided in boosting the box office receipts. First on the list of stunts was the arrangement made with the Truth Publishing company whereby the weekly magazine issued by this firm carried a striking photograph of Miss Hammerstein on its cover page the week the picture was shown at the Strand. Included in this stunt was the distribution of 200 half sheet cards with the picture of the star and the caption "TRUTH—Get Your Copy Now—Special Art Cover—Elaine Hammerstein—Strand theatre, December 14-17" to all the news stands in the city several of which in the downtown section were prevailed upon to make special displays. These cards were also placed at other advantageous points throughout the city. TRUTH also had several thousand dodgers printed stating that the picture of one of the prettiest screen stars would appear on the cover of the current week's issue and circulated through the department stores.

Another excellent stunt was the arrangement with the McNutt Riding Academy, whereby a beautiful girl drove a "Webster Driver," around the city during the showing of the picture. The girl was dressed as the country cousin and drove a horse said to be worth $1,500. The rig used was similar to the one used in the screen play. The cart was newly painted and presented a splendid appearance. A blanket covering the horse announced "'The Country Cousin' playing Now at the Strand theatre." A large card also covered the back of the cart with the reader "'The Girl of Your Dreams,' Elaine Hammerstein, in a worthwhile picture at the Strand today." This outfit was also driven through the residential sections of the city and attracted no end of attention, principally because at the time the weather in Buffalo was extremely cold and the spectacle of a young lady driving a horse and carriage about town at such a time never failed to catch the eye and cause comment.

Still another stunt was the flying of a large kite from which streamed a fifteen foot banner with the reader "LOOK UP 'The Country Cousin' at the Strand theatre today." This was used to good advantage until a shift in the wind threw the ad into an undesirable position when it was taken down and strung up in front of the theatre, slanted so as to face Shelton square, the busiest street corner in Buffalo.

A "Country Cousin," sleigh ride party was also arranged for the children at the Remington mission and this little stunt also brought forth much free publicity in the press. The Strand sign man also made up a special display for the three large windows of the local Select exchange, giving a good showing on Franklin street, the Men's hotel and the Central branch of the Y. M. C. A. Then there was special publicity in the newspapers, the specially attractive things being cuts of Miss Hammerstein on the Women's pages. The lobby at the Strand was also strikingly dressed, including an immense cut-out from a 24 sheet, which was made into a stand.

Lending valuable assistance in all this excellent exploitation was "Andy" Sharick, exploitation manager of the local Select exchange and a former Buffalo newspaper man. Manager E. O. Weinberg was delighted with the results obtained. During the showing of the picture capacity audiences were the rule.

Two Good Men Put Over a Good Picture

BOOKING a good picture is only the least of the troubles of W. C. Meloy, manager of the Strand theatre, Shelbyville, Ind.

Mr. Meloy has a habit of selecting good pictures but during the months of November and December he has to be a good electrical engineer as well as a good exhibitor. The fuel shortage has resulted in the theatres of Shelbyville being deprived of electrical current. But a little thing like that didn't feaze W. C. Meloy and his helpful son, Paul. Within a few hours after the fuel order went into effect, Mr. Meloy had secured a farm tractor; a generator; had strung temporary wires and was supplying his own "juice" for his 800 seat picture house. And just to show what kind of a fellow Meloy is, let us tell you that he is sharing his precious electric current with his competitor of the Alhambra theatre down the street!

After being sure that his electric plant in the alley was going O. K., Mr. Meloy set out to give proper exploitation to his big feature, Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female." Meloy had run "The Miracle Man" and put it over in the right style. He planned to do bigger with "Male and Female." He secured a booking date that almost coincided with the Indiana premier showing at the Circle, Indianapolis. He played up that point big in his publicity—the big honor that he was doing Shelbyville by giving such an early showing in that town; while "Male and Female" was still at the Circle, Shelbyville folk could see it at the Strand!

Mr. Meloy, with the assistance of Oscar A. Doob of the Famous Players-Lasky exploitation forces, got the News of Shelbyville to get up a page of "Male and Female" mercantile advertising—half the page devoted to apparel for the male and the other half for women's wear advertising. This made a smashing page of publicity.

In the Republican, Mr. Meloy started an essay contest on the question: "Should a wealthy girl ever marry her father's butler or chauffeur?" This being a theme in "Male and Female" the contest proved good publicity. Many interesting essays were submitted in competition for the ticket-prizes offered.

Another newspaper stunt Mr. Meloy put on was a search for every Shelbyville person who had never seen a photoplay. Cecil B. DeMille, through Mr. Meloy, offered to give a party to all who would send in their names, and the reason why they had never seen a photoplay. Only a few "confessed" to not having seen a picture—but the stunt made good advertising and drew much attention to "Male and Female."

What the Exchange Experts Are Doing

Atlanta Has a Taste of Real Exploitation

A NEW record for motion picture publicity in Atlanta, Georgia, and incidentally one which the largest city may view with envy has recently engaged the energies of the Selznick exploitation experts and W. C. Patterson, manager of the Criterian theatre of Atlanta.

The feature which the combined forces of producer and theatre made the objective of their attack was "A Regular Girl" starring Elsie Janis. Not a stone was left unturned, so to speak, in the campaign.

Atlanta newspapers, famous around the Southern circuit as nuts too hard to crack with ordinary publicity hammers, yielded column after column to a new contest on "How can a girl earn $10,000 in thirty days if thrown on her own resources." This feature was placed with the "Daily Georgian and Sunday American" and netted the paper excellent publicity through the highly entertaining stories submitted by some two hundred contestants. The suggestions ranged all the way from the invention of "ripless silk hosiery" to posing as a missing French countess and collecting a large dowry from a marriageable millionaire.

With the newspaper advertising all planned and under way, the publicity "sharps" turned their attention to other methods of getting the theatregoers' attention.

A base hospital for wounded soldiers is located at Fort McPherson not so far from Atlanta. Soldiers, sick or well, like entertainment and especially so when the show would give them another view of their overseas friend, Elsie Janis."

A special performance was given at the opening for wounded soldiers from the Base Hospital. The Commanding Officer gave leave to three hundred veterans from the several fighting divisions who now are recovering from their wounds, and transported them to the theatre in a fleet of thirty motor trucks and ambulances.

Ladies of the Federated Woman's Clubs and a delegation of uniformed workers from the Overseas Club passed out cigarettes and candy. The party was a huge success, the soldiers cheering "A Regular Girl" and especially the celluloid appearance of the star whom many of them had seen during her appearance in the engagements she played in the "army theatres" of France.

A unique teaser campaign was conducted through a mailing list of 2,000 names by means of postcards, each bearing a different hand-drawn ad. These ads were reproduced each day in newspapers for six days linking up the mailing list with the daily press matter. It so happened that Ringling Brothers' circus played Atlanta on one of the days of the "A Regular Girl" engagement at the Criterian and it was then that one of the big ideas was put into deeds.

When the daily circus parade started for its trip about the main streets, men carrying big "A Regular Girl" banners "horned in" and obtained all the benefits of the biggest event of a circus day. Of course the entire populace of Atlanta was lined up along the streets to view the circus parade and of course every person saw the "A Regular Girl" banners. A link up was effected with music stores on the music "A Regular Girl." A calliope in the parade also played this popular number. Besides this unusual publicity, the ordinary use of lithographs and billboards was not overlooked.

The Criterian has space for every size paper up to 24 sheets and all frames were utilized with either photographs or some other form of advertising display. No lobby display was used but a large banner specially printed was hung over the lobby entrance and other novelties originated.

Pulpit Accords "The Miracle Man" Unusual Favors

IN Hamilton, Ohio, the Rev. Dr. Charles Matthew Browne recently authorized publication of a statement in which he explained that he would gladly show "The Miracle Man" in his church Sunday in place of the regular service. In Louisville, Ky., the Rev. Dr. Lowell, a leading clergyman, sent an unsolicited testimonial claiming "The Miracle Man" as the best sermon preached in his city that Sunday. The Rev. Dr. David McKinney, chairman of the Law Enforcement Committee of the Cincinnati Federation of Churches, also issued a public statement on the picture.

Live Trade News of Value to Every Exhibitor

Exploitation to and in the Skies

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS" was exploited "to the skies" before and during the run of the feature at Charlotte, N. C.

Exchange Manager E. F. Dardine of Universal and the Strand theatre of Charlotte made good use of a chance visit of two privately owned aeroplanes which "blew" into the city about the time the "Right to Happiness" campaign was begun. At the same time formed by combining two internationally known circuses, arrived. The result was everybody for miles around came to town for circus day, and thousands were jammed along the streets as the parade passed.

Overhead an airplane buzzed and circled around. Then from out the sky came thousands of heralds on "The Right to Happiness," to several hundred of which were attached complimentary admissions to the Strand. A scramble followed as each box of heralds came glittering downward—and ample precaution had been taken to insure no one would be ignorant of what was happening. Each person who jumped for a herald was intent upon securing one of those "messages from Dorothy Phillips, brilliant emotional star of 'The Heart of Humanity,' regarding her newest and greatest Universal-Jewel photodrama, 'The Right to Happiness.'"

Immediately after arrangements had been completed for the airplane demonstration liberal advertising space was taken in both morning and afternoon newspapers, telling the readers to "Watch the Sky." Also, liberal free space was allowed by the papers. This advertising was considered as having a double value—that of directing attention to an exploitation stunt and that of straight display advertising for the production. About 75 per cent of the complimentary tickets were brought to the box office.

Giving the Original Poster Expert Attention

JUDGMENT in the preparation of lobby displays, rather than a blind following of a program of basing the main poster on the big feature shown inside is a policy which Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is following with marked success. He insists upon simplicity in the composition of the posters he uses and as a result has upset many traditions in the science of lobby displays, but as a result has attained a reputation in this respect for the Hippodrome.

Recently Mr. Franklin was dissatisfied with the first result of his artist's attempt to prepare the lobby display on a program running Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure," and William Farnum in "The Last of the Duanes." The attempt to feature the longer picture without overlooking the Chaplin comedy, resulted in a poster that was too crowded to suit Mr. Franklin's taste.

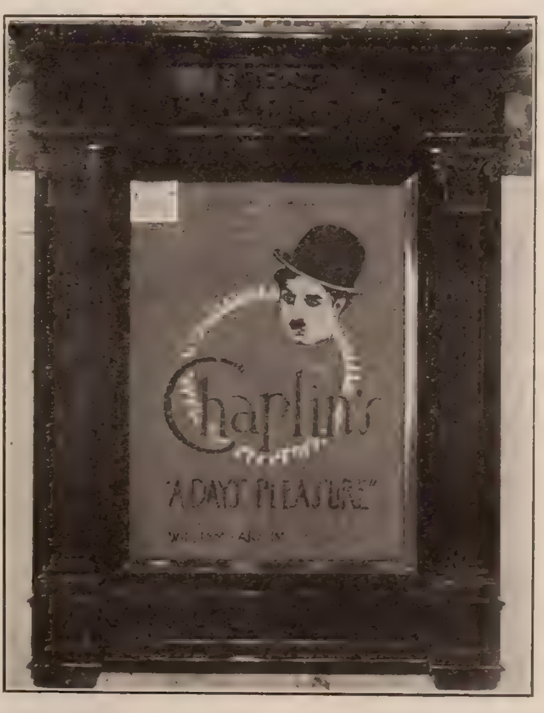
He designed one himself, devoted almost entirely to the two-reel comedy. His product contained the well known face of Chaplin with a large announcement of the Farnum feature.

"Such a poster is far preferable to one which would have given equal space to both productions," said Mr. Franklin. "Chaplin's face is enough to attract attention anywhere, and the fact that it is a new comedy of his, will make people read the entire poster even if they had to use microscopes. The business I did during the week is sufficient proof to me that I am right."

The Evolution of a Chance Remark Into a New Exploitation Idea

HOW the three great factors in modern picture presentation, manager, exchange man and newspaper may co-operate to mutual advantage is demonstrated in a recital of the sort of team work which has recently been the means of obtaining for the Lisbon theatres of Cincinnati the attention of the entire city.

The advertising stunt of which we speak has the merit of being adaptable to any theatre or community with a guarantee of front-page newspaper publicity for exhibitors who use it. It was based upon an idea for a method that would discover the names and addresses of every person in Cincinnati who had never seen a motion picture. The attention it attracted from the general public can be judged from the fact that seven people who had never been to a motion picture exhibition were reported at the box offices of the theatres.



A lobby panel which advertised both feature and comedy effectively, designed by H. B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome

The "stunt" was the outgrowth of a casual discussion of the general appeal of the screen to the masses. It was suggested that while there might be some people who had never seen a motion picture there was no way of discovering them. It was this remark that gave the idea to the motion picture editor of an afternoon paper and the Lisbon publicity man.

The "stunt" was started with a story in the photoplay column of the afternoon paper by a mention of the discussion and an invitation to readers to send in the names and addresses of any persons who had never attended a motion picture theatre. A few days later the Lisbon theatres inserted advertisements asking for the same information to be left at the box offices. Nearly three hundred names and addresses were turned in, but a little investigation cut the list down to seven—two men and five women.

The two men declared themselves to be absolutely indifferent to motion pictures. One of the women declared that as soon as she could find time she was going to a show, but at the present she was working hard all day, every day, and that nothing could appeal to her like her bed when evening came. Circumstances had prohibited the other four women from appeasing a desire to see an exhibition. All four are inmates of an old people's home. Their combined ages total 310 years, and all are in feeble health.

The loves of Letty number three
1 is a pudgy money roll
2 is a knight of royalty
And 3, an ordinary soul.

Our heroine is proud, though poor—
A struggling working-woman, etc.
She feels that she cannot endure
Her hardships and her lodging debts.

And so she heeds the suit of 1
Repenting that, she jumps to 2
And when their dual course is run
She looks around for something new.

And then her heart is touched by 3
Who is responsive to the touch
A lowly cameraman is he
Whose income doesn't count for much.

But 3 knows how to hold her hand,
And how to gaze into her eyes
Which 1 and 2 don't understand
And that's where 3 outshines these guys.

THE MORAL of this little tale

Is this: when 1 and 2 both fail,
Why don't despair—try No. 3

"That Man Belongs to Me!"

THE voice was their captain's—strange—terrible and in a flash the mob of maddened seamen remembered.

"His wife!" they whispered. "At last he has found the fiend that"—and, hushed as if in awe, they stole away.

Then Captain Otto Krug, once called "coward," even "traitor," had his hour—

"Behind the Door"

VENGEANCE - Deep as the ocean that bore him to his foe

LOVE—Gentle as his heart before it broke, fierce as the storms he battled

ADVENTURE—Luring him into a hundred perils of war on the sea

PURSUIT Of the cad who had stolen and dishonored his wife

MYSTERY—There behind the door with two souls alone—and outside strong men trembling

Such is only part of the great picturization of Gouverneur Morris' gripping novel of a he man's fight against fate

Scenic—Plantation Studio—Paramount Magazine.

Special—A holiday novelty number in three scenes is being given this week. The number opens with two ragged tots standing in front of a toy shop. They then fall asleep in a doorway. The scene dissolves into an interior where the tots see a toy-maker operate his automatons. Next, children dressed as dolls give six different dances with the scene ending with one of the "dolls" dressed to represent Sousa leading the orchestra. The scenes then cuts back to the exterior where the children have falled asleep in front of the toy shop. A policeman appears on the stage and notices the children, giving them toys he was taking home. The number is wonderfully artistic and every one of the six dances is being riotously applauded.

Feature—"A Girl Named Mary"—Marguerite Clark.

Overture—Selections from "William Tell."

Feature—"Blind Husbands" — Eric Stroheim. Preceding the screening of the feature a special prologue is given. Atmospheric settings in three sections are shown, depicting mountain peaks, a mountain resort and a valley in the Swiss Alps. All these are lighted to conform to the music of the overture. Miniature views of the Swiss Alps are projected following the overture concluding with a reading of the text of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's writings by Ruth Helen Davis. The reading terminates with lecture sentences to the ambitious and neglectful husband under the title of "Can't You See?"

Live News from the Producers

Ina Claire Becomes Metro Star

To Reproduce Her Stage Success, "Polly with a Past," on Screen

INA CLAIRE has affixed her signature to a contract whereby she will be starred by Metro Pictures Corporation in a screen version of her stage success, "Polly With A Past."

In acquiring the Belasco stage star for the screen, and in securing at the same time the picture rights to "Polly With A Past," Metro officials feel that "they have scored another coup as sensational and important as Metro's recent purchase of Vincente Blasco Ibanez's 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' for the silver sheet."

Metro's statement just issued points out that "Fine Feathers," "Old Lady 31," "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," and other dramatic successes are among the vehicles recently bought by Metro for its "fewer and better" productions.

The signing up of Ina Claire as a Metro star is made the subject of a detailed report from the Metro Pictures Corporation. This statement reads in part as follows:

"Miss Claire's prestige in the dramatic world, her youth, beauty and captivating personality, have combined to make her a star much sought after by motion picture producers; but she had turned a deaf ear to all offers until Metro came to her with the announcement that it had purchased the screen rights to 'Polly With A Past.'

"Competition that amounted almost to hectic bidding was also encountered by Metro in its purchase of 'Polly With A Past.' Several rival producing companies were in the field for this sprightly comedy by Guy Bolton and George Middleton. It was done into a stage production by David Belasco, with Miss Claire in the leading feminine role.

Ina Claire, Balasco star who has signed with Metro to be featured in her stage success "Polly With a Past"

"Metro, however, met the figure finally asked for the rights to present 'Polly With A Past' on the screen, and then launched its drive to obtain the signature of Miss Claire as a Metro star. The beautiful young actress was persuaded to her decision by her confidence that Metro is thoroughly equipped to put the play on the screen in a manner to satisfy the highest artistic standards. She was also enthusiastic over the prospect of portraying for the camera a role that she so greatly delighted in portraying on the stage."

Negotiations for Miss Claire's services were concluded by Metro officials with Arthur Butler Graham, a well-known attorney, acting in behalf of the young star. After the contracts had been signed Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., said:

"The acquisition by Metro of this gifted young actress as a star, and of 'Polly With A Past' as the vehicle for displaying her inimitable talents, is, we believe, another evidence of the desire on Metro's part to give the exhibitor only the best."

As recently stated, Metro will resume Eastern production in the early spring at its studios in West 61st street, off Columbus Circle, maintaining production on both coasts simultaneously, with Director General Karger dividing his time between New York and Los Angeles. "Polly With A Past," with Miss Claire as the star, will be one of the first productions to be made in New York.

Campaign Book Out on Hyman Attraction

The firm of Willis, Eckels & Mack, Chicago, have just prepared for Arthur S. Hyman Attractions an unusually effective campaign book on "The Penny Philanthropist," starring Ralph Morgan and Peggy O'Neil, which will be released the first of the year.

This campaign book contains newspaper advertisements of real pulling power worked out by experts who know from practical experience what the busy exhibitor needs.

Knowing that the half-tone ads seldom print satisfactorily, the producers of this campaign book have made all their ads line drawings to guarantee perfect printing.

The newspaper stories in this book have also been written with the purpose of having them printed, as there are no "fluffy" stories.

Lyons and Moran Offer First Five Reeler

The first of the five-reel comedy-dramas in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal's team of fun-flingers, will be featured will be "Everything But the Truth," Edgar Franklyn's humorous story, the screen rights of which have just been purchased from the Frank A. Munsey Co. by Universal.

For years this team confined its efforts to one-reel comedies. The clamor for their pictures became so great, however, that they began turning out two-reel films, and now comes the five-reeler.

Metro Looks Back Over the Year

Announces Policies for New Year and Some of Earlier Releases

A REVIEW of the activities of the year by Metro Pictures Corporation shows as an outstanding feature the abandonment of the program picture and the inauguration of the "fewer and better" pictures policy with what is described as "the most auspicious success." With this marked departure in policy, other important developments came which included the acquisition of stage and book successes, the signing of new stars, the final touches to the facilities of the Hollywood studios and the arrangement to resume production in the East.

In a lengthy statement, just issued, the following announcement is made: "The prospect for the New Year shows Metro with its new policy in full and prosperous swing. Its organization has been so increased and perfected as to promise even greater things. The year will witness at its start the release of no less than six big special productions and the promise of more with greater regularity than characterized the first months of 1919 when the abrupt and notable change of policy was first made.

"Thirty-three program pictures were produced by Metro during the first half of 1919 until August. In addition, five Screen Classics, Inc., special productions were presented. These included 'Why Germany Must Pay,' with an all-star cast, 'The Great Romance,' with Harold Lockwood and directed by Henry Otto, 'Shadows of Suspicion,' with Harold Lockwood, 'The Man Who Stayed At Home,' with an all star cast and the last Lockwood picture, 'A Man of Honor.'

"In the list of stars of the thirty-three Metro program-pictures during the first part of 1919 are: Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and May Allison, who are still the stars of the present Screen Classics, Inc., productions. In addition the stars during this period included Ethel Barrymore, Edith Storey, Hale Hamilton, Anna Q. Nilsson and Emmy Wehlen. The late John H. Collins, Charles Swickard, E. Mason Hopper, Harry Franklin, George D. Baker and Edwin Carewe were on the staff of directors at that time in addition to those now with Screen Classics, Inc.; namely, John Ince, Herbert Blache, Rex Ingram, Henry Otto, Ray C. Smallwood, A. D. Ripley and Jack Dillon.

"Since the inauguration of the 'fewer and better' policy three productions have been made by Screen Classics, Inc., and released through Metro. These were 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' starring Bert Lyrell, 'Please Get Married,' starring Viola Dana and 'Fair and Warmer,' starring May Allison. Six other big specials were under way at the Hollywood studios and barely missed becoming December releases. They usher in Metro's program for the year 1920. Among these are: 'Should A Woman Tell?' an original melodrama by Finis Fox, with Alice Lake as the featured player and an all-star cast; 'The Best of Luck,' a picturization of the Drury Lane melodrama with an all-star cast including Kathryn Adams, Jack Holt, Lilie Leslie and Fred Malatesta.

"About the middle of January the following productions will be released: 'The Willow Tree' from the stage fantasy of Japan by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes, starring Viola Dana; 'The Right of Way,' an adaptation by June Mathis of Sir Gilbert Parker's tale of the Canadian Northwest, starring Bert Lytell, and 'The Walk Offs,' from the Morosco stage comedy by the Hattons, starring May Allison."

Quintet-Cast in Five-Reel Goldwyn Feature

The first photoplay from the pen of Octavus Roy Cohen, "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness," now nearing completion at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., will present one of the smallest casts ever assembled for a five-reel picture, according to an announcement from the Goldwyn offices.

Madge Kennedy has the stellar role. Her leading man is John Dowers. Besides the leading players, Florence Deshon has an important role. Willard Louis and Richard Tucker are the other players who complete the quintet in "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness."

Pearl White in Fox Feature

Star's Initial Fox Production Nears Completion; Set for Release in February

PEARL WHITE has almost completed work on her first Fox production, E. Lloyd Sheldon's screen version of Frank L. Packard's story of the underworld, "The White Moll." The actress is being directed in her first Fox picture by Harry Millarde, who has as his assistant Anthony Merlo.

"The White Moll" is not a serial. It is a Fox special production. Mr. Packard is the author of "The Miracle Man," "From Now On," and other screen successes. E. Lloyd Sheldon adapted it for the screen.

Richard Travers will play opposite Miss White. Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport, William Harvey, George Puancefort, John Woodford and John P. Wade are other well-known players who will help the star make Frank L. Packard's story one of the best screen productions of the new year.

Work has been progressing at the Fox Eastern studio for some time, Harry Millarde, the director, his assistant, and Edward Weinert, the cameraman, are reported to have developed some attractive sets with unusual lighting effects. Fox Film Corporation announces that this first Pearl White production will be released in February.

According to the Fox announcement, Pearl White's resolution not to appear in serials in 1920 is a wise one, say those who have seen on the screen as much of "The White Moll" as has been completed. And to their opinion Miss White adds that never has she been as happy in her work as she is in the visualizing of Frank L. Packard's famous heroine.

Drive for Pathe "Topics"

An Extensive Newspaper Campaign Is Launched for "Topics of the Day"

A COMPREHENSIVE advertising campaign has just been launched by Pathe on "Topics of the Day," comprised of the most pointed and humorous quotations assembled by the Literary Digest from newspapers and magazines. This is the campaign, planned for the early fall, but delayed by the printers' strike, which made it inadvisable to attempt the exploitation of the Timely Films, Inc., produced at that time, it is said.

The newspaper advertising was inaugurated during the holiday week, and virtually eighty-five per cent. of the urban population of the United States was reached, it is said, through the 297 newspapers in which "Topics of the Day" copy appeared. In addition to the broad advertising campaign, the Literary Digest used its influence in the promotion work, intended for public as well as exhibitor consumption, by asking more than 500 newspapers allied with it to print publicity stories about "Topics of the Day."

In addition, two-thirds of a page of the Literary Digest of the issue of December 20 was devoted to the screen quotations. According to Pathe, "At present there is hardly a high class motion picture theatre in the United States that does not include 'Topics of the Day' in its weekly program. But it is the intention of Pathe to more than double the number of users of the unusually clever short subject, and this aim seems certain of realization within the next few weeks."

Burston Talks on New Serial

Calls "The Hawk's Trail" a "Serial De Luxe"; Tells Why He Names It So

In the advertising campaign already launched Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., presenting the fifteen episode serial "The Hawk's Trail," lays special stress on the line "The first serial de luxe." In explanation of this Mr. Burston is quoted as saying: "I hope that the line will be taken for its face value. It is more than an advertising slogan. It is a statement of fact that have cost me many thousands of dollars, months of the hardest sort of effort, frequently eighteen and twenty hours a day on a stretch, and I believe from what has been said about this King Baggot picture by all who have seen it, including the professional reviewers, that I am entitled to have that line accepted as I have stated.

"The most startling innovation of my 'serial de luxe' is the avoidance of punch endings in the sense that they leave the hero or the heroine suspended in mid air or bound to a railroad track, or such old stuff. Having a particularly high class company with a plot that promised plenty of chance for swift action I determined to give the serial fans a real surprise and in the meantime so far as the production of serials was concerned, I would as Mr. Dooley says, 'illivate it a story or two.' This I did by securing my episode suspense through the plot action rather than by means of interpolated stunts.

"In my advance notices to the trade press I promised that I would do this and I know that the statement was skeptically received. I would like, if it is not unethical, to call your attention to the trade press reviews of 'The Hawk's Trail,' because all the reviewers remarked about the difference in this respect from the usual serial construction. As you may imagine this is most gratifying, because I don't mind telling you that I believe this quality in my most ambitious production is going to open theatres to it that never before have booked a serial."

Heavy Sales on Selig Serial

Report Is Issued That 24 States Have Been Sold to Big Distributing Units

A DEAL, involving a large amount of territory, was closed this week between the Warner Brothers, who have the American and Canadian distribution rights of Selig's wild animal serial, "The Lost City," with Frank J. Hatch, representing the Hatch Enterprises. The states involved are New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C., Maryland, Delaware and West Virginia.

Mr. Hatch is said to be enthusiastic over the prospects of the ultimate success of the picture, and during a recent interview exhibited a letter which he received from his representative in Philadelphia, stating, it is said, that after a trade showing to the exhibitors of that city, he signed up seventy theatres, which includes the Stanley Circuit, out of a possible ninety-three in the city.

It is reported that twenty-four states have been sold. In addition to those acquired by the Hatch Enterprises, the First National Exhibitor's Circuit of Atlanta, Ga., have the rights for Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, North and South Carolina; the Arrow Film Corporation of Boston, Mass., has the New England rights; the Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland, Ohio, has the Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky rights.

Inquiries and letters are said to be coming into the Warner office from all over the country, not only are these from state right buyers but from first-run theatres as well, seeking information regarding this serial. The response from the trade press advertising is said to be unusual, and the indications are that the entire American and Canadian rights will be disposed of soon.

To further augment its strong exploitation campaign on "My Husband's Other Wife," third J. Stuart Blackton's feature productions for Pathe, a special one sheet is being issued by Pathe.

New State Right Firm Incorporates

F. L. Smith and Harry Owens have formed a partnership to handle state and world rights and shortly will incorporate. Offices already have been opened in Chicago and Los Angeles, the former in charge of Mr. Smith, who has been connected with the industry for fourteen years and is one of the most popular moving picture men in the east. The Los Angeles office is in charge of Mr. Owens who is equally well-known in West Coast film circles. A New York office will also be opened at once.

Messrs. Smith and Owens already have obtained the world rights to the Double Day Production Company's pictures, including a series of 24 two-reel western dramas, 15 of which are ready. The first releases will be late in February.

Big Drug Store Tie-up with "Everywoman"

Through an arrangement with A. S. Hinds, manufacturer of Hinds' Honey and Almond Cream, a country-wide tie-up of the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Special, "Everywoman," and the Hinds toilet preparations has been effected.

It is stated that the Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges have sent to each of ten thousand leading druggists in the United States a poster and circular. The poster is in five colors and is embellished with three stills, showing Viola Heming as she appears in her boudoir in the photoplay, together with a photograph of the various Hinds preparations grouped at the bottom.

Chicago "U" Man Goes to Robertson-Cole

George E. De Kruif has resigned as Chicago Publicity Manager for Universal to go with Robertson-Cole and began his publicity work for the latter on December 22nd. Mr. De Kruif has done some splendid exploitation for Universal, particularly in putting over "The Right to Happiness." He has, for nine years past, been engaged in newspaper and publicity work in Chicago. Banks Winter, who has been publicity man for Universal at Milwaukee, for sometime past, has been called to Chicago to take up Mr. De Kruif's work.

Says "The Triflers" Amuses

Universal Asserts This Picture Has Interesting Story and a Good Cast

UNIVERSAL announces that its new picture entitled "The Triflers," has the two-fold advantage of an amusing story and good cast. Universal in its report on this production singles out little Benny Alexander, the child actor, probably best known for his part in "Hearts of the World," and declares that the large salty tears that Benny sheds in his new role as the neglected child of wealthy parents "are sufficient to melt the heart of the most hardened film patron."

"The Triflers" is from the pen of Joseph Franklin Poland, and the picture is being produced under the direction of Christy Cabanne. It is a thoroughly modern story, showing the contrast in the lives of the middle class and the butterfly existence of the ultra-smart folks of any large American family. Miss Edith Roberts takes the part of Janet Randall, a pretty shop girl who is quite happy with her motor-cycle sweetheart, Dan Cassidy, until she becomes mixed up with some society doings, and one Monte Noreville, society lion, in particular.

In her role of the shop girl, yearning for a social career, Miss Roberts is said to meet with many humorous adventures. She is aided by Davis Butler in the role of the cop, and a good cast, including Forrest Stanley, Nell Craig and other well known players. This Universal picture is said to be flooded with clean and clever situations. Its laugh-provoking qualities do not depend on "slap-stick" comedy for their power, but to subtly comical presentation of the two-facedness of up-to-date society.

Neilan Gives Feature Title

"The River's End" Selected for Film Being Produced for First National

IT is definitely announced that the initial independent production by Marshall Neilan to be released through First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be "The River's End," an adaptation from James Oliver Curwood's latest novel of the same name. "The release of the film will come at the time when the story has reached the peak of the national popularity it is now enjoying," according to the announcement.

It first appeared in Good Housekeeping, and has just been placed on the stands in book form. Critics are said to have given the book exceptional reviews. "The River's End" is a story of the Royal Mounted Police, a tale of adventure and romance in the great Northwest. Marion Fairfax, who recently signed a long-term contract with Mr. Neilan, adapted Mr. Curwood's story to the screen.

While Mr. Neilan is in the north, Director Victor Heerman will supervise the making of inserts and titles at the Los Angeles studio so that there will be no delay in giving the film its final preparations. It is stated that the interiors for "The River's End" are finished, and the entire company is now at Bear Valley, California, staging various exteriors. In another week the players will journey to the Saskatchewan River in Canada, which gave Mr. Curwood the material for his story, and there the final scenes of the picture will be completed, according to reports.

Wm. Flynn's Exploits Filmed

Thrilling Events in Career of Former Secret Service Head Basis of Series

ANOTHER milestone in the progress of the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton M. Busch president, is marked by the announcement that Republic has acquired a series of eight two-reel features which relate the weird, peculiar and fascinating experiences of William J. Flynn, former chief of the United States Secret Service and now Director of Investigation of the Department of Justice.

Every one knows William J. Flynn, or has heard about him. His exploits in running down criminals have extended over a long period of years, and brought him in contact with the cleverest of criminal minds plotting against the government and the peace of the country. In fact, his life has been one incident after another, all more stirring than the wildest tales of novelists.

From this interesting career Carl Harbaugh and J. Godron Cooper, whose records as directors include a long list of successes, have taken the most noted cases and put them into screen form.

When it was planned to picturize Chief Flynn's life story, the problem arose as to who should play the leading role. After several names were considered, the producers finally decided upon Herbert Rawlinson.

Each picture is a complete story and the titles all have a box-office drawing power. They include "Chang and the Law," "The Five-Dollar Plate," "The Silkless Banknote," "Outlaws of the Deep," "The Faker," "The Poppy Trail," "The Kalda Ruby" and "The Phantom Butler."

Announcement is made by Fox Film Corporation that William Farnum will be seen in E. Lloyd Sheldon's original story, "The Challenge of the Law," which has just been purchased for the star.

Changes in Plans Delay Company's Trip South

As work progresses on the first Catherine Calvert production of Films Incorporated at the Oliver Studios on East Forty-Eighth street, Manhattan, it is apparent that the elaboration of the scenes already planned and the addition of a number of new scenes and the extension of the cast to include a number of actors, not originally included, will make it impractical for the company to start South so soon as expected.

Among the actors recently added to the cast of the production are William Black, who will take the role of the leading man's father; Jack Newton, who plays the part of a Western millionaire; and Gilbert Rooney, who is one of a group of Harvard boys figuring prominently in the action of the photoplay.

New Series of Comedies Nears Completion

The filming of the new series of comedies by the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., which will run under the name of "The Transatlantic Boarding School Girls" is nearing completion at the Epic Studios, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

In this series Alice Mann plays the feminine lead. Playing opposite Miss Mann is Freddie Howard. Working in conjunction with these two artists are a bevy of some 30 beautiful girls who are largely responsible for the "kick" in these pictures.

The series is being directed by Dale Hanshaw under the supervision of Allyn B. Carrick, and will be released on the independent market shortly.

Third Blackton Feature Set for January 4th

Pathe will inaugurate the new year with a J. Stuart Blackton feature, "My Husband's Other Wife," which will be the headliner among the releases for January 4th. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are co-starred, but receive good support from Warren Chandler and May McAvoy. Stanley Olmsted is author of the latest Blackton attraction. Pathe announces that an impressive campaign book accompanies "My Husband's Other Wife."

National to Film Six Magazine Stories

After four months' survey of the popular magazine field, the National Film Corporation of America has announced its intention of putting into picture form six of the best known magazine stories that appeared in periodicals of wide circulation during the past year. This announcement was made recently by I. Bernstein, production manager of the National, who virtually controls the purchase of the film rights for his firm.

In line with the above announcement Mr. Bernstein stated that the first of the National's magazine series of photoplays would be "Mary Minds Her Business," by George Weston, now running in serial form in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Prohibition Is Target of Sennett Comedy

Mack Sennett's latest comedy production, scheduled for release December 21st, deals with a timely subject and gives the exhibitors an opportunity for special exploitation.

The picture deals with prohibition, which is one of the leading topics of discussion at the present time. The subject is two thousand feet in length and is declared a scream from start to finish.

For those who are not familiar with the term "Speak-easy," we can best explain same by calling it a "Blind-pig." Charlie Murray, the proprietor of a hotel and a blind-pig at the same time, plays the lead. The supporting cast is Marie Prevost, Fanny Kelly, Carry Odell, Kalla Pasha, and Eddie Gribbon.

Sheep Country Setting for Mayer Picture

The sheep country of Southern California will afford most of the background for Anita Stewart's new picture, "The Fighting Shepherdess," a Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction which has just gone into production. The story deals with the embarrassments and problems which confront a girl who has been thrown by circumstances upon the mercy of a small, narrow-minded town in the West.

Wallace MacDonald is leading man and Noah Berry has a prominent role.

National Plans Soon Working

Associated Organizations Start Work January 19th

COMPLETING the nationalization of the new plan for exhibitor defense and cooperation sponsored by members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, J. D. Williams, manager, and H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of the company, with N. H. Gordon, chairman of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, returned to New York on Monday and announced that Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and Associated First National Theatres, Inc., will commence their active existence on January 19.

That is the date when the policies involved in the new plan of expansion will become operative. These include the standardization of film rentals through sub-franchises which will determine service costs by established percentages of the valuation of each negative purchased by the releasing company, exclusive exhibition rights to theatres owning sub-franchises, protection from price opposition, and the support of the entire cooperative membership whenever unfair competition threatens.

Organization of the new plan by territories has been started by the individual members, and this, it is said, will lead to an announcement early in the New Year of the identities of the great numbers of exhibitors who are now affiliating with it. The enlarged membership will, it is declared, include practically every representative independent theatre in the country. The recent association of Harry Crandall, of Washington, and Charles E. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, with Tom Moore, original franchise owner for that territory, is pointed to as an indication of the calibre of the affiliations that are being made in other sections.

Additional details of the plan of the Associated First National Pictures reveals that the franchise method will effect a great saving in distributing and sales costs. This, it is explained, will react to the mutual benefit of the producers and the exhibitor members by making available for the financial encouragement of bigger pictures money that now is absorbed by non-productive factors.

This reduction in the cost of distribution will result from the fact that the market for the releases of the Associated First National Pictures will be permanently established through sub-franchises, so that the functions of the exchanges will be largely administrative in carrying out the mechanical work of clearing houses for film.

An almost unanimous sentiment exists among exhibitors for an organized effort to maintain theatre independence, according to First National officials. This, they say, is equally true of owners of large and small houses, and seeks, for its answer, the practical possibilities of cooperative buying and cooperative exhibiting.

"Theatre owners have become weary in their efforts to determine what the future has in store for them," declares Mr. Williams. "We talked to great numbers of them on our trip, and I did not meet one exhibitor who failed to ask: 'Is this new proposition one that will mean something more than a promise to-day, and a regret to-morrow?' They want a semblance of stability in a national way. They are keenly aware of the almost hopeless position they hold as separate units, without the strength that is possible in a unity of purpose and action.

"No exhibitor who deserves the name is not fully aware that the one certain road to success in the future must be toward a condition or a plan that will provide the same measure of all-round encouragement to stars and producers that it does to the theatre owners."

General impressions formed by the three officials during their joint trip are that the small town exhibitors particularly are experimenting to a greater degree than ever before with the problem of longer runs for special feature attractions; that the bigger of the productions are gradually changing the public's attitude toward ordinary releases that do not measure up to the entertainment standards of the genuine specials, and that as a result of these altering conditions, stars and producers will have their abilities tested far beyond the present screen attainments in keeping ahead of public demand.

"It is going to result in a real test of producing and showmanship ability to keep up the present astounding volume of interest in motion pictures," says Mr. Williams. "Exhibitors are turning more and more to exploitation as the one big, feasible solution to the question of longer runs. This form of activity has brought thousands of new patrons to the theatre, and now it is the responsibility of the exhibitors and the producers to hold this new business, and convert it into a source of added regular income.

"In every territory we visited there were ample evidences that the motion picture is taking on a new dignity. The big specials of the last year, the new theatres, with their superior equipment, the closer attention exhibitors are giving to music and to their entire programs, all are accomplishing wonders for the industry, and of which New York as the so-called center of the motion picture business, has little understanding."

Double Premier To Glaum Film

J. Parker Read Production Scores; "Desert Gold" Has Many Bookings

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S second Louise Glaum special production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," began its career last week in Chicago by a full week day and date engagement in the Boston and Rose theatres, two of the Harry Moir chain under the general management of W. C. Dineen. Mr. Dineen had booked this production on sight for a two weeks' engagement at the Alcazar theatre; but so strong was his belief in the power of the production that he cancelled out of one of his other houses one of the biggest of the recognized feminine stars, thereby making two houses available for simultaneous presentation of the picture.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the distributor, announces the immediate success of this Louis Joseph Vance story which has been produced by Mr. Read with all of the distinction and richness that characterized his immensely popular "Sahara."

In the Chicago territory, where the Hodkinson sales organization first had a look at the New York home office sample print first run bookings have been contracted for by the Palm theatre, Rockford; Star, Elgin; the Mirror, Moline; the Majestic, Bloomington; the Orpheum, Galesburg; the Fox, Aurora; the Majestic, La Salle, and the following Chicago theatres, the Gold, the 20th Century, Vista, Pickford, Vendome, La Salle, Pine Grove, Bryn Mawr, Karlov, Crown, Paramount, Lakeside, Douglas, Madison Square, The Hub, Hamlin, New Apollo and Avon.

William Sievers closed an immediate contract for early presentation of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" at his new Grand Central, St. Louis, and the Missouri first run bookings are now in full swing in the adjacent cities. The new Louise Glaum production has also been booked for early first run showing at the Opera House, Jamestown, N. Y.; the Jefferson, Auburn, N. Y., and the Signal Amusement Co.'s big house at Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Desert Gold" is also reported by the Hodkinson offices as still getting many bookings, and fulfilling all promises.

One exhibitor, for example, says: "Everybody told me I was crazy when I paid $500 for this picture in my little town and I ran it and made a clean $1,000 profit. If that is a sign of craziness I want to remain in the same condition and wish to ask you to let me know well in advance when your next Zane Grey picture is coming."

Among the important bookings of "Desert Gold" announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the last few days are: C. W. Midgeley's American theatre, Oakland, Calif.; the Unique, El Paso. Tex.; the Grubel Brothers' Electric theatres in Joplin, Mo.; St. Joseph, Mo.; Kansas City, Kan., and Springfield, Mo.; the Regent, Muskegon, Mich.; the Liberty, Davenport, Ia.; the Union Avenue, Portland, Ore.; the Regent, Toledo, O.; the White Way, Mansfield, O.; the Wysor Grand, Muncie, Ind.; the Isis, Glendive, Mont.; the Lona, Sedalia, Mo.; the Iris, Miles City, Mont.; the Federal, Salem, Mass.; the Royal, Waco, Texas.

Utica, N.Y. Lifts Sunday Ban

Robertson-Cole Takes Advantage and Books Downtown Houses on First Day

THE Robertson-Cole Company announces that the main downtown section of Utica, N. Y., was a unit in the exhibition of Robertson-Cole's pictures on a recent Sunday, when the ban on Sunday pictures was lifted. This achievement, according to the Robertson-Cole report, was due to the foresight of C. A. Saunders, a salesman with headquarters in the Robertson-Cole, Albany, N. Y. exchange.

How Mr. Saunders accomplished the reported picture "clean-up" for his organization is made the subject of a recent report received from the offices of the Robertson-Cole Company. The report follows in part:

"Saunders made it his business to be 'on the job' for a particular reason. He knew all the theatre managers were to be there, waiting for the verdict. His 'dope' went over as he had planned. A moment after the decision Saunders button-holed one after another of the local managers and signed them up for Robertson-Cole pictures for the opening day. As the time was short and the offerings very alluring, each of the managers of the four main houses in Utica signed up for a picture.

"So the picture fans who turned out in large numbers on that first Sunday found the whole town—so far as its leading houses were concerned—to be a unit for Robertson-Cole. The Colonial Theatre played Sessue Hayakawa in 'The Gray Horizon;' the Majestic Theatre played 'Poor Relations;' the De Luxe Theatre, 'Better Times;' and the Alhambra Theatre, 'The Other Half.' All these last three pictures star ZaSu Pitts, the little serio-comic star, who is being managed by Robertson-Cole, and who shortly is to be seen in 'Seeing It Through,' the new Brentwood picture."

"TheWhirlwind"Gets Notice

Alperstein of Allgood Corp. Asserts Many State Righters Make Inquiries

"NEVER in the history of serials has there ever been such a country-wide demand as exists today," says Mr. A. A. Alperstein, general manager of Allgood Pictures Corporation, "for installment stories, especially of the genuinely good kind." Mr. Alperstein further states that the offices of the corporation have received a large number of inquiries from state rights buyers for territory, terms, prices, etc., on 'The Whirlwind,' featuring Charles Hutchinson.

"It seems that the country has gone serial crazy for among the inquiries received are letters telling of certain houses now running a different serial as often as four and five nights a week, some running a chapter of a different serial every night," continues the Alperstein statement.

"That 'The Whirlwind' will surpass in thrills and stunts our former offering, 'The Great Gamble,' released by Pathe is proven on the screen by the unbelievable stunts performed by Charles Hutchinson. Either Hutchison doesn't care two whoops for his life or else the man is utterly without nerves is the only way one can describe the risks this star takes in 'The Whirlwind,' says Mr. Alperstein.

"The Whirlwind" was written and produced by Joseph A. Golden, producer of "The Great Gamble." Mr. E. S. Manheimer is the foreign sales representative. The main offices of the Allgood Pictures Corporation are in the Longacre Bldg., New York.

"Oil" Has Capable Direction

Guy Empey Gathers Well-Known Workers in Every Department for Production

GUY EMPEY, whose next photoplay "Oil" has been in work at the Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, since December 15, has gathered around him a group of film folk notable in all departments.

The direction of the picture is in the hands of Wilfrid North who became well known to the industry through his many years with Vitagraph, for which company he was supervising director at the time he left to join the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation. It was Mr. North who directed "The Undercurrent," the present Empey Special Attraction which is now being distributed by Select Pictures Corporation. Associated with Mr. North in the filming of "Oil" are Phil Quinn, Assistant Director; Harry Lee, Studio Manager, and Herbert Messmore, Technical Director. The camera work is in charge of Thomas F. Malley, another recruit from Vitagraph. James Fleming is Molloy's assistant, and Eugene Morin is in charge of still photography.

Florence Evelyn Martin is again playing the leading female role and is practically co-starring with Guy Empey. Portraying some of the more important roles in "Oil" are a trio of actors well known to both stage and screen in the persons of Templar Saxe, William Eville, and Harry Burkhardt. Saxe and Eville play the roles of a couple of crooks, partners, who contribute very substantially to both the comedy and drama of "Oil." Mr. Burkhardt's role is that of a mining engineer and it likewise runs all through the picture.

In "Oil" Guy Empey declares he will present a photoplay distinctly different from anything he has done before. Although the piece is a true drama, it is interlarded with comedy.

Plays Up Cast of "Sky-Eye"

Sol Lesser Points Out Names of Aviators in Cast Well-Known to Public

A STATEMENT recently issued by the Sol Lesser Exchange calls attention to the fact that names, well-known to those that follow the exploits of the air-men, are listed in the cast of the "Sky-Eye," the six-reel aerial feature being distributed on the state-right basis by the Sol Lesser organization.

One of the most prominent members is Harold J. Peterson, one of the real dare-devils of the sky, who was recently captured and held for ransom by Villa and his Mexican bandits. It is asserted that Peterson is seen in this picture to good advantage, not as an actor, but in the performance of some highly thrilling stunts.

Lieutenant Russel J. Hunt in the part of "Sky-Eye," however, is said to lead the field in his performance of hazardous escapades. Hunt took his life in his hands every second during the production, it is claimed, and enacted some "Hair-raising" stunts. Some of his other feats include a fist-fight in mid-air, the leap from plane to plane, the jump from a plane to a swiftly moving train and others equally hazardous, it is said. Lieutenant C. C. Nutt, as Lieutenant Fordyce, was also prominent in the accomplishment of some dangerous feats.

Many inquiries are reported to have been received from state-right buyers in reference to "Sky-Eye." The Sol Lesser Exchange of New York has plans under way for distribution in that city and expects to announce an opening at one of the Broadway houses very shortly. In addition to the many exploitation tie-ups announced, several more of importance are said to be now under way.

Big Aerial Feature Screened

"The Great Air Robbery," Universal Film, Opens in Los Angeles Dec. 28

"THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY," Universal's big aerial feature picture, starring Ormer Locklear of the United States Army Air Service, will have its premier opening at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, commencing the week of December 28th.

It is reported that a committee of representative flying men from New York recently viewed a special showing of this picture at the Universal Broadway office. The party is said to have included Mr. Lawrence Driggs, president of the American Flying Club, the leading aviation organization of this country; Mr. Cole Younger of the contest committee of the recent trans-continental flight, and Mr. Richardson, publicity director for the Curtiss Airplane Company. In the gathering were seen, it is stated, "Ted" Parsons, French ace with thirty-seven planes to his credit; "Scotty" Campbell, with a string of boches, and Dean Lamb, British ace.

The flyers are reported to have pronounced the "Great Air Robbery" the finest aerial moving picture production they had ever witnessed. It is said that they praised it for being free from the technical flying errors found in other air pictures.

"The Great Air Robbery" has a gripping story running throughout, the hold-up of the midnight aerial mail, leading to many sensational air exploits, to which Francelia Billington and an admirable cast lend excellent support. Ormer Locklear performs one of the most hazardous feats known to present-day aviation by jumping from one speeding airplane to another.

FAR from being doubtful in theme, here is a real heart-appeal picture —the same honesty of sentiment that moved many, many thousands of people when they read "Oats and the Woman," that remarkable Fanny Hurst story from which this picture was made.

FOR such a story it was necessary to find an actress whose talents and personality would flawlessly picture the anguish of soul thru which our heroine has to pass by reason of youth's great mistake.

IN FRANCELIA BILLINGTON this actress was found and Universal offers you "THE DAY SHE PAID" with the conviction that your every audience will completely sympathize with our heroine's spirit of sacrifice and will thoroughly enjoy the picture.

Last Equity Franchise Is Disposed Of

The last territorial franchise for the productions of Equity Pictures Corporation was disposed of last week when T. E. Larson secured the rights for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Missouri and left New York for the middle west to establish offices.

"Eyes of Youth" will be the first release. Offices are being opened now at Dallas, Kansas City and St. Louis, with branches in other localities.

Mr. Larson has incorporated a new organization for the distribution of Equity productions which has been titled Peacock Productions Company, of which Mr. Larson will be general manager.

Mr. Larson's headquarters will be in the Majestic Theatre Building, Tulsa, Okla., but he will act in the capacity of general traveling manager.

F. P.-Lasky British Unit Chooses First Subject

The first production of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., will be Marie Corelli's "The Sorrow of Satan," and it will be directed by Hugh Ford. This dual announcement was made Monday at the office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where it was also stated that Mr. Ford would leave for London some time next month, starting work about the first of February.

The production will be filmed at the new London studio of the British company with the exception of certain scenes which will be made in the South of France. No announcement of the players who will be seen in the production is made further than that the entire cast will be English.

"$1,000,000 Reward" Is Spectacular Film

Harry Grossman's production, "$1,000,000 Reward," is reported to possess interiors replete with lavishly rich decorations. E. Douglas Bingham, studio manager, is represented as the one responsible for the unusual character of the settings used in this serial. Costly antiques, or their clever reproductions, adorn the vast spaces of magnificent halls and chambers, it is reported, while reproductions of paintings and portraits of the masters are seen on the walls. According to announcements, both decorations and furnishings bear a stamp of magnificence that is unusual.

Pathe Cites Progress for 1919

Has Increased Monthly Releases, and Made Big Acquisitions

THE growth of the Pathe feature business during 1919 is reviewed by Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in a statement just issued. From the beginning of January of 1919, the Pathe feature department has grown rapidly, and, with the New Year about to be ushered in, Mr. Brunet asserts the last twelfth month has been the greatest in the annals of Pathe's feature business.

In outlining Pathe's feature progress from last January, Mr. Brunet calls attention to the fact that during that month only one feature picture was released by the distributing organization. "'The Midnight Stage', starring Frank Keenan, was Pathe's first release of the year," said Mr. Brunet. "In February we followed this up with another Keenan production, 'Todd of the Times' and Baby Marie Osborne in 'The Old Maid's Baby.'

"Since February we have issued such big box-office winners as 'Common Clay' and 'The Cry of the Weak' with Fannie Ward; 'Oh Boy' with June Caprice and Creighton Hale, a Capellani special; 'The Profiteers' with Fannie Ward; 'The World Aflame', Frank Keenan's great special; 'The Thirteenth Chair' a visualization of Bayard Veiller's master stage drama; 'The Virtuous Model', with Dolores Cassinelli; 'A Damsel in Distress', a screen version of P. G. Wodehouse's Saturday Evening Post serial story; 'The Gay Old Dog', Hobart Henley's first production for Pathe; 'A Woman of Pleasure', Jesse D. Hampton's inaugural Pathe special; 'Dawn', one of J. Stuart Blackton's most artistic offerings; and 'The Prince and Betty', with William Desmond as star, which is also a Hampton attraction.

"During the last year there became allied with Pathe some of the foremost producers of feature motion pictures in the industry,—Edgar Lewis, J. Stuart Blackton, Jesse D. Hampton, Hobart Henley and Edwin Carewe. Added to this aggregation, there are Albert Capellani, whose work is known to every exhibitor in the United States; Leonce Perret, creator of 'The Thirteenth Chair' and other big Pathe features; Hal E. Roach, who is producing the Harold Lloyd series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, and the one-reel Holin comedies, in which 'Snub' Pollard has the leading role. Mrs. Sidney Drew has been signed to produce a series of comedies based on Julian Street's stories 'After Thirty' in which John Cumberland, star of 'The Gay Old Dog' will be featured.

"Edgar Lewis and Edwin Carewe will not be introduced to Pathe patrons until 1920. Mr. Lewis has completed 'Other Men's Shoes', a film version of Andrew Soutar's celebrated novel, which will be released February 1st. Edwin Carewe will make his debut on the Pathe schedule, with 'The Web of Deceit', starring Dolores Cassinelli which is booked for release on January 18.

"Pathe enters the new year with some of the brightest stars of the screen, including June Caprice, Dolores Cassinelli, Marjorie Rambeau, Blanche Sweet, John Cumberland, Robert Gordon, Sylvia Breamer, 'Snub' Pollard, and Frank Keenan. Then there will be the inimitable Harold Lloyd, whose two-reel comedies are being extremely cordially received through the country.

"Large plans have been made for each of these stars. What Pathe has done in 1919 is a matter of record. Its feature business has many times exceeded that of other years, due to the high class product, the expert salesmanship employed in its distribution and the unusually competent exploitation material furnished with each feature."

Al. Christie—and the Public Taste

Comedy Producer Tells Something of Plans and Observations

THE findings resulting from nine years' observation will be put into effect by Al Christie in his 1920 comedy output.

In gauging public demand, the comedy producer has found that many things must be taken into consideration. He recently said in an interview:

"Does the public want to be entertained with a diverting little story about human people, or does it want to laugh hilariously at a lot of hokum and gags. That's the question which directors of moving picture comedies have asked themselves a thousand times. That's what I have asked myself for the entire three years that we have been making Christie Comedies and I am frank to admit that I do not know yet.

"Nine years ago when I began directing pictures, I started out making the type of comedy which we are still producing, light stories of young people, leaving out the so-called funny disguises, the rougher forms of alleged humor, the 'hokum' and the 'gags.'

"When we started Christie Comedies as an independent brand, we still followed this ideal. We gave them stories first and laughs second. When the comedies were first shown by exhibitors, most exhibitors were skeptical. They sat back in their theatres and failed to hear any bursts of hilarity. There were no 'stomach laughs' and the exhibitor failed to be impressed. I always maintained that 'the loud laugh betokens the empty head.'

"It was different with the public. They appreciated being given diverting little stories which left them with something in addition to the remembrance of laughs. Once the exhibitor was sold on the proposition, it was much easier to please the public. All of which leads me to believe that what the exhibitor likes is not always a criterion of public taste.

"Another comedy director asked me the other day, 'Are you going to make the same kind of comedies this year?' and I said I really didn't know, because we continually hear the same thing ringing in our ears: 'The public wants to laugh,' 'The public wants to laugh.' So as an experiment we have given them laughs. We have just finished a two-reel comedy which is a bubble of laughs all the way through. It is true it lacks in plot what some of the previous comedies had. If you start out by telling a story you can't stop to inject a lot of hokum. But we tried it and now we'll see whether they really want it or not.

"Then the other director said, 'Well, this must be the answer to your scheme of comedy making. You established your own type of comedy alone and now you've got five other directors working under you, all making comedies in your own school of methods.'

"Perhaps so. We'll see in 1920. Unconsciously, while building comedies around plots we have found ourselves making a star system for comedy, something which was entirely unlooked for and unsought. For example take the people we presented in comedies in 1919. People whose faces are known to hundreds of thousands of regular picture theatre fans, Fay Tincher, Alice Lake, Edith Roberts, Colleen Moore, Eddie Barry, Earl Rodney, Neal Burns, Molly Malone and others in two-reel comedies; Bobby Vernon, Dorothy Devore, Ethel Lynne, Jimmie Harrison, Jay Belasco, Patricia Palmer, Helen Darling, Vera Steadman, and others in one-reel releases. Next year will see some of the old standbys and other new faces. They will all be young people in little stories of real life."

Fox Issues Resume of Past Work

Cites Industry's Beginnings and Fox Stars and Productions

IN a lengthy statement just issued by William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, a brief summary of the beginnings of the picture industry is included and mention is made of those productions which are regarded by the president of the Fox Film as the supreme achievements of that organization throughout the year just drawing to a close. The most pertinent of the material has been selected from the report and is submitted in the following:

"Looking backward, we find that this marvelous industry had as the germ of its inception a toy—the zoetrope. Imagine this toy, a circular contrivance with many slits, through which the beholder gazes and sees figures in motion.

"Next there is a series of cameras photographing racehorses and following that comes the single camera with the strip of film. During this time motion pictures are looked upon as was the zoetrope. Comes then the producer, who sees possibilities for artistic development and financial income in the motion picture. He surrounds himself with experts, who make many improvements.

"As the result of this work single reel productions are made and offered to the public, which shows little interest in them because there is lack of continuity—lack of story. The producer loses money, is ridiculed; but he has faith in the industry. He continues to put his money into motion pictures. He produces comedies. The public smiles and patronizingly refers to these showings as 'the movies.'

"On the heels of these single reel comedies come playlets with a thread of a story in them. The public shows interest. The single-reel feature becomes a two-reeler, and from that is gradually extended until there appears the five-reeler, which contains a melodramatic story. And in that melodramatic story we have the beginning of the success of motion pictures.

"From the beginning Fox Film Corporation followed the policy of giving the public what it wanted. Abraham Lincoln said: 'You can fool some of the people all the time and all of the people some of the time; but you cannot fool all of the people all the time.' The showman above all other business people, knows this is true. The public cannot be fooled on amusements. It cannot be led astray morally. If a play lacks the right moral tone the public will show its disapproval by not patronizing it.

"One of its greatest achievements has been the remarkable screening of Henry W. Longfellow's immortal poem, 'Evangeline.' This I consider a milestone in the path of progress for motion pictures. It faithfully follows the poem. Its photography is perfect. It is splendidly told. The National Board of Review gave a showing of 'Evangeline' for noted educators and distributed questionnaires asking for their unbiased opinion of the production. They were unanimous in pronouncing it one of the most beautiful picture plays ever shown.

"One of our best successes has been 'Checkers,' adapted from the famous story of Henry M. Blossom, and ably directed by Richard Stanton, with an all-star cast.

"To my mind, a star who has done tremendous good to motion pictures is William Farnum. Those who have seen him in such productions as 'The Lone Star Ranger,' 'Wolves of the Night,' 'The Last of the Duanes,' and 'Wings of the Morning,' have seen the cleanest, the best and the strongest that can be shown in motion pictures.

"Pearl White is another star in whom Fox Film Corporation takes great pride. Her first production as a Fox star is 'The White Moll,' an adaptation of the story by Frank L. Packard, author of 'The Miracle Man.' Heretofore Miss White has been seen as a star in serials. Now she will come into her own as a dramatic star of power and charm.

"During the coming year there will be a great elaboration of the Sunshine Comedies. The Singer Midgets have been engaged to appear in these features, and we also have Clyde Cook, the famous Hippodrome comedian.

"Captain Bud Fisher has some splendid ideas in view for the Mutt and Jeff cartoons, which, during 1920, will give motion picture patrons more surprise and merriment than ever before."

Realart Reviews Work To Date

Says Releases Have Met Substantial Success at All Locations

IN a lengthy statement recently issued the Realart Pictures Corporation reviews the work of the organization up to the present, and announces that the success of the productions already released has vindicated the claims originally made to turn out products that would bring big returns to the box-offices of Realart exhibitors. Excerpts from the statement are given, in part, in the following paragraphs:

"Three weeks after Realart Pictures Corporation had appeared on the horizon the organization had signed up three famous stars, had bought a long list of famous plays and stories and had begun arrangements for the contracting of two of the best known directors in the country. Exhibitors throughout the nation who heard the promise of the corporation responded with a million and a half dollars of contracts before the first picture was completed.

"Proving that their program was more than a theory, Realart gave the industry as its first release 'Soldiers of Fortune,' a picturization of the famous novel of Richard Harding Davis. This photoplay in its world premiere at Washington, D. C., broke all existing records at Tom Moore's Garden theatre. Thus in its first stroke Realart vindicated its belief that the most famous stories bring the greatest crowds. Mr. Moore extended his showing of Realart pictures from one week to five. 'Soldiers of Fortune' continues to break records in many other cities, and has been acclaimed by many reviewers and exhibitors."

The second special production released by Realart is also a well known story, of a type especially adapted to the peculiar psychology of the restless times. "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production, adapted from the French novel by Gaston Leroux, has proved to be a product that is diverting and perplexing at the same time, and in this respect is particularly satisfying to the average taste. The Realart report continues: "'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' followed the success of 'Soldiers of Fortune' by shattering the box-office record of Moore's Rialto theatre upon its first Washington presentation."

In "Anne of Green Gables" the producing company has filmed a story particularly appealing to girls and young women. "'Anne of Green Gables' has proved a winner, and in many instances it has shattered box-office records of long standing," declares the Realart announcement.

"'Erstwhile Susan' is based upon the novel 'Barnabetta,' by Helen R. Martin. It has followed upon the wake of the successful and widely advertised stage run of the play with Mrs. Fiske in the leading role. At the Rialto theatre, New York, 'Erstwhile Susan' played a solid week to capacity houses and drew uniformly favorable criticism from newspaper reviewers."

Another production to be released by Realart is "The Fear Market," adapted from the stage play of the same name by Princess Troubetzkey. This play had a run on Broadway four years ago. Realart is expecting the same substantial response for this story as has come to its photoplays previously released.

"Bunk Serial" Period Has Come to Close

George Wiley, producer of "The Woman in Grey," a new fifteen-episode serial starring Arline Pretty with Henry G. Sell, has issued a statement in which he declares that the day of the "bunk serial" is over.

"The serials of the past," said Mr. Wiley, "were on the whole a conglomeration of would-be thrills and dare-devil stunts (of the camera) held together, or rather not held together, by a weak and illogical story. Acting and worthy direction were never considered essential, and the type of serials we have been seeing were a natural result. 'A Woman in Grey,' our new serial, was produced with the same care and on the same elaborate plan as a five-reel feature." The serial is now being sold to State right buyers.

Realart Film Plays a Return Broadway Date

"When Broadway asks to see a picture the second time, that picture is the goods!"

So says John S. Woody, General Manager of Realart Pictures Corporation in commenting on the second Broadway showing of "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production which was the feature picture at the big Capitol Theatre several weeks ago. This adventure story also was shown last week at B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre.

At the same time Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" was the feature photoplay at the Rivoli Theatre. The simultaneous occupation by Realart films of two Broadway houses sets a significant record for a new producing company, declare Realart officials.

Dooley Comedies to be Released by Tyrad

The Johnny Dooley Film Comedies announce the signing this week of contracts whereby the entire world's rights on the Johnny Dooley comedies have been acquired by Tyrad Pictures, Inc. The Johnny Dooley comedies will be sold on the State Rights basis, and the first comedy is to be released January 15th. Four pictures are already completed and the present schedule calls for a two-reel comedy release every month.

Such noted players as Sophie Tucker, the queen of jazz, Martha Mansfield, the Ziegfeld Folly Beauty, and Gilda Gray, the shimmy champion, will be seen with Johnny Dooley in his first screen offering "Some Mind Reader," which will be released January 15th.

Deitrich-Beck Sign Up Marie Shotwell

Marie Shotwell, who recently completed an important role in Frank G. Hall's production, "Chains of Evidence" under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald, was signed last week by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., for a role in Doris Kenyon's next starring vehicle, "The Harvest Moon" under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, former director of Marguerite Clark. Work starts this week at the Leah Baird Studio, Fort Lee.

Warner Shifts His Type of Roles

From a Society-Man to Adventurer to Prove His Versatility

H. B. Warner has experienced a decided revolution in the manner of roles that he has been called upon to enact, says a recent report from the offices of Robertson-Cole. From high society roles, such as he assumed in "A Fugitive From Matrimony," Mr. Warner has swung around to the part of an adventurer in his current Robertson-Cole production, "Haunting Shadows," directed by Henry King and produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

"A Fugitive From Matrimony" was a society drama, the kind that Warner is said to register unusually well in. Hampton, to prove that Warner is a most versatile screen-actor, cast him as an adventurer in the forthcoming Robertson-Cole production, "Haunting Shadows."

An unbroken mystery which is sustained until the last scene of the picture, is said to make "Haunting Shadows" "one of the best melodramatic screen stories of the day in which action is the by-word." This screen offering is based upon "The House of a Thousand Candles," written by Meredith Nicholson.

The locale is Indiana, where, years before the story opens, an elderly man named Glenarm built a castle of the Tudor period, which he was not able to finish fully before his death. He leaves a will to the effect that his grandson, John Glenarm, must live for one year in the castle if he expects to share in the estate. Glenarm, a young man of brave and adventurous mind, likes nothing better and moves in.

The very first night he is in the house, as he is dining, a wine glass is splintered in his hand by a bullet from an unseen foe. This is only the beginning of many strange happenings. Mysterious enemies search the place by day and by night. Even a young woman whom Glenarm falls in love with is a mysterious personage. She attends a girl's school which is nearby, and only after many weeks does Glenarm learn that she also is regarded as another heir to the estate.

There is a striking climax to the picture in the hour when Glenarm, assisted by two faithful friends, is giving battle to his foes in the great hall of the castle, just as some English lord might have done centuries ago, in just such a building. A happy and acceptable ending does not appear until the very conclusion of this melodramatic picture it is said.

Producer Hampton and Director King have surrounded Mr. Warner with a good cast, including Charles Mailes, Edward Peil, Frank Lanning, Florence Oberle, Harry Kendall, Marguerite Livingston, Martin Devereux, Patrica Fox and Charles French.

I am willing to stake the reputation of my studios on "Haunting Shadows," declared Mr. Hampton in his report to officials of Robertson-Cole. It is an ideal Warner story and he sure makes good in his new line of work. In making this picture we had one eye on the box office and the other on quality of production and we have accomplished both.

"There are all kinds of exploitation and advertising possibilities in this next Warner picture. This will make it a money-getter and a rapid seller. It has the real punch in the story and with the cast that supports Warner, a new epoch in motion picture beauty is born to the world."

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, says that the avalanche of requests for the next Warner releases have been more than twenty-five per cent. over his last production, "A Fugitive From Matrimony."

Goldwyn Defines New Policies

Discusses Production, Exploitation and Sales Methods

IN a statement just issued for publication, Goldwyn Pictures defines its policies for the coming year as regards its production, exploitation and sales methods and devotes special attention to the standards that are to be followed in the actual producing of its 1920 features. The statement follows in full:

"Recognizing that every picture must stand on its own merits, no matter what the prestige of the company distributing it, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has determined to make each release of the coming year a genuine special. This means, according to the statement received from the Goldwyn offices this week, that everyone connected with the Goldwyn producing force, from the director to the player in the least conspicuous role, will be impressed with the necessity of turning out pictures of the highest quality and not the product of a machine-like system.

"The lesson of the past year, as interpreted by Goldwyn officials, is that the greatest photoplays have been the result of individual effort unchecked by time restrictions and the limitations necessarily imposed on a director who is working to keep pace with a rigid release schedule. Step by step, the organization built by Goldwyn, has been developed in a way to make possible the dream of a producer who has perfect motion pictures as his aim and knows that they cannot result from factory methods.

"Goldwyn's great spectacles of recent months, Geraldine Farrar in 'The World and Its Woman' and 'Flame of the Desert,' were placed unreservedly in the hands of Reginald Barker, who worked in his own manner, with the unexcelled resources of the Culver City Studios at his disposal.

Geoffrey Nye, who has been appointed far eastern representative for Goldwyn Distributing Corp.

"With the added facilities consequent upon the establishment of a producing force in the East, it has become possible for Goldwyn to handle more pictures than ever, without the studio space being crowded, but the production schedule will not be increased. The producing policy is to treat each picture as though it were the only photoplay being made by the organization. If more than the customary time is required to get the desired results, the stages are at the disposal of the director as long as he needs them.

"The 'Special' idea also will be carried through in the distribution and exploitation of the picture, which in every instance will be backed by a campaign prepared by Goldwyn to meet the demands of the particular photoplay. In offering the productions to buyers, Goldwyn follows the system whereby an exhibitor is expected to choose whatever attraction appeals to him." "Quality not quantity" is announced by Goldwyn as its motto for the coming year.

Role of Tarkington's "Edgar" Is Filled

Goldwyn announces that E. Mason Hopper has found the ideal boy to interpret Edgar in the Booth Tarkington series of twelve two-reel comedies to be produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Work on the first of the pictures was started at the Culver City Studios last week.

The choice of the director is Johnny Jones, who is said to fulfill the detailed description of Edgar supplied by Mr. Tarkington. His experience as an interpreter of youthful characters, it is asserted, assures his ability to handle this important role successfully.

San Francisco to Be Setting for Comics

Three Flanagan and Edwards comedies, which are filmed by the National for state rights release, will be made in San Francisco during January, 1920, according to I. Bernstein, production manager.

Name of Locklear Will Exploit Aerial Film

Carl Laemmle, in presenting Lieut. Locklear in the big aerial feature, "The Great Air Robbery," believes that the exhibitors will have the benefit of capitalizing on Locklear's popularity on account of the great drawing power of his name. Universal officials feel that this Universal production should prove a big money maker for all houses booking it. "It is certain," says the Universal announcement, "it will bring home to the public thrills which it has never experienced before." This picture is the one in which Locklear performs the hazardous feat of changing planes in mid-air.

Olive Tell to Star for Jans Pictures, Inc.

Jans Pictures, Incorporated, this week announced the name of the first star to be featured in the photodramas they will begin producing at once. Miss Olive Tell, who is playing on the speaking stage in Morosco's "Civilian Clothes," is the young lady they have signed.

Miss Tell is probably best known to film fans for her work in such features as "To Hell with the Kaiser!" and "Secret Strings." She began her screen career as a member of the Empire Mutual All Star Company. B. A. Rolfe will direct Miss Tell.

Gives Trade Showing of "Erstwhile Susan"

W. H. Willard, of Realart's Chicago office, held a private showing of "Erstwhile Susan," featuring Constance Binney, on December 12th, to a large gathering of showmen.

"'Erstwhile Susan' was already announced for its first Chicago presentation at the Playhouse on December 14th, but such was the result of country-wide reports on this new motion picture drawing card that the Chicago office deemed it inadvisable to wait even the two days that intervened," says the Realart report.

"The bookings on 'Erstwhile Susan' are reported to be gratifying as the result of the screening."

Another D. W. Griffith girl has come to the front as a leading lady in the selection of Mary Vittitoe, who will be known professionally hereafter as Mary Texas, for the leading feminine role in ex-bandit Emmett Dalton's production, "When a Man's a Pal."

Equity Feature Progressing

H. Somborn Says "The Forbidden Woman" Possesses Some Very Striking Settings

HERBERT K. SOMBORN, president of Equity Pictures Corporation is said to be in Los Angeles at the Garson Studios, Inc., watching the progress of Clara Kimball Young's second Equity production "The Forbidden Woman," by Lenore J. Coffee, a former Los Angeles newspaper woman.

Mr. Somborn is enthusiastic in his expressed opinion of results obtained by producer Harry Garson, and his technical staff. In a letter received at the Equity offices, Aeolian Hall, Mr. Somborn states, "I consider that in scenic equipment, costuming, cast, and in all that goes to make a great screen production, as well as its wonderful story, 'The Forbidden Woman' will be the banner attraction of the new year."

In "The Forbidden Woman," one of the most striking features are the sets. One of these sets shows an apartment, half library and half living room, decorated with the trophies of a big game hunter and the mementos of many athletic successes.

Clara Kimball Young, with her manager and director, Harry Garson, are reported to be in San Francisco at work on exterior scenes for "The Forbidden Woman." This production will be given to the public through Equity Pictures Corporation as Miss Young's first offering for the year 1920.

Many in Love-Letter Contest

Robertson-Cole Publicity Stunt for "The Beloved Cheater" Is a Success

ROBERTSON-COLE CO. reports that as an answer to Robertson-Cole's prize contest for the best love letter sent to Lew Cody, star of the January Robertson-Cole picture, "The Beloved Cheater," more than 3,500 missives from all sections of the country have already been received at the New York office. So that the judges will be absolutely fair in picking the winners of the $500 prizes, officials of Robertson-Cole are having these letters typewritten and numbered; officials of the company will retain the originals, and no means of identification will be given those who are to pass upon the merit of the contestants, it is said. Judges for the contest will be announced shortly, and awards will be made as soon as all of the letters are read.

Mr. Cody, in speaking of the plan, said: "The picture, 'The Beloved Cheater,' I am sure will be greatly benefitted by the additional publicity these letters will add and I am of the opinion that Robertson-Cole has made good its boast to make it the best exploited production of the new season."

"The Beloved Cheater" is the first of the Robertson-Cole productions made by Gasnier. The story was chosen and William Christy Cabanne, who directed the picture, was given the script and told to make the best picture possible. Lew Cody is supported by a good cast led by Eileen Percy.

Rothacker to Make Film for Shoe Concern

The Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. announces that it has been selected by the International Shoe Co. to make a six-reel motion picture of the world's largest shoe industry. The six-reeler is to be shown at the January convention of the retail shoe dealers in Boston, and later exhibitions will be given to smaller dealers all over the country. It is planned to make an educational one-reeler from the 6,000 feet at a subsequent date.

Kaufman Returns fro Abroad

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN, who h been in charge of the constru tion and equipment of the Lond studio of Famous Players-Las British Producers, Ltd., has returne to America, his work having been con pleted and the management of th studio having been turned over Milton E. Hoffman, who will be permanent charge of production wo there.

Mr. Kaufman confessed to bein glad to get back where he can re awhile from his strenuous labors o the other side. "The six months spent in England," he said, "passe like so many weeks, so jammed fu were they of activity and detail re quiring constant attention. We suc ceeded in finding just the right build ing to adapt to our use, but the wor of rebuilding and equipping it prove tremendous. Film producing condi tions were almost chaotic, and if were not for the fact that I had mos capable assistants I might be over ther yet.

"Perseverance, patience and liberal appropriation, however, com bined to overcome the obstacles, an the British organization now has, prac tically complete and ready for produc tion operations, not only one of th largest but one of the best equippe studios in Europe.

"I gave comparatively little atten tion to the matter of building up producing organization, but before left, Mr. Hoffman had made rapi progress in that direction and I ca say with confidence that Famou Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. will soon start production, under a combination of the most approved Britis and American methods, with an organization that will make us on thi side 'go some' if we are to maintai our prestige. Their plans are laid o a huge scale and I predict that thei productions will surprise us when w see them."

Mr. Kaufman leaves this week fo California where he will confer wit Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky o new production activities of Famou Players-Lasky.

Filming of "The Hope," the second o five Drury Lane melodramas to be produce by Screen Classics, Inc., will start at th Metro studios in Hollywood this week.

F. P.-Lasky's January List

Six Dramas and Four Comedies Appear—Ince's "Dangerous Hours" Is Featured

THE subjects embodied in the list of Paramount-Artcraft feature releases for January, just announced by Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are said to be widely diversified in character and treatment. Of the ten features, six are essentially dramatic and four are comedies. Of the dramatic subjects, two are listed as specials, and one, Thomas H. Ince's "Dangerous Hours," is classed as a super-special.

The three features scheduled for January 4 are Enid Bennett in "The Woman in the Suitcase," an Ince production; Bryant Washburn in "Too Much Johnson" and Ethel Clayton in "The Thirteenth Commandment." The Enid Bennett picture was directed by Fred Niblo from a story and scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan. Miss Bennett is supported by William Conklin, Claire McDowell, Dorcas Mathews, Roland Lee, Donald MacDonald and Gladys George. George Barnes was the cameraman.

William Gillette's stage farce, "Too Much Johnson," is said to prove a good vehicle for Bryant Washburn. Mr. Washburn's leading woman is Lois Wilson and the supporting cast includes among others Adele Farrington, Monte Blue, Clarence Geldart and Gloria Hope. The scenario was written by Tom J. Geraghty and Donald Crisp directed.

It is stated that "The Thirteenth Commandment" presents Ethel Claymore in a highly dramatic role. Miss Clayton's leading man is Charles Meredith; and included in the supporting cast are Monte Blue, Anna Q. Nilsson, Irving Cummings and Winter Hall.

January 11 is the release date of the William S. Hart production, "Sand!" This is a picturization of Russell A. Bogg's story, "Dan Kurrie's Inning," the scenario being by Lambert Hillyer, who also directed the production. Mary Thurman is Hart's leading woman.

The 11th also brings to the screen the first George Fitzmaurice Production. This is "On With the Dance," a special in which Mae Murray and David Powell are featured.

On January 18, "Mary Ellen Comes to Town", starring Dorothy Gish; a Mark Twain Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Huckleberry Finn", in which Lewis Sargent plays "Huck"; and "The Tree of Knokledge" with Robert Warwick as the star, are scheduled for release.

The releases for January 25 are "What's Your Husband Doing?", in which Douglas MacClean and Doris May are co-starred, and "Dangerous Hours". "Dangerous Hours," the Ince super-special, was adapted by C. Gardner Sullivan from Donn Byrne's Saturday Evening Post story, "A Prodigal in Utopia." Lloyd Hughes plays the leading role. Barbara Castleton has the feminine lead, and character roles are skillfully interpreted by Claire DuBrey, Jack Richardson, Walt Whitman, Lew Morrison and Gordon Mullen.

Vitagraph Has New Stars

Joe Ryan and Jean Paige Elevated to Stardom; to Make Debut in Big Serial

TWO new stars are about to glitter in the film constellation.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has returned from a visit to the West Coast Studio at Hollywood, Cal., with the interesting announcement that Joe Ryan and Jean Paige will be co-starred in the next Vitagraph serial, following Antonio Moreno's serial, "The Invisible Hand," which is nearing release date. Joe Ryan, a "bad man" on the screen, has appeared in a number of Vitagraph serials, and Miss Paige has been leading lady in big feature productions at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

The new serial, with the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige combination starring, will be made under the tentative title of "Moods of Evil." It was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The scenario was made by Graham Baker, who has scores of successful scenarios to his credit.

Like "The Invisible Hand," with its Secret Service theme, the forthcoming serial is said to be a departure from the stereotyped sort of episode play in which "thrills" are dragged in by the heels on the least provocation. Mr. Smith and his collaborator have had a long and varied experience in writing this form of motion picture entertainment, and are adepts in working in the necessary thrills in a logical manner.

The launching of a new serial with new stars and a complete new organization including directors, camera men and supporting company is further evidence of Mr. Smith's faith in the popular liking for this particular form of entertainment. He has always been a firm believer in the serial, and has been co-author as well as producer of the serials. "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman," "A Fight for Millions," "The Iron Test," "The Man of Might" and "Smashing Barriers;" also of "The Invisible Hand," which is nearing release date.

Author Present at Making of Nazimova Film

I. A. R. Wylie, whose novel of Anglo-Indian life is the basis of "Stronger Than Death," Nazimova's forthcoming screen production, was present during the major part of the work on the picture at Nazimova's studios in California. Miss Wylie, it is said, visited the studios at Nazimova's personal invitation, and gave many valuable suggestions which the star utilized for the improvement of her screen work. It is stated that Miss Wylie spent about two months in almost daily visits to the studios.

Neilan's Exploitation Plans

Direct Co-operation Between Producer and Exhibitor Is the Objective

MARSHALL NEILAN is reported to be preparing extensive plans for direct exploitation service with exhibitors on his productions. This service will augment the publicity and advertising serivce of the distributors of Marshall Neilan Productions. Special advertising and publicity stunts, together with a large variety of photographs, stills and special material are said to be now in course of preparation.

The initial Marshall Neilan Production, the title of which has not as yet been announced by Mr. Neilan, is said to be particularly well adapted for exploitation. The story itself is said to be well known to the public, and the novel is at present receiving a large national advertising campaign, according to reports.

Special advertising and publicity material planned especially for the exhibitor's use and tie-ups of great drawing power, are now being arranged, it is stated. A trained newspaper and advertising man, assisted by an expert photographer and a magazine writer, are now working at the studio, it is said, and are preparing matter of a novel nature, which, it is expected, will be particularly welcome to exhibitors.

In discussing his views on publicity co-operation between producer and exhibitor, Mr. Neilan said: "There is room for special co-operation between producer and exhibitor. It is true that the exhibitor to-day is getting the best exploitation service that has ever been evident in the business. At the same time, I feel there is much work to do in this connection on the part of the producer. It is the personal contact that counts, and it is our aim to give the exhibitor, not a set of form letters or a printed sheet of instructions, but a direct and individual service that will prove of real help to him in his own locality."

Hallmark Handles Re-Issues

Will Distribute Earlier Productions Starring Minter, Russell and Fisher

FIVE feature productions selected from the earlier releases of Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher have been revived and will be released as a separate series through exchanges of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, it is reported.

The productions were made by the American Film Company, Inc., and are controlled by Exhibitors Mutual. Prints are now in the Hallmark branches with a supply of new paper and other advertising material. The series includes: Mary Miles Minter in "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor;" Margarita Fisher in "A Square Deal;" William Russell in "Up Romance Road;" Mary Miles Minter in "Social Briars;" Margarita Fisher in "Impossible Susan."

"The Ghost of Rosy Taylor" is adapted from Josephine Daskam Bacon's story. It was directed by Edward Sloman, and in the supporting cast appear George Periolat, Helen Howard and Emma Kluge.

Elizabeth Mahoney wrote "A Square Deal" for Margarita Fisher, and Lloyd Ingraham directed the play. Jack Mower, Val Paul, Constance Johnson, Louis Wells and Nanine Wright appear in the cast.

"Social Briars" was one of Miss Minter's best plays, according to reports. Alan Forrest, Anne Schaeffer, George Periolat and Claire duBrey appear in the cast. The director was Edward Sloman.

"Flying A" Announcements

R. R. Nehls Tells of Progress on the New Sylva Film; Outlines 1920 Policy

R. R. NEHLS, General Manager of the American Film Company, in a recent communication, conveys New Year's greetings to the trade and announces that work on the "Flying A's" forthcoming production, starring Marguerita Sylva, is progressing rapidly.

This feature, which is based on Samuel Merwin's book, "The Honey Bee," is now under production at the American's studios in Santa Barbara, Cal. The director is Rupert Julian, probably best known for his directorial work in turning out "The Beast of Berlin." Madam Marguerita Sylva, who takes the leading feminine role in the new picture, is said to bring into play a deal of "sparkle, intellect and emotional power." Mr. Nehls further announces that a good cast has been selected to support the Belgian actress in the feature.

The announcement also outlines the plans of the American Film for the year of 1920 and promises a high-standard of production for the coming year. "Nineteen-Twenty," says the communication, "is booked to go down in American Film Company history as a year of unparralleled growth and achievement. The 'expectancy sheet' has been written up on that basis, and every expectancy is going to be met."

Edgar Lewis, following a change of plans, has postponed the picturization of "Lahoma" for several months and is now in California working on "Sherry," the novel of George Barr McCutcheon.

Anita Stewart and her entire supporting cast in Louis B. Mayer's "The Fighting Shepherdess," have gone into the sheep country of California to film a number of exterior scenes.

Geoffrey Nye, Goldwyn's Agent for Far East

Geoffrey Nye, long associated with motion picture enterprises in Australia and New Zealand, has been appointed Goldwyn representative in the Far East. Mr. Nye left New York for San Francisco last week and on December 27 sailed for Shanghai, where he will begin a campaign of promotion and exploitation to cover at least nine months, during which, it is said, he will visit China, the Philippines, the Straits Settlements, the Dutch East Indies, India and Australia.

Special News Dept. Begun by First National

A special newspaper service department, which will provide publicity matter direct to newspapers in all parts of the United States and Canada, has been added to the Department of Advertising of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, under the direction of C. L. Yearsley. Its purpose is to supply newspapers with pre-release news of the studio activities of the various producing units affiliated with the Circuit by releasing contracts.

Good Cast Arranged for "$1,000,000 Reward"

Several well-known artists make up the large cast of "$1,000,000 Reward," one of the latest serial productions, presented by Harry Grossman as the first release of Grossman Pictures, Inc., and prepared for the screen by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey. The star part of Betty Thorndyke is filled by Lillian Walker, with Coit Albertson and William Pike playing strong supporting roles.

Joseph Marba and Leora Spellman are also seen in important parts.

Universal Tie-Up Successful

Film Company in Arrangement with the Xmas Fund Drive Derives Big Business

ACCORDING to a statement of the Universal Film Universal's New York Exchange did the biggest business of its existence this week. "Every picture was booked to the limit. Not a reel was on the shelf during the week, and there was not a single open day," says the report.

The week had been heavily advertised as "the banner week of the Universal Holiday Season." Several weeks ago an arrangement was effected with the managers of the New York American and Journal Christmas Fund whereby Universal would cooperate with the managers of the Fund. In return, the Christmas Fund managers agreed to boost Universal pictures, the arrangement being a percentage one, it is stated in the Universal report.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, agreed, it is reported, to turn over a portion of the gross receipts taken in during the last week before Christmas. The American and Journal set about to make those receipts as large as possible, so that the Fund would benefit to the limit. How well they succeeded is apparent by the record, "not an open day left to book," announces Universal.

Exhibitors are said to have responded remarkably. Scores of them booked Universal pictures for all the open days they had; many others, who were booked solidly, arranged to transfer dates so that they could play Universal features instead it is asserted.

Very many of them are giving benefit matinees toward the Christmas Fund in answer to a request from the Big U managers. These include exhibitors in every part of New York and Brooklyn, in many towns of New Jersey; and also in upstate New York.

The International Film helped along the campaign as well as the newspapers did. The News Reels carried a flash advising the people of what was being done, telling them that a worthy cause was being helped through Universal pictures and inviting them to assist. According to reports, the News Reel won applause in every theatre where it was shown.

National's Scenario Department Reorganized

The scenario department of the National Film Corporation has been completely reorganized, L. V. Jefferson, a specialist in adapting books for the screen, is the new editor. Harry Wulze, who wrote Mack Sennett comedies ten years ago has charge of comedy continuity, while Mrs. Alma L. Jackson is reader. Mr. Jefferson adapted Zane Grey's "Desert of Wheat" and Opie P. Reads' "The Kentucky Colonel" for the screen.

Victor Kremer Adds to His Sales Force

Due to the volume of business which Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., is now handling, Mr. Kremer this week announced that he had to enlarge his sales staff by the addition of two well known film salesmen. He has engaged Phil Goldstone and Bert Lubin, well known to distributors and exhibitors in the West, to handle for him the five Chaplin productions which he now controls.

Controls Market Abroa on Olive Tell Films

The Jans Pictures, Inc., have jus concluded arrangements with the E port & Import Film Company wher by the latter will control the foreig market on photoplays, featuring Oliv Tell, in a series of productions unde the direction of Mr. B. A. Rolfe.

It is stated that active operations begin on the first of January, as M Rolfe has already engaged the Peerless Studios and is reported to be preparing for the first picture, which wil be ready for showing on or abou February 1, it is said.

Stunt Exploitation on "Crimson Shoals"

Among the several exploitatio stunts furnished by Monopol Picture Company for their feature, "Crimso Shoals," are books of matches carrying a scene from the photoplay on the covers. The title of the film is printed across the face of the book as well as across the matches, with a space on the cover large enough to carry the name of the theatre showing the picture. There has been a healthy demand for the novelty from theatres playing the attraction.

Grace Darling to Star in R. W. Chambers' Story

"Even as Eve," starring Grace Darling, will be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit about the middle of January. The story is an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of Robert W. Chambers' novel, "The Shining Band." It was produced by the A. H. Fischer Feature, Inc., and directed by B. A. Rolfe and Chester DeVonde.

Among those in the cast are Grace Darling, Ramsaye Wallace, E. J. Ratcliffe, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, G. V. Seyffertitz, John Goldsworthy, John L. Shine and Robert Gibbs.

C. B. Price Control Exclusive U-Boat Film

C. B. Price Co., Inc. has taken over the rights to the "U-35" picture, exploits of a German sub-marine by permission of the British Admiralty. It is the photographic records taken aboard the "U-35" for the exclusive use and entertainment of the Kaiser and shows the means he employed to keep himself posted on his pet methods of warfare, intended for the personal pleasure.

The W. H. Productions had advertised the distribution of "U-35," but will not do so, as explained in the advertisements of C. B. Price Co., Inc., appearing in this week's trade press.

Mr. C. A. Meade, C. B. Price Co.'s representative, has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he showed the picture to Commander Foote, Aide to the Sec'y of the Navy, and other Navy officials from whom he received hearty endorsements. Commander Foote also made a request that the Navy Department have a print of this subject for their official records.

"Lost Battalion" Given Special Showing

A special big showing is being arranged for the W. H. Productions Co. feature, now being realesed on the State Rights market, "The Lost Battalion," at Pittsfield, Mass., the home town of Lt.-Colonel Chas. W. Whittlesey, the commander of the famous battalion, who has re-enacted in this production, together with the other survivors of that famous episode, the actual story of the momentous fight.

It is being arranged that Major General Robert Alexander, commander of the 77th Division, also Lt. Col. Whitlesey's command, who are all featured in the photoplay be present during the showing.

Fox Film Corporation has leased the studio at College Point, L. I., making the fourth studio in Greater New York that the concern has under lease. Within the last fortnight Fox leased the old Biograph studio on East 175th street in the Bronx. In addition to these two studios Fox is using the big studio on West 61st street and two studios at Fort Lee, N. J.

Jack Dempsey In New Serial

Champion Now at Work on Pathe Serial, "Dead or Alive," at Brunton Lot

JACK DEMPSEY, heavyweight champion, is now working in the fifteen-episode Pathe production, "Dead or Alive," which marks his first appearance in films.

On Dempsey's arrival on the Coast he was given a warm welcome, it is said. He was met at the station by a crowd headed by the Mayor of Los Angeles and including the film colony in a body. The Pathe report states that "among those who personally extended the glad hand to the champion were Ruth Roland, Mary Pickford, Mildred Davis, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Tom Mix, Harold Lloyd, Hal E. Roach, Gilson Willets, Warner Oland, Eileen Percy, James J. Corbett and a score of others. Fairbanks, Tom Mix and 'Gentleman Jim' Corbett are particular cronies of the champion and the four spend much time with each other."

The Brunton studio, where "Dead or Alive" is being produced under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton, is reported to be the scene of considerable activity. Work on "Dead or Alive" is progressing rapidly. Under the direction of James Van Dyke and the personal supervision of Robert Brunton, the early episodes are shaping up, and the scenario is well along towards completion. Jack Cunningham is writing the scenario from the story by Frederic Chapin, Pathe production manager, and Harry O. Hoyt.

The Pathe report announces: "Word from the Coast gives every intimation that 'Dead or Alive' will be the most elaborate and costly serial ever filmed. To this end, cast, settings, and lighting effects will be unusual. Pathe has given Mr. Brunton an unlimited expense account and he is proceeding on the same scale a producer would follow in making a special feature." This has never before been done in a serial and producers agree that it will serve to blaze the trail towards a new standard for continued pictures.

Pioneer Offerings Go Well in the South

Word has been received at the New York Headquarters of the Pioneer from M. A. Lightman of the Criterion Film Exchange of Atlanta, and the First National Film Exchange in Dallas, of which E. D. Hulsey is head, that "The Boomerang," with Henry B. Walthall is proving to be one of the big successes of the season.

The Facts and Follies are also proving themselves to be winners in the South. Special prints have been ordered by the Atlanta office which is signing up for fifty-two weeks with the majority of the big houses.

Indiana Man Back of Comedy Company

Indiana, noted for its literary geniuses, is about to make a bid for further fame, by being the home of motion picture comedy. Kenneth Hackley, widely known in Hoosierdom where he has been in the motion picture game as an exhibitor since he was 16 years of age, and who now controls the Hackley Amusement Company, has formed a new film corporation which will produce comedies under the title of Frolic Comedies.

It was while Mr. Hackley was at the Boonville, Indiana house, that he discovered the new star that is to be featured in Frolic Comedies. The star is Jimmy "Fatty" Williams, who has had vaudeville experience and done some work before the camera and is heralded as a second "Fatty" Arbuckle, resembling this favorite not only in size but appearance. Williams has signed up with the Hackley Film Corporation for 5 years.

Other Frolic Comedies features will be Little Rastus Green, a diminutive colored boy and several other players of ability. Beside Kenneth Hackley, E. Hackley and John L. Bond are the incorporators of the new company, which already has several stories on hand.

Burston Now on Third Francis Ford Serial

Word comes from the coast that Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., has several episodes completed of his third Francis Ford serial in which Ella Hall is playing the feminine lead. It was stated in a recent communication from the Burston Films, Inc., that Mr. Burston had in contemplation an Oriental serial which would take an entire company across the Pacific for six or seven months.

Triangle Reissues Two Ince Productions

Triangle's forthcoming release, "A Gamble in Souls," a Thos. H. Ince production, featuring Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond, will be available to exhibitors on January 25th. This release follows close upon another Thos. H. Ince production, "The Clodhopper," with Charles Ray, which was released on January 4th.

General Manager of Pioneer Off on Tour

M. H. Hoffman, executive head of the Pioneer, is now on the first leg of his tour of Canada, where he is making preliminary observations with a view of securing the best distribution outlets for the product of his concern in the Dominion.

Mr. Hoffman's first stop will be in Toronto, where he will meet the representatives of the affiliated group of independent exhibitors of that section. From Toronto he will strike West and probably visit all the Canadian exchange centers until he reaches Vancouver.

Nearly eighty-five per cent of the United States is covered by the Pioneer Co-operative Exchanges, and with the projected distribution organizations in Canada in operation, the Pioneer will be in a position to offer the independent producer an outlet second to none.

Robertson-Cole Plans Bigger Press Books

Robertson-Cole Company reports that the twenty-page, illustrated, press-advertising and campaign book which was distributed by Robertson-Cole with the release of "The Tong Man," the latest Sessue Hayakawa production "met with such a decided success that hereafter Robertson-Cole will publish a similar booklet on all superior pictures and a book of even more detail and elaborateness for all special productions."

Second National Theatre Picture Started

The scenario of "Blind Youth," the second production of National Theatres, Inc., which will be released through Select, was completed last week by Katherine Reed and turned over to the West Coast Studios, where work on production was started Monday by Al Green, who is directing it.

Mr. Green has just completed Monte Katterjohn's "Silks and Petticoats."

Florence Reed's Next Is "The Alibi"

Florence Reed's feature release to follow "The Eternal Mother" will be "The Alibi," scenes for which the emotional star of the United Picture Theatres of America is now making.

Realart Upholds Advertising

Vindicates Practical Value of Advertising in Drawing Public to New Unit

The value of advertising in bringing the product of a young organization before the eyes of the public and of the trade is made the subject of a detailed report recently issued by the Realart Pictures Corporation. Parts of the Realart report are reproduced in the following:

"Advertising has been the direct line of communication between Realart Pictures Corporation, exhibitor and public since the first day of the producing company's existence. Whether by printed page or electric display, Realart has placed itself and its promise before the country through the medium of advertising.

"Like all modern industries, Realart has depended upon publicity to put across its new message, and by consistent advertising in the trade journals it has become a familiar name in the motion picture business. Realizing that the trade magazines are the true spokesmen of the industry, and that the exhibitors who subscribe to them are the wideawake and progressive members of a business that develops overnight, Realart has never failed to work hand in hand with these journals, not alone through the advertising columns but through the news pages and the splendid sections devoted to special service for the exhibitor."

The Realart electric sign at the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway is cited by Realart as a definite example of this corporation's belief in the value of large scale advertising. "The 'Girl in the Swing' electric display cost $108,000 and is said to be visible to more than 1,000,000 people every twenty-four hours," says Realart.

Under the direction of John Pond Fritts, Realart has organized an efficient publicity department whose aim is to give real service to the exhibitor and at the same time to avoid the waste and errors that have been natural in the development of this field. Through the aid of branch managers and exploitation men, Realart is endeavoring to keep in direct touch with experienced exhibitors who are informed as to the practical benefits of exploitation and publicity work.

Former Capital Film Men with Doubleday

Harry Owens, former production and western sales manager, and F. L. Smith, general sales manager of the Capital Film Company, have become associated with the Doubleday Production Company as sales and publicity managers. Smith will make his headquarters at Chicago, while Owens will remain on the Coast.

The Doubleday Production Company, who have taken a long lease on the Bronx Studio at Eadendale, will first release a series of two-reel western pictures, featuring Vera Mack.

F. P.-Lasky Has Trio of Releases for Dec. 28

George H. Melford's production, "Everywoman;" Billie Burke in "Wanted —a Husband;" and Charles Ray in "Red Hot Dollars,", form the trio of releases on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule for December 28.

Walter Browne's modern morality play, "Everywoman," was transferred to the screen under the direction of Mr. Melford. It is said to have elicited considerable praise from newspaper critics not only in New York, where it was shown at the Rivoli theatre, but in Boston, Columbus, Chicago and other cities.

Miss Burke's leading man in "Wanted—a Husband" is James L. Crane. The remainder of the supporting cast includes Margaret Linden, Charles Lane, Edward Lester, Bradley Barker, Helen Greene, Gypsy O'Brien, Mrs. Priestly Morrison, Frank Goldsmith and Kid Broad.

In "Red Hot Dollars," Gladys George is Ray's leading woman and Charles Hill Mailes, William Conklin and Mollie McConnell are in the cast.

"Superman" Making Hit Through Country

Tower Film Corporation announce that their six reel feature, "The Superman," which is now being released on the State Rights market is being received with great success in the territories where it is shown.

Special exploitation is being arranged locally in every territory and the reports from exchangemen and exhibitors show big box office profits.

"The Superman" is now being released in the following territories: Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, North Carolina, South Carolina.

Two Continuities by Dazey Being Produced

Within four weeks after his arrival in Los Angeles, Frank M. Dazey had two continuities in course of production at the Louis B. Mayer studios. One picture is Caroline Lockhart's "The Fighting Shepherdess" in which Anita Stewart is starred; and the other is Grace Miller White's "Polly of the Storm Country" with Mildred Harris Chaplin as the star. Both are for release through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Shirley Mason appearing in the costume she wears in her first Wm. Fox production "The Elephant Man"

Variety of Gowns in "Beckoning Roads"

"Beckoning Roads," the Robertson-Cole picture, which is a holiday release, "will please especially woman patrons," it is said, "as it gives Bessie Barriscale opportunity to run the whole gamut of the modiste's art from the sort of gown which is worn by the girl on a farm in the Canadian Northwest, to the most filmy and delicate creation seen in a New York ballroom." According to reports, Miss Barriscale wears five evening gowns, four afternoon frocks, three street dresses, three suits and four evening wraps.

"Beckoning Roads" will also please the men, it is claimed, in that it tells the story of two contrasting types of men, the man who made his money by hard farm labor in the great Northwest, and the man who took it away from him so mercilessly in the Wall Street district.

Montague Love Added to Pioneer Cast

Montague Love, who finished up with the latest Grace Davison picture last week, was immediately engaged to appear in the leading role of "The Place of Honeymoons," the new production in which Emily Stevens is being starred by the Pioneer-Atlas interests.

The part which Mr. Love will have in the picture is that of a young globe trotting American millionaire, who becomes the central figure in a romance involving two rival grand opera prima donnas, an English Earl and high officials of the diplomatic service in France and America.

Production on "The Place of Honeymoons" is already under way at the Atlas Studio in Newton, Mass.

C. W. Brown Going West for Clark Cornelius

Colvin W. Brown of the Clark Cornelius Corporation will leave New York before the first of the year for the Pacific coast to spend several weeks in the interests of the company. He will spend most of his time in Los Angeles, but before his return to New York will visit exchange centers on the Pacific coast and in other sections of the west.

Selznick Offerings for January

Four Productions Star Female Players in Big Stories

FOUR productions are listed on the Selznick schedule for release during the first month of the new year. The productions star four of America's best known screen actresses and each production was made with the utmost care to be released as examples of the quality of pictures the Selznick organization has on its 1920 program, it is announced.

The titles and stars of the four January productions are: "Greater Than Fame" starring Elaine Hammerstein; "She Loves and Lies" a Norma Talmadge Special; "The Imp" featuring Elsie Janis, and "Footlights and Shadows" starring Olive Thomas.

"Greater Than Fame" was written by S. Jay Kaufman, well-known author and New York newspaper writer. The screen version is said to abound with heart throlls, bits of melodrama, and deft touches of humor. The drawing power of the production is the portrayal of the leading role by Elaine Hammerstein. As a country girl in "Greater Than Fame" she goes to New York to attain success as a singer. She meets with many adventures and all classes of people. Her ideals are of the highest and when she is told she "must live to the fullest" in order to attain success her soul rebels and she chooses her own methods which finally bring her to her goal. Although largely an adventure story a love theme runs throughout. "Greater Than Fame" was directed by Alan Crosland, and the supporting cast includes Walter McGrail, W. H. Tooke, Julia Swayne Gordon, Albert Roccardi, Cora Williams, John Walker, Arthur Donaldson, Flora Kingsley, Eugene Woodward, and J. Furey.

Admirers of Norma Talmadge are due for a surprise in her new Special production. She is said to prove herself even more versatile and charming in the handling of three separate roles ranging from a young girl to an old woman.

The production is titled "She Loves and Lies" and is a screen version of the famous novel by Wilkie Collins. Conway Tearle, who plays opposite Miss Talmadge, does some excellent work in this picture as does the entire supporting cast. Miss Talmadge has the part of a young girl who is left a fortune provided she marries the man she desires. The man she desires is in need of money but refuses to accept it from her. She disguises herself as an old lady and he finally agrees to marry her in order that she may obtain a fortune. He doesn't know how young she is and the delightful surprise comes when she reveals herself as a healthy young wife. "She Loves and Lies" is full of interesting moments and should do much to further the excellent reputation of Norma Talmadge.

Elsie Janis is co-author of "The Imp," her newest Selznick drama. As "Jane" a wealthy young girl who has had for a hobby the study of criminals, she portrays the life of a female crook. Jane, due to an accident which causes a coma, thinks herself the famous Annie Adams, known as "The Imp." Her parents put her under the care of a famous young specialist. How she is made to love the specialist who poses as another crook and how he cures her, then wins her love for the second time, make this drama not only one of interest but of entertaining value from a humorous standpoint.

Joe King heads the supporting cast which is composed of such well-known screen folk as: Ethel stewart, E. J. Ratcliffe, Duncan Penwarden, John Southerland, William Fredericks, Arthur Marton, Jack Ridgeway, and Joseph Granby. Edmund Goulding, who wrote the scenario for the production was the co-author with Miss Janis. Robert Ellis directed the production.

Olive Thomas has the leading role in another of the January releases of Selznick. It is titled "Footlights and Shadows" and was written by Bradley King. The story is such that Miss Thomas has a chance to display all of her personality and versatility. Selznick officials are of the belief it will score an even greater success than any of her past pictures.

She has the role of a Follies chorus girl, and naturally this alone allows for many unusual scenes. The carefree life of the chorus girl and its serious side are sincerely portrayed. That chorus girls have ideals and yearn for them as others of the feminine sex do, is shown in the climax of the drama of New York life. The excellent supporting cast includes Alexander Cuslow, Ivo Dawson, Van Bauser, May Hicks, and Miss M. Gray.

Ince Reviews the Past Year

Speaks of Achievements Realized and Also of Some Future Plans

A REPORT from the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation contains a statement issued by Thomas H. Ince of that organization, in which the producer speaks of the motion-picture industry situation throughout the country and discusses, in greater detail, the effects of those productions which he has turned out during the year of 1919. Mr. Ince's statement is submitted in greater part below:

"The outstanding fact of the closing year is that it has been one of unexampled prosperity in the motion-picture industry. More money has been taken in throughout the country, production has been vastly increased, and the demand for pictures has been unprecedented. There are many factors that explain this condition of affairs; relief from the strain of the war, high wages and the partial reopening of the foreign markets.

"To deal particularly with the productions in which I was personally interested, I think I may claim that the pictures made at my new studios, opened in the first month of the year, maintained the established reputation of Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett and Charles Ray.

"One event of the year has afforded me the greatest satisfaction, the instantaneous success of my two new stars—Douglas MacLean and Doris May in their first starring vehicle—'Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave.' The satisfaction was greater as, in a measure, I had staked my reputation for gauging the popular feeling in this new offering. I have planned a series of pictures for these clever young artists, keeping the light, unstrained comedy motive predominant. I have already completed three pictures on these lines and have never felt the slightest doubt as to their comulative success.

"'What's Your Husband Doing?' and 'Mary's Ankle' are ready for release, and I am busily at work on an original comedy which will carry a ripple of laughter through the film world.

"In strong contrast to these comedies, I have launched Hobart Bosworth in a tense drama sounding a deep, tragic note in a specially prepared version of Gouverneur Morris' 'Behind the Door.' In this production I have used the sea and submarines in a series of startling pictures, which, I believe, will prove one of the screen sensations of the year.

"Outside these contributions I have offered an elaborate special production dealing with the labor upheaval prevalent in all parts of the civilized world. This is entitled 'Dangerous Hours' and is a visualization of modern conditions by that master of screen technique, C. Gardner Sullivan. Apart from any significance it gains as a transcript of unusual conditions it is a stirring drama of vivid actuality. Incidentally it serves to introduce Lloyd Hughes, a young artist of such remarkable dramatic insight that I have added his name to the list of my screen celebrities in the firm belief that, in future productions, he will win a firm position in the esteem of my patrons.

"If I again appear as a prophet it is to foretell a year that will be memorable in the annals of picture history as one high endeavor on our part in an effort to retain the good will of our multitudinous audiences.

"Wolves of the Night" for Holiday Shows

"Wolves of the Night," Fox screen production of E. Lloyd Sheldon's original story, has come back with Christmas and the holidays. The reason for this selection lies in the fact that the picture closes its final scenes on Christmas Eve—a point which lends itself most potently to the spirit of audiences at this time. All prints of "Wolves of the Night" have been renovated and prepared for redistribution, it is said.

New Film Treats Eternal Youth

Second Wilson-Hallmark Serial to Be Issued After Holidays

WHEN Ben Wilson's second Hallmark serial, "The Screaming Shadow," to be presented by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, opens following Christmas holidays, the public, it is said, will be given their first glimpse of the result of the new theory which is now being propounded to the effect that human life can be prolonged and eternal youth inculcated by the means of grafting onto the human body what are known to the medical profession as monkey glands. Mr. Wilson's late serial now under production is founded upon this theory and during the course of the story written by J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates, the theory of this monkey gland process and its effect is brought out in a series of strongly dramatic episodes.

According to a recent press report, an experiment of this nature was performed on a prisoner in the San Quentin prison, Cal. The interstitial glands of a convict who had been hanged some time before were transferred, it is said, to the subject of the operation. The prisoner, who had previous to the operation been dull, morose, and lacking in forcible individuality, showed evidences of renewed vigor, according to state patrol officer, Edward H. Whyte, and twice escaped from the custody of the prison officials. The second time his get-away was successful, and according to present reports, the prisoner is still at large. This instance is presented as a piece of evidence rendering some support to the theory.

It is upon this theory that the authors of Ben Wilson's second Hallmark serial "The Screaming Shadow" have based the plot of their serial story. According to the authors and Mr. Wilson who is now completing the 6th episode, the story offers dramatic possibilities never before presented on the screen or stage.

Surrounding Mr. Wilson and Neva Gerber, who is co-starred with him in this serial, Mr. Wilson has coupled practically the same cast of players that appeared with him in his serial, "The Trail of the Octopus";—William Deyer, Howard Crampton and William Carroll. In addition to these will be seen Fred Gamble and Joseph Girard, Frances Terry, Pancy Porter, Claire Mills and Joseph Manning.

Ben Wilson is seen in "The Screaming Shadow" in the role of John Rand, noted scientist and archaeologist. Miss Gerber is playing in the role of a newspaper woman who is heiress to millions but prefers the work on account of its adventure and romance. Mr. Crampton plays the role of the millionaire head of the Eternal-Life Syndicate. Joseph Girard, character man, has the part of Baron Velska, Prime Minister of Burgonia. Frances Terry has the part of Nadia, high priestess of the virgins of eternal youth.

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, announces that the first episode of "The Screaming Shadow," will be released following the Christmas holidays, when the final episode of the present Ben Wilson serial, booking through Hallmark Exchanges, "The Trail of the Octopus" will have had its final booking for first runs.

Production of Kaufman Editorials Begun

Announcement made last week that Lewis J. Selznick, President of Selznick Enterprises, had secured another screen beat in obtaining the rights to the leading editorials from the pen of Herbert Kaufman, whose writings of dynamic power are known wherever the English language is read, is recognized in the trade as of far-reaching importance, not only to the exhibitors of America, but to the entire world.

A new producing company under the personal supervision of Myron Selznick is now at work at Fort Lee whereby Selznick will produce and release through Select Pictures a series of one-reel features adapted from the editorials written by Mr. Kaufman.

"Fighting Cressy" Prints at Pathe Exchanges

With the arrival of the prints on "Fighting Cressy" in the thirty-two Pathe Exchanges throughout the country, there has been a great demand for the Blanche Sweet special produced by Jesse D. Hampton from the story by Bret Harte.

Al Lichtman Speaks of Paramount-Artcraft Productions

IN a lengthy statement just issued, Al Lichtman, General Manager, Department of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, expresses the opinion that the "Super-Special" is here to stay as the dominating factor of the film field for 1920. The statement follows:

"The 'big' picture has come into its own. Make no mistake about it—the type of feature exemplified by the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Special will be the dominating factor in the field of motion picture distribution in 1920.

"Now don't misunderstand my first sentence," said Mr. Lichtman. "You see I qualified it in my second. We have seen in the past pictures that have been called 'big' by their producers and promoters. Some of them—a few of them—have deserved the term and they have brought just reward to those who gave them to the public.

"But the season of 1919-20 has brought the first thoughtfully planned, determined and successful effort of any distributing organization to furnish to its clients a series of really 'big' pictures, and I am happy to say that that organization is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. We have given to exhibitors and the public George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man,' Cecil B. DeMille's 'Male and Female' and George H. Melford's 'Everywoman,' all advertised in advance as Super-Specials. We promised that they would be 'big pictures, and they have made good in the only way a so-called 'big' picture can make good—through the exhibitor's box-office.

"The expenditure of big money can't possibly, by itself, make a 'big' picture. Crowds of people, expensive settings, illustrious names can't either. There must be not only good acting and good photography; but a strong theme, a logical story, intellegent direction, if a picture is to succeed at the box-office. And unless it is a box-office winner, week in and week out, in theatres of all classes and sizes, in all sections of the country, it is not a 'big' picture.

"That's the kind of picture that 'The Miracle Man,' and 'Male and Female' and 'Everywoman' are. And we are going to have more of them, at regular intervals, right straight through the year.

"What has made this possible? The fact that from the first the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has followed a consistent, forward course—has maintained a reputation for dependability of product. Quality and service have been the first considerations and the super-specials are the natural outcome of the following of that policy.

"Our product is being nationally advertised to no less than 40,000,000 magazine readers. We are advertising directly in over six hundred newspapers. That's some of the service we are giving to exhibitors, and it's a service that the 'big' picture makes possible. In addition, we have established a department of exploitation, with expert exploitation men, connected with our exchanges, giving to exhibitors the benefit of their ideas and experience as successful showmen and assisting them in reaping the full benefits of the exploitation possibilities of the Super-Specials.

"The Super-Special is playing two, three, six weeks where one week formerly was the invariable rule. It is making week-run houses out of those that formerly changed twice a week, and I wouldn't be surprised if the single-day run would disappear before very long except in the very smallest towns.

"But there is another thing that the Super-Special has already accomplished. It has served to establish percentage booking and to prove the justice of it both to the exhibitor and to the distributor."

"The Play's the Thing," American Slogan

Samuel S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Company, Inc., made his way back from Santa Barbara to Chicago for the Christmas holidays. En route he spent some time at the American's distributing branches at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Kansas City, Des Moines and Minneapolis.

"The most gratifying success of our big super-attractions beginning with 'Six Feet Four,' followed by 'The Hellion' and 'Eve in Exile,' mark our new policy a winner," Mr. Hutchinson found.

"'The play's the thing'—the new slogan of the American—is most assuredly in line with the best trend of thought today. The meat of the highest priced and most popular novels, stars chosen who are best fitted for the parts, the best acting obtainable, with no restrictions and no precedents—the line of least resistance to the phenomenal success—this is the 1920 campaign mapped for the "Flying A's." Each film treated as a single unit, each aiming to be better than the last, with the thumb of the management constantly on the public pulse.

"With no cast-iron release dates, the American films are completed when they are perfect; new when and where they are new; an assured success before they appear."

Dolores Cassinelli in "The Web of Deceit"

Dolores Cassinelli will make her next appearance in "The Web of Deceit," Edwin Carewe's initial production for Pathe distribution. The story was written by Finis Fox. The newest Cassinelli attraction is in six parts, and has been set for release by Pathe on January 18th. The supporting cast is composed of Letty Ford, Hugh Cameron, Franklyn Hanna, and Mitchell Harris.

Rothacker Plans Year Ahead

Particular Stress to Be Put on Industrials; Efficient Executives Chosen

ENTERING upon its tenth year, the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago has big plans for 1920 in the way of educational, industrial and advertising pictures.

The first thing on the program will be to continue maintaining standards in the productions of industrial and advertising films—that branch of motion pictures in which Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the concern, became a pioneer nine years ago.

A year ago an optimist would not have hoped for so great a development in advertising educational and industrial pictures as has come about in the last twelve months. Concerns that had been using pictures found new uses for them and other concerns, which had been holding back, were forced, by the pressure of competition, to acknowledge themselves converts to the commercial value of the silversheet.

In order to take care of that amount of business which would keep the Rothacker concern in the industrial-advertising film lead it was necessary to build up the organization.

President Rothacker's first move toward strengthening his organization was to rob Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford of the services of Douglas D. Rothacker, his brother.

From now on he will direct his selling energy toward prospective film clients. Rothacker salesmen are now systematically covering all parts of the country. In 1920 sales offices will be maintained in Buffalo, New York, Los Angeles and St. Louis in addition to Chicago. Copy ammunition is now being prepared for a national advertising campaign during the coming year. Rothacker advertisements will feel at home in the principal magazines throughout the twelve months.

The next addition to the Rothacker organization was S. J. Stoughton, who will specialize in film circulation. Stoughton spent nine years in the advertising and sales department of the H. J. Heinz concern.

Later he became Paramount district sales manager for the Middle West, in charge of exchanges at Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Minneapolis and Cincinnati. Just before joining the Rothacker organization he was identified with the operation of a large string of picture theatres.

Watterson R. Rothacker's third lieutenant is Edward O. Blackburn, who is now Studio manager.

President Rothacker is laying his plans to be absent from the Chicago home office for six months early in 1920. This will be to get construction started on the new laboratory-studio in Los Angeles, for which a site was purchased several months ago. When the workmen get down to business on this job, he will jump tory-studio there. Nor will he stop to New York to start another labora-with New York. London will be the next place where he'll put up a plant.

MacManus Picture Now Given Release

The release is expected this week of the photodrama "The Gray Brother" produced by Edward A. MacManus. There is a great deal of interest manifested in this production, the story of which was written by Thomas Mott Osborne and in which he brings out of prison life a thrilling romance and tragedy.

Universal's Screen Magazine in Big Cities

According to a report from Universal, practically every large city in the United States now has a picture theatre at which Universal's New Screen Magazine is a weekly feature. Hal Hodes, editor of the magazine, who has been visiting the principal cities of the Middle West and the West, writes from San Francisco that first runs have been landed in Denver, Chicago, Salt Lake, Butte, Seattle, and San Francisco, in the past several weeks. Two new features of the magazine which are reported to have elicited a favorable comment from exhibitors, are Letter-Laughs, and the Elton cartoons.

Completes Titling of "The Empty Triumph"

Lloyd Lonergan has just completed writing the titles for the production by the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., called "The Empty Triumph." Burton King directed this seven reel picture in which Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney co-star.

From the offices of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., it is learned that this picture is to be released exclusively on the independent market. The cutting of the picture is at present under way, and the picture will be completed within a very few weeks.

Opie Read Story Being Made By National

Opie P. Read's masterpiece, "The Kentucky Colonel," is now in production at the Hollywood studios of the National Film Corporation, with an all-star cast that includes "Joseph J. Dowling," "The Miracle Man," Elinor Field and Francis McDonald. William Seiter is the director.

Series by Ralph Ince for Selznick

A series of Ralph Ince special productions for 1920 is announced from the office of the Selznick Enterprises by Myron Selznick, who at the same time stated that it was intended to make these specials the big feature productions of the year.

Fox to Film Clemenceau's Book

Buys Screen Rights to Premier's One Novel, “The Strongest”

THE Fox Film Corporation announces that William Fox has secured from Georges Clemenceau, Premier of France, the screen rights to the only novel that the noted statesman and journalist has written. It has been published in both French and English under the title, “The Strongest.” According to the Fox announcement “M. Clemenceau himself prepared the cinema version of his famous and fascinating story.” His adaptation has been finished, and now “The Strongest” is ready to be filmed. R. A. Walsh will direct the production.

“This announcement marks a new epoch in the history of the screen. It is an epoch in which leaders of world affairs turn toward the motion picture as the best medium of presenting to the public a mighty contribution to literature,” declares the Fox report which continues as follows: “Premier Clemenceau for many years has been a devoted patron of the silent drama. In fact, it is one of his lobbies. Long ago the great statesman declared that the cinema was the one and only logical method by which to make the whole world one in thought, aim and accomplishment for the betterment of humanity. He has pointed out that, with the aid of the cinema, language was not necessary—that a story told in pictures would appeal to all classes.

“The man whom the French people affectionately term ‘The Tiger’ because of the merciless manner in which he has always fought the enemies of his country, truly sums up the situation thus: ‘The cinema is the simplest method of appealing direct to the hearts of the masses. The cinema carries its message without words. It appeals directly to the imagination, and it is from the imagination that great thoughts, great hopes, great deeds are born.’”

“The Strongest” is a story that deals with a question which confronts the people of every civilized country. In it is related a young woman's struggles between powerful forces of right and wrong. It derives its power not only from its simplicity, but from the depth of its human appeal.

It is stated that following the publication of “The Strongest,” the Premier received offers from many sources to picturize his story, but none was accepted. “Then came William Fox's offer,” says the Fox report. “The shrewd and clever Frenchman listened with great interest. He understood that by accepting the offer made him by the president of Fox Film Corporation, his adaptation of his only novel would go to the world through the greatest distribution system of silent drama that the world has known—an organization that reaches the far corners of the earth. Georges Clemenceau accepted the offer made by William Fox in preference to all others, and in spite of his manifold duties began work on the screen version of his novel.

“That version, now finished, will be a remarkable contribution to the screen, not only because of its tremendous power, but because of the momentous events that surrounded its preparation, also because it gives a new insight into the character of the man who, having passed his allotted threescore years and ten, still pursues the enemies of humanity with the same merciless skill and strength that made him ‘The Tiger.’”

Saenger Chain Gets Big Realart

“Soldiers of Fortune” to Be Shown in 31 Southern Houses

THIRTY-ONE southern picture houses will show “Soldiers of Fortune,” the Allan Dwan production, following the contract signed this week with the Saenger Amusement Company by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland of Realart Pictures corporation. The Saenger circuit has also contracted for “Erstwhile Susan” and “The Fear Market.”

This is the biggest tie-up announced in several weeks by Realart and follows a long series of box-office successes which “Soldiers of Fortune” has achieved in many sections of the country.

The Saenger contract comes close upon the announcement that this Mayflower photoplay will have a second showing on Broadway at B. S. Moss's theatre following its run at the massive Capitol theatre. As its very first contribution to the motion pictures industry “Soldiers of Fortune” is attracting much praise to its Realart sponsors as a production which combines unusual drawing power and rare artistic merit.

The picturization of Richard Harding Davis's novel will begin an indefinite engagement at the Strand theatre in New Orleans on January 24.

“Erstwhile Susan,” which has been making a reputation for its star and producers throughout the Middle West, is scheduled for showing on the Saenger circuit in early February. At the same time “The Fear Market,” which is rapidly nearing completion will be shown over the same territory.

The deal was closed this week by Sales Manager J. C. Ragland with Mr. Richards of Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, through W. H. Guerringer, New York booking representative of the theatre chain. Negotiations just completed will insure showing of “Soldiers of Fortune” in several of the largest photoplay houses in the South.

Mr. Ragland reports that in addition to the big Realart coup below the Mason-Dixon line, the past week has been unusually profitable for “Soldiers of Fortune” contracts. According to Realart's General Sales Manager, the reputation of this photoplay not only as a box-office winner, but as the outstanding picture of the year has accumulated with each showing. The picture has brought money to exhibitors, and in addition has had unanimous praise from reviewers and patronage in every city where it has run.

Prominent among the contracts announced this week for “Soldiers of Fortune” are the Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., C. Hopkins, Manager; the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, Peter Antonoplot, Manager; the Sun at Omaha, Neb., H. L. Goldberg, General Manager; the Broadway Theatre, at Richmond, Va., Ken Finley, exhibitor; the Imperial at San Francisco, Eugene Rolb, Manager; and the Liberty at Terre Haute, Ind., A. Brentlinger, Manager.

Gale Henry to Appear in Five-Reel Comic

Gale Henry, Bull's Eye star, will start production on a five-reel comedy the first of the ensuing year, according to announcement made by General Manager Bruno J. Becker, of her company.

When questioned concerning plans for the five-reeler, General Manager Becker emphatically declared that the company will not discontinue production of its two-reel comedies. The special, he says, is to be put on simply as a test picture. If the first one is a success, of course, others may follow, and it is possible the comedienne may eventually leave the two-reel class altogether.

Clara Kimball Young, who announced several weeks ago that she was seeking a successor to replace her two years hence, when she expects to retire, has received more than forty thousand answers.

Adolph Philipp's First Three Pictures Ready

Adolph Philipp, who recently entered the film field as an actor and producer, after a long and successful career on the stage, has completed three comedies at the studios of the Adolph Philipp Film Corporation, located at 11 East 14th street, according to an announcement just received.

Philipp has resorted to his own stage successes for screen material in his forthcoming film productions of “Oh Louise,” “My Girl Suzanne” and “The Midnight Girl.” Following out this policy for the future, Mr. Philipp is said to have up his sleeve “a treasure trove of material,” including such subjects as “Poor Girls,” “The Corner Grocer,” “A New York Brewer,” “My New York,” “Adele,” “The Girl Who Smiles,” and “Two Is Company.” Adolph Philipp plays a prominent part in each picture. He has surrounded himself with a large and attractive cast, including Patsy DeForrest, Marie Pagano, Gladys King MacClure, Louise Buckley, Emily Marceau, Pauline DePalla, George Henry, Phil Sanford, Edward Elkus, Joseph P. Marquis and Will H. Sloan.

Coincident with the arrival of “Fatty” Arbuckle from California comes the announcement from Famous Players-Lasky that the corpulent comedian has been chosen to play the part of Slim Hoover, the sheriff, in “The Round-Up,” which is to be produced as a special under the direction of George H. Melford, producer of “Everywoman.” Mr. Melford is now engaged in cutting and assembling his special production of Jack London's “The Sea Wolf,” and it is probable that “The Round-Up” will be started about the first of the new year, according to reports.

To Produce “Madame X”

The picture rights of the play “Madame X” have been secured by Harry Field who has made arrangements for its production by one of the foremost producers in the country, assuring in advance a photo drama of high class enacted by a capable cast of players.

George Melford Signs Long-Term Contract

"The somewhat limited number of motion picture directors who can be said to have really arrived at the forefront of their profession has been augmented by the accession of George H. Melford to this enviable position," according to the announcement just made by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Mr. Melford," said Mr. Lasky, today, "has just signed a long term contract with our organization to produce George H. Melford Special Pictures for Paramount Artcraft. The first of these is "The Sea Wolf," adapted by Will M. Ritchey from Jack London's notable novel, and which I believe will fittingly signalize Mr. Melford's entry into the highest class of directorial activity."

Mary Minter's Director Averts an Accident

A report from Realart Pictures Corporation states that through the quick work of William Desmond Taylor, the director of Mary Miles Minter, her mother and party were saved from what might have been a serious accident, when their chauffeur, fatigued by a twenty-four hour grind, lost control of the steering wheel of Miss Minter's automobile, which at the time was traveling along a narrow road, skirting a precipice.

Old Time Music Hall Recreated for Film

A London Music Hall of 1850, quaintly interesting in every detail, was built at the Amsterdam Opera House by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore. Director John S. Robertson obtained the ideas for the details of this set from talking with a number of old actors and from the New York Public Library, and he claims that the result is accurate in every way.

Selznick Casts Are Balanced

Every Effort Is Made to Secure Well Known and Capable Players in Support

A BRIDGE might have a beautiful roadbed, but without good supporting trusses the bridge would be unsafe and useless. The same principle may be applied to a screen play —it may have a good star, but without a good supporting cast it is bound to fail, or be so weak that it will fail to please the public. At least that is the opinion of Lewis J. Selznick, who believes the exhibitor's success assures his own success.

With this idea in mind Mr. Selznick within the last year or so has gathered around the Selznick stars a competent aggregation of supporting players. It is through this system of having every part good that the Selznick productions have been applauded by the public. No expense is spared in obtaining the right player for a part, but the reward of this plan is success and wide distribution.

Examples of the strength of supporting casts in Selznick productions are shown in the roster of the following productions. In support of Elaine Hammerstein in "The Woman Game" are two of the screen's best-known leading women and stars, Florence Billings and Ida Darling. Miss Billings has been starred in productions and Miss Darling has appeared in support on the stage of Robert Edeson, Billie Burke and many other stage stars. Others in "The Woman Game" are Jere Austin, Lewis Broughton, Charles Eldridge, Lawrence Johnson, James Morrison, George Dupree, Betty Plum, Hugh Wynne and Phillips Tead, all of whom have had prominent parts in stage and screen productions.

Seena Owen, Katherine Perry, Clifford Gray, Amy Dennison, Edward Brennan and Jane Carlton, well-known screen personages, support Owen Moore in "Who's Who," a new Selznick production.

Supporting Olive Thomas in "Glorious Youth," her new vehicle, are such well-known players as Crauford Kent, who scored a personal success in "Adele"; Charles Craig, Helen Gill, Hugh Huntley, Eugene Woodward, Florida Kingsley and Pauline Dempsey.

Mr. Selznick states that no production shall go out of the Selznick exchanges, but the ones which are thoroughly rounded out with competent players in support of competent stars. In doing this he believes he gives the exhibitor the best there is, and the exhibitor in turn gives the same to the greatest critic—the public.

Typhoon Fan Co. Opens Office in Chicago

The Typhoon Fan Co. announces the opening of its Chicago office at 64 W. Randolph street, which will be in charge of Thomas R. Wilson, former chief ventilation engineer of the Chicago Health Department, and John P. Gleason, engineer, director of sales. The organization states that it stands ready to solve any problems that may be submitted regarding cooling, heating or ventilation facilities.

Third of Pathe Aerial Series Seen Shortly

According to a recent Pathe announcement, an aero squadron was placed by General Menoher, commander of the U. S. Air Service, at the disposal of the Pathe News for the photographing of what Pathe calls "some of the most remarkable scenes ever taken in the air." The Pathe News has already issued two of the series of pictures taken at Bolling Field in the course of five days of air exploits there.

Within the next couple of weeks, the third of the series will appear in the Pathe News. "It is promised," says Pathe, "that it will be the sensation of the collection, surpassing even the photographing of Sergeant Moon's parachute from an aeroplane traveling 110 miles an hour over Washington."

Pauline Serial, a Film of Timely Interest

John W. Grey, president of Supreme Pictures, Inc., announces that his new "Master Mind" serial will take advantage of the craze for the occult that is engaging the attention of many at the present time.

"We naturally secured the services of J. Robert Pauliné, well known as a demonstrator of hypnotic power," says Mr. Grey. "The rage for the psychic is universal today. Dr. Pauline was himself a pioneer both on the vaudeville stage and the lecture platform. Now he is a pioneer on the screen."

Exploitation Possibilities in Realart Film

Realart Pictures announces that "The Fear Market," featuring Alice Brady, will give exhibitors an opportunity for exploiting the picture because of the unusual assortment of gowns, hats and other costly feminine apparel to be worn by the star in the picture. An extensive campaign with suggestions for exhibitors as to how to exploit this special phase of the production is said to be now under preparation.

Clark-Cornelius Rent New Headquarters

The Clark - Cornelius Corporation has rented the entire third floor of the new Hooven building at 117 West Forty-sixth street and will be located in their new quarters shortly after the first of the year, according to report.

The Clark - Cornelius Corporation announces that in addition to the negative rights to the twelve Chaplin Classics, which were originally released through Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges and switched to Hallmark Pictures Corporation with the sale of the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges to Hallmark, Clarke-Cornelius have acquired world rights to several productions which will shortly be announced for release.

National Film Confident It Can Hold Its Own

On the last day of December of this year the National Film Corporation of America began its fifth year as a motion picture producing organization. The present concern was organized on December 30, 1915.

According to Mr. Bernstein, 1920 will see the National more than holding its own, despite the many changes in the industry which will tend to absorb the "independents." The National will begin its 1920 production season with Opie P. Read's "The Kentucky Colonel," starring J. J. Dowling, Elinor Field, Francis McDonald and others, and "Mary Minds Her Business."

Lasky Makes Announcements

Production Plans Include Staging of "Fighting Chance"; Warwick's Director

A NUMBER of interesting announcements in the line of production were made lately at Hollywood by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Among them is the statement that Thomas Heffron, who directed Marguerite Clark and other Famous Players' stars in the early days of the organization, has been specially engaged to handle the megaphone in Robert Warwick's next Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Thou Art the Man," adapted from the book, "Miles Calthorpe." The most recent work of Mr. Heffron has been the direction of Dustin Farnum. He is known as one of the most talented of film directors, with a wide experience and many successes to his credit. It is believed that the new Warwick picture will be one of the strongest that he has ever had.

It is also announced that Charles Maigne, who arrived December 10 to direct the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Fighting Chance," brought with him as his leading man Conrad Nagel, the well-known stage and screen actor who has been recently appearing in the East with Alice Brady in her successful legitimate production, "Forever After." Anna Q. Nilsson will play the feminine lead in this picture and the combination of these two capable players insures the equality of the production from the start.

Upon the completion of the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Bear Trap," which he is now doing under the direction of Sam Wood, Wallace Reid, it is announced, will begin work under the same director on a Saturday Evening Post story.

George H. Melford has about completed "The Sea Wolf," the Paramount-Artcraft special, with a selected cast and is about to embark upon a new production of unusual magnitude, full details of which will be forthcoming shortly.

Bryant Washburn has completed "The Six Best Cellars" for Paramount-Artcraft, under Donald Crisp's direction and will start almost immediately with James Cruze as director, on "Where Julia Rules."

James Cruze has arrived from his island location with Houdini and company and is finishing the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Terror Island," at the Lasky studio. As soon as he is through work Houdini will start for New York.

William D. Taylor has finished the cutting of "Huckleberry Finn."

Reports "Jubilo" as Success

Goldwyn Cites Favorable Criticisms of Press—Rogers Never Overdoes His Part

WILL ROGERS has more than duplicated his first success. "Jubilo" is regarded by Goldwyn officials as a box-office attraction of the first magnitude. "The second production of the erstwhile cowboy played to crowded houses at the Strand theatre on Broadway and received the rare econium of being praised by every trade paper and newspaper critic viewing the picture," says the Goldwyn report.

"Will Rogers, who has caught the approval of motion-picture fans with amazing rapidity, wins renewed popularity in 'Jubilo,'" reported the Evening Telegram. "'Jubilo,' a Goldwyn production, with Will Rogers as the star, is a gem," declared the Evening Sun. "Mr. Rogers' talent in pantomime becomes more forceful with each succeeding picture," said the Evening Mail.

Many of the captions in the picture drew applause as well as laughter from the Strand audiences, says the Goldwyn announcement. One which won particular favor was when Rogers, after trying for an entire night to fix a Ford, finally remarks, "No wonder he wasn't elected to the Senate with everyone owning one of these."

Goldwyn officials believe that they have in Will Rogers the real mid-Western type, "which," according to the announcement, "has succeeded the nasal New England type in the popular mind as a manifestation of genuine Americanism." Rogers' special asset to screen fame, according to Goldwyn, rests in the fact that he never overstrains his characterizations and "does not descend either into maudlinity or burlesque."

Exploiting Fields in Michigan Peninsula

First reports from A. G. Decker who is opening up a pioneer winter motion picture field in the upper peninsular region of Michigan, is said to indicate that the new territory in which he is working offers excellent prospects for business. These reports are particularly interesting in view of the fact that this field has never been regarded as much of a territory for motion pictures, it is said, owing to the prevalence of snow and ice from early in October until late in April and the consequent difficulties of transportation.

This last summer, however, a free lance gave a showing of "The Auction of Souls" in one of the larger towns, and, according to reports, within two or three weeks after, Harry Scott, manager of the First National Exchange in Detroit, had received more than thirty requests for a shipment of the print to various other places on the peninsula. Mr. Scott, accordingly, decided to send Decker into the territory with two prints, with instructions to fill as many dates as possible.

Movical Comedy to Open Holidays

The new "Wizard of Oz" and Movie Girls' Review, Hopp Hadley's new-idea combination of pretty girls, music and pictures which he calls "movical" comedy, has completed rehearsals and will open at Keith's Lincoln theatre, New York, during the holidays.

On the screen, Frank Moore and Pierre Couderc share the comedy honors, while Violet MacMillan, Mae Wells and Vivian Reed are supported by a large company playing the well-known characters from L. Frank Baum's book.

"High Speed" the First Hallmark 1920 Issue

The first New Year release of Hallmark Pictures Corporation on the Famous Directors' Series is "High Speed," according to an announcement made this week by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark. "High Speed" was produced by Hallmark under the direction of Charles Miller. The picture co-stars Gladys Hulette and Edward Earle, with Roger Lytton, Charles Husted, Fay Evelyn, Aida Horto, Jack Edwards and Matthew L. Betts in support. "High Speed" is scheduled for release the first week of January.

Del Ruth Is Making a Big Comedy Feature

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of William Fox Sunshine Comedies, is reported to be busily engaged with the personal direction of a five-reel comedy. Mr. Del Ruth has contracted for the services of the famous Singer Midgets for the production. Possibly four months will be required to produce the comedy, which will include the services of all the principal comedians on the Sunshine lot, as well as a chorus of two hundred girls.

Whitaker's Dukedom

By Edgar Jepson

haracter of Story: Comedy drama.
heme: Personal resemblance.
haracters: James Whitaker; Robert Unwin, his uncle; Dr. Arbuthnot; Tomkins; Wyse, a farmer; Brinkman, the Duke's steward; Miss Carton; Rev. Carton, her father; Lord Edward Beddard, the Duke brother; Lady Cubbington, Lady Middlemore, Millicent Whitaker, Whitaker's wife; the Duke of Lanchester and others.
he Plot: James Whitaker, dealer in antiques and second-hand furniture, vainly appeals to his uncle for funds to support his business. He is walking part way home to save car fare when he is overtaken by a storm and takes refuge in a field where he encounters another man who is his exact double. As they are staring at one another a bolt of lightning strikes them and when Whitaker comes to himself the other man is dead and so disfigured that nobody could identify him. Examining the contents of the dead man's pockets Whitaker learns that it is the Duke of Lanchester. He decides to play Duke for a few days. Changing clothes with the dead man he goes to the Duke's residence and successfully imposes on his servants and physician with the tale that the shock has robbed him of his memory. He finds the Duke has many intimate friends, especially among the ladies. Two, in particular, like to be kissed. As Whitaker is married this does not strike him as proper, but as he and his wife are not happy together, he does not mind it so much as he might. Elizabeth Carton, daughter of the rector, sends for Whitaker and tells him that she was present when he changed clothes with the Duke. As the price of her silence she demands that he make her the Duchess. He declares that he could not consent to a loveless marriage and she finally agrees that they shall give one another a chance to fall in love. Eventually she is not sure but that he is the Duke, but she hopes he is not because of the women. Whitaker proceeds to astonish everyone by improving conditions for his tenants and generally doing more good than any other Duke of the line has ever done. He stays on because he is interested in Elizabeth. The Duke's brother comes, realizes that Whitaker is not the Duke, and accuses him of being an impostor. This is overheard by the steward. Just then Lord Beddard, the brother, is stricken with apoplexy and dies. The steward attempts blackmail and is so soundly beaten for his pains that he is convinced that Whitaker is the duke after all. Carton forbids the marriage with his daughter. Whitaker decides to provide his wife with a competence and escape to America. While he is in London his wife dies of an overdose of chloral. All obstacles to his remaining Duke are now removed and only the father's ban prevents the marriage, so Whitaker and Elizabeth elope. Whitaker decides that fate thrust him into the Dukedom and he will stay with it.
ocale: London and Enligh country.
icture High Lights: Lots of good situations; splendid opportunity for comedy.

A Modern Madonna

haracter of Story: Society drama.
heme: Suspicion.
he Plot: Margaret is married to Victor de Jarnette and they have a happy honeymoon, but shortly after they have settled down to humdrum married life Margaret discovers that Victor has become entangled in an affair with another woman. The discovery is made when her suspicion is aroused by seeing Victor riding in the Park with another woman. Later she intercepts a telegram sent to his office and all doubts are set at rest. There is a short and bitter quarrel between the two and Victor deserts his wife and child, going to Europe. Richard, the elder brother, deploring Victor's behavior, takes it on himself to do all that he can for the deserted wife and child. He supplies a servant of his own and leaves nothing undone to atone for the neglect of his brother. After an absence of three years Victor returns from Europe and there is an attempt at reconciliation but this is a failure. It develops that before going to Europe Victor had changed his will. A week after his return he is shot and killed at his office and Richard de Jarnette finds Margaret leaning over Victor's body with a revolver in her hand. The husband, just before he dies, declares that he was cleaning a gun and that it was discharged by accident. This satisfies the coroner but the older brother is suspicious—he believes that Margaret did the shooting. Richard is now Margaret's enemy. The will is read and it is found that the child is left in Richard's care—a provision which is legal under the laws of Washington, D. C. Finally the mother decides to steal her child and take it away. She takes her son and dresses him as a little girl. Then come months of wandering and the constant fear of detectives. Margaret is at last overtaken by Richard's agent and the two are brought back to Washington where the child is put in the custody of the uncle according to the will. Margaret, however, is allowed to see the boy from time to time. The boy becomes attached to the uncle but misses his mother. Margaret has taken up charity work and in the course of this she finds a litle boy who very strongly resembles her own son. She is so much struck with the resemblance that she decides to adopt this child and does so. She then concludes to take the boy's mother to live with her as well. Eventually she discovers that this boy is Victor's son also and that the boy's mother is the one who really did the shooting. The legitimate son is now taken with scarlet fever and after many hours of fearful watching the boy is out of danger and Margaret and Richard are brought together in a love which has been tested and tried.
Locale: Washington, D. C.
Picture High Lights: Strong emotional scenes; pathos, suspense and action.

Mrs. Bobble's Trained Nurse

By Geo. Fox Tucker

Character of story: Comedy.
Theme: System.
Characters: Mr. Bobbles; Mrs. Bobbles; Baby Bobbles; Mrs. Bobbles' father; Mrs. Bobbles' mother; Audrey Eleanor De Villiers, the trained nurse.
The Plot: When the story opens Mr. Bobbles is expecting an addition to the family and after some conferences between the various members of the family it is decided that instead of the old family nurse an up-to-date trained nurse shall have charge of the house. As soon as she arrives she proceeds to put into effect the discipline which she has been taught in the hospital and Mr. Bobbles soon finds that he has no place in his home which he can call his own. The cook is in much the same fix and nothing but extra money will induce her to stay under the new regime. Mr. Bobbles finds that he is not permitted to smoke. He inquires whether this disturbs his wife and the nurse replies that whether it does or not is immaterial—scientifically it ought to disturb her and therefore it mustn't be done. Mr. Bobbles must not whistle, he must not sing—he must not even snore. In his generally excited condition he writes his father-in-law a dunning letter about another man's wash bill and insults so many of his clients that he begins to doubt whether he will ever again be able to build up his practice. After the event he finds that he must have a pass to enter the sick room and since the doctor has not provided him with this it is not possible for him to see his wife. The baby can be seen but must not be handled; and most especially it must not be kissed. The baby is tagged with an identification disk because, as the nurse explains, other babies might be brought in and in that case there would be some danger of confusion of identities. Mr. Bobbles suggests that it might be a good idea to tag the mother too in case any other young mothers should be brought in. The nurse admits that this might be a good idea, but as it had not yet been introduced into the hospital when she left, she cannot give it her unqualified endorsement. Throughout the story presents in a whimsical way the well known peculiarities of the trained nurse—especially the sort of nurse who takes complete charge of every household she enters and rules it with a rod of iron.
Locale: Any city.
Picture High Lights: With the introduction of a little more action would make a good two-reel comedy.

Red Pepper's Patients

By Grace S. Richmond

Character of story: Comedy dramas.
Theme: A doctor's humanity.
Characters: Red Pepper Burns, M. D.; Ellen Burns, his wife; Miss Matthewson, a nurse; Gardner Coolidge; an old patient; the old patient's wife.
The Plot: This is a series of short stories woven around the character of Red Pepper Burns, a red-haired irascible but kindly and big-hearted surgeon who has a name for gruffness, but is full of the milk of human kindness. These stories aim to be little lessons in human nature and humanitarianism. The first story is entitled, "An Intelligent Prescription" and deals with the conference between Dr. Burns and an old friend, Gardner Coolidge, who comes to Burns seeking a prescription for insomnia. Coolidge has waited in the waiting room and listened to various patients talking with the nurse. He is finally ushered in and Burns immediately inquires as to the cause of his insomnia. He learns that Coolidge has separated from his wife. He finds that there is no real reason for this beyond a quarrel and the pride of each one making it impossible for either to acknowledge a mistake. He excuses himself and leaves Coolidge with Ellen Burns, his wife. Coolidge is impressed with the love and trust there is between Burns and his wife. Burns then takes him to call upon an old patient who is slowly dying, his aged wife at his side making the most of the few days that are left to them after a life time of devotion. Burns then points out to him the folly of allowing false pride to alienate him from the woman he has chosen to be his mate. Coolidge admits that he has been in the wrong and agrees that he will go to California to see his wife and endeavor to persuade her to come home, but he insists that he has need of a prescription to cure his insomnia in the meantime. Dr. Burns writes out the prescription and when Coolidge opens it he reads: "Walk five miles every evening. Drink no sort of stimulant except one cup of coffee at breakfast. Begin to make plans for the cottage—don't let it turn out a palace. Ask the good Lord every night to keep you from being a proud fool."
Locale: Any small town.
Picture High Lights: The wife should be introduced into the film story; the quarrel and the cure.

The Rain Coat Girl

By Jennette Lee

Character of story: Comedy drama.
Theme: Optimism. Co-operation.
Characters: Isabel Merton; John Berwick, Sr.; John Berwick, Jr.; Eben Braithwaite; Aaron Merton, Isabel's father; Ellen Braithwaite; Gilbert Carter; mill hands, etc.
The Plot: Isabel Merton is stenographer in the Berwick mills. John Berwick, the junior partner, is a poet of the newer school, having taught himself how to write poetry much as he might teach himself how to run an automobile, by studying a book about it. John is in love with Isabel, but does not know it. His father fears that this may be the case and lets John write poetry so long as he does not dictate it to Isabel. Merton, Sr., has a serious business rival in Eben Braithwaite who is always endeavoring to learn the secrets of the Berwick business. Isabel is aware of this and on her guard at the office, but is won over to friendship with Ellen Braithwaite. Ellen Braithwaite is in the habit of working socially to forward her father's business interests. In spite of his dislike for Braithwaite as a business rival, Berwick, Sr., thinks that Ellen would make a good match for John and encourages John to see much of her; John knows so little of the business that there is small danger that he will give away any of the secrets. Isabel's father, Aaron Merton, runs a small drug store which has long since lost most of the custom it once had. He has fallen into the habit of spending his time sitting in the back room with two or three chronic idlers, drinking just enough to keep him from being awake to opportunities. He does not renew his stock of goods and makes no effort to get new trade. The family lives upon the money which Isabel earns in the factory. Isabel is seized with the idea of helping her father put the store on its feet, but she sees that this can be done only by not letting him know what she has in mind. Having a natural genius for selecting clothing for any given type she lays in a stock of dresses, collars, etc., with certain mill girls in mind. Each article is chosen with the idea of selling it to a particular girl. This plan works very well and the stock is promptly sold out. Her father's interest is reawakened and he soon takes active charge of the new business and gives up the drug trade altogether. Isabel now finds that she is happiest when she is starting something new and putting it on its feet. She leaves the factory and founds a co-operative laundry. She learns that Braithwaite has "planted" a new secretary with Berwick, Sr., as a sort of business spy. She warns the old man and his gratitude for her action—although he already knew of the deception—is such that he agrees to John's marriage with Isabel and he himself decides to marry Ellen.
Locale: A milltown in Pennsylvania.
Picture High Lights: A little weak in dramatic situations, but capable of development.

Don't Ever Marry

By Edgar Franklin

Character of Story: Farce comedy.
Theme: Matrimony.
Characters: Joseph Benson, electrical contractor; Dorothy Whynn, his wife; John Whynn, her father; Mrs. Whynn; Barbara Dow; Mr. Dow, her father; Mrs. Dow; Judge Kettle; Bill Fielding, in love with Barbara; Myra Cray; Cray, her husband; Sitterley, New York financier; hotel clerks and others.
The Plot: Joseph Benson has just sold out his electrical contracting business in Elmfield—a little Western town near the city of Ponsbury. He intends going East to accept a position. Myra Cray who runs the art shop adjoining his shop calls on him and solemnly warns him that whatever else he does, he should never marry. Benson calls upon John Whynn and tells him he desires to marry Dorothy. Whynn refuses his consent and declares that if Benson marries her he will kill Benson. Nevertheless Benson persuades Dorothy to be married by Judge Kettle. They plan to have Dorothy stay with a friend after a dance in Ponsbury and that she will come to the hotel where Benson has engaged the bridal suite after the dance. They will take an early train for the East. Benson gets a letter from Bill Fielding, his pal. Bill is in love with Barbara Dow. Her mother objects and has forced Barbara to become engaged to another man. The wedding is set for Saturday of the same week. Bill cannot get home from the East in time to prevent the wedding. Benson has a telephone message from Barbara asking him to meet her. She says she intends announcing at the dance that she and Benson have been married by Judge Kettle that day. Kettle has gone away for a month's hunting that afternoon. Benson protests and Barbara threatens to expose his marriage to Dorothy. At the dance Barbara makes the announcement. Barbara is to go home but Whynn and Dow both insist that she must stay at the hotel with Benson. Dorothy is much upset but shortly after Barbara and Benson reach the hotel, she learns the facts and comes to the hotel herself. Then Myra Cray arrives and says that her divorced husband is in the lobby below and that she has told him she is married to Benson. Benson now has three women all claiming to be the bride and all in the bridal suite at the hotel. This situation leads to many farcical incidents. Whynn finally learns of his daughter's marriage and while he has modified his intention of killing Benson, decides to beat him up. At this point Mrs. Whynn arrives and as Whynn is a terror to everyone else, she is a terror to Whynn. She has learned the true facts and declares herself in favor of Benson. Benson, meanwhile, has learned that Sitterley, his prospective boss in New York is in the hotel and fears that the scandals momentarily threatening to break will ruin his prospects. In the end everything is cleared up and even Bill arrives in time to claim Barbara so that all four start East happily married.

The Bells of San Juan

By Jackson Gregory

Character of Story: Western romance.
Theme: Adventure. Love.

The Plot: The action takes place in San Juan, a village near the Mexican border. Dr. Page has just arrived in town when the sound of shots is heard and the bell ringer of the mission church sounds the alarm—he has certain bells to ring for certain occasions. It develops that a sheepman has been murdered. Dr. Page is walking near the edge of town at dusk when she encounters the Sheriff who warns her to stay in the heart of town and preferably inside at night. She tells him of the shooting which he has missed, being out of town on business. He proceeds to the Casa Blanca saloon, run by Galloway, a bad man who was responsible for the death of Norton's father. Evidence is lacking, however, to convict Galloway or his men of the murder of the sheepman. Norton knows that Galloway is planning a tremendous raid on the surrounding country with the aid of renegades and Mexicans and plans to catch him when the time is ripe. A second murder occurs and it is evident that this is done by The Kid, one of Galloway's henchmen. Galloway taunts Norton because he makes no arrest and tells him the Kid will be in the Casa Blanca that night. Norton goes there with two deputies and in a shooting affray is struck on the head by a bullet but not seriously hurt. Dr. Patten attends him. Dr. Page believes that he has sustained an injury to his brain. Certain mysterious one-man robberies are reported which are evidently not the work of Galloway and Virginia Page suspects Norton of these. One night she shows him $100 in gold she has received as a fee from a patient. That night he attempts to steal it and she catches him. He confesses to the other robberies. She tells him his head has been injured and urges him to consent to an operation. He refuses. They go together to the country to attend an injured man. Dr. Page threatens that if Norton does not have an operation she will expose him. He decides to lock her up until he shall have rounded up his enemy. She dopes him. Dr. Patten discovers the two together spending the night in the hills and threatens blackmail. Dr. Page holds him up and at the point of a gun forces him to assist her in operating on Norton. The operation restores Norton's moral sense. Galloway meanwhile has kidnapped Florence Engle and called out his outlaws. Norton rescues Florence and in the fight which follows Galloway and most of his men are killed. Norton and Dr. Page are married and he resigns his office to retire to his ranch with Dr. Page as his partner.

David Vallory

By Francis Lynde

Character of story: Western railway.
Theme: Honest business.
Characters: David Vallory, engineer; Virginia Grillage; Eben Grillage, her father, a railway contractor; Judith Fallon; Lucille Vallory; Herbert Oswald, attorney; Vallory, David's father; Judson; Dargin; Lushing.

The Plot: David Vallory is engaged in government work in Florida when he is called home by a telegram from his father whose bank is in trouble. David returns and finds affairs in a bad state, but owing to the timely arrival of Eben Grillage, an old friend of his father's, a large draft is put through the bank and the situation is saved. The business is wound up. David finds that the village expects him to marry Judith Fallon because he has written her while away. Before he leaves his home town she tells him that she can never marry any other man. This makes him think that he should not tell Virginia Grillage that he loves her. He is given a job by Grillage and finds that the contractor's men are in the habit of cutting down expenditures so as to make an extra profit. He is finally sent West on a big job for Grillage. Grillage has been building a tunnel for a railway company and one of Grillage's men, Lushing, has become an inspector for the railroad company and declares that there is a weak spot in the tunnel which makes it unsafe. Grillage does not want to spend the money necessary to make the repairs since this would cut his profit to nothing. Vallory comes to the town where the tunnel is and he is inclined to believe that while Lushing is a renegade and has sold out to the railroad company, his contention regarding the tunnel is correct. David finds Judith in this town in a dance hall. She has been brought West by a man named Judson, who has deserted her and has since been taken care of by a man named Dargin. David looks Judith up, but she will have nothing to do with him. David declares that he will put the dance hall out of business and, attempting to do this, is wounded. Judith rescues him, but leaves him as soon as he is able to move. David's blind sister, Lucille, has been wanting to marry Herbert Oswald at home, but David will not consent because of her infirmity. Lushing makes up his mind to ruin the contracting firm and also to kill David. Impatient of the cave-in, he decides to blow up the tunnel. Judith brings word to Virginia that a time-clock bomb has been placed in the shaft and that it will explode just as the shifts change in the tunnel. Virginia presses a light engine and the engineer into service and goes at top speed to the tunnel where she finds the night shift waiting to go in. She learns that David is inside and runs into the tunnel on foot. There is an explosion and when she comes to she finds that she has been imprisoned in the tunnel with David and others. They remain for two days shut in. When death seems imminent she tells David she loves him. When rescued they learn that her father has been paralyzed and his sister has been married. David is now in charge of the construction and effects a compromise with the railway company whereby the tunnel is to be made safe. David and Virginia are married.

The Man on Horseback

By Achmed Abdullah

Character of Story: Love and adventure.
Theme: A fight for a mine.
Characters: Tom Graves, miner; John Truex, his partner; Martin Wedekind, an American-German; Bertha, his daughter; Heinrich Wedekind of Berlin, Martin's brother; Baron Von Gotz-Wreed; Lord Vyvyan, English agent; Krauss, a valet.

The Plot: Tom Graves and John Truex are partners in working the Yankee Doodle Glory mine near Spokane, Washington. This mine is apparently played out and Truex finally gives it up in disgust, turning over his share to Tom. Tom secures financial aid from Martin Wedekind, German born but American in every fibre, and proceeds to work it. Tom is in love with Bertha Wedekind, who likes him, but who has been visiting her uncle in Berlin and becomes enamored of German uniforms. All this takes place before the war. A peculiar ringing sound is discovered in the mine which causes the men to think it haunted and a new metal is found in the assay. This metal has the peculiar attribute of transmitting sound at great distances. When the ore is sent to New York for assay German bankers get wind of it and desire to secure it for use in submarines. An offer comes to Tom for $500,000 for his mine but Wedekind urges him not to sell to Germans of whom he is suspicious. Baron Von Gots-Wreed comes to Spokane to visit and makes many friends. He makes a friend of Tom and urges him to come to Berlin. Tom has just been refused by Bertha and makes up his mind to go. On the ship he meets Bertha, who thinks that he has followed her. Bertha has received a false cablegram stating that her grandmother in Germany is very ill. It is the desire of the Germans to get Tom in Berlin and to have Bertha to hold him there. They arrive in Berlin and Tom is made much of. The Baron has him put up at clubs and introduces him to society. Tom is finally induced to become an officer in a Uhlan regiment and receives his lieutenant's commission, swearing allegiance to the German Empire. Bertha's grandmother warns Tom as openly as she dares to leave Berlin but he makes light of her fears for his safety. In accepting his position as an officer in the Uhlans Tom is required to make up a schedule of his properties and sign it. The paper referring to the Yankee Doodle Glory mine has a transfer on the back of it and his signature transfers the title to the German government. The Germans, having secured title to the mine, determine to get rid of Tom and a fight is started in which the Baron challenges Tom to a duel. The Baron fires before the signal is given but Tom fires quickly, wounding the Baron in both wrists. Tom is arrested and charged with the murder of the Baron, who is supposed to have died though this is not true. Tom is confined to his quarters. He has meanwhile made the acquaintance of Lord Vyvyan, an English agent who is attached to the Embassy. Bertha desires to leave. Tom leaves his quarters to assist her and is sent to prison where he remains six months. War breaks out with France. Upon agreeing to lend his name for the registering of a shipping line from Hong Kong to San Francisco, the Germans permit Tom to rejoin his regiment. With Vyvyan Tom and Bertha make a dash for the border and are intercepted by the Baron and Heinrich Wedekind. After a fight the Germans are killed and the three reach France where Tom becomes an officer in the French army.

A Woman Named Smith

By Marie Conway Oemler

Character of Story: Comedy drama.
Theme: Family pride.
Characters: Sophy Smith; Nicholas Jelnick; Alicia Gaines; Doctor Geddes; The Author; The Suffragist; Judge Gatchell; Luis Morenus, an artist; Emiline Phelps-Parsons; Mr. and Mrs. George Westmacote; Mrs. Cheshire Scarboro; Achmet, Jelnick's servant; Daoud, another servant.

The Plot: Sophy Smith, a stenographer who has risen from a position as office girl to be secretary to the head of the firm which employs her, inherits a Southern mansion and estate from an eccentric great-aunt. Sophy is descended from Cockney English but is thoroughly American herself, educated and cultured. She has, however, none of the family pride which is common in Hyndesville, South Carolina, where her inheritance lies. Sophy's great aunt, Sophronisba Scarlett, has fought with everyone in the place and left the estate to Sophy with an idea of spiting her relatives and neighbors by leaving the handsomest place in the state to "a woman named Smith." Sophy goes South, taking with her a pretty file clerk, Alicia Gaines, whom she invites to come and live with her. They find the house a tremendous affair though only two stories and an attic in height. The walls are immensely thick; the gardens are very extensive and in a very neglected state. They find that on each side of the house dwell descendants of two antagonistic branches of the family; on the one side Dr. Richard Geddes, descended from Freeman Hynds, and on the other side Nicholas Jelnick, Austrian on his father's side, descended from Richard Hynds. These two had been brothers—Richard, the elder a spendthrift and wastrel; Freeman a sober and God-fearing man. Jessamine, a poor cousin, had disappeared immediately after Richard's marriage to another woman and immediately after this marriage there had been discovered the theft of the family jewels. Richard was suspected and turned out of the house. He died soon after and his father died of grief. The property descended to the house of Freeman Hynds and finally came into the hands of Sophy Scarlett who left it to the woman named Smith. The two girls set about fixing up the house and soon get it into shape. It is filled with historical treasures and priceless antique furnishings. To keep it up they decide to invite a very few distinguished paying guests charging a round price for the privilege of living in Hinds house. This they try with great success. A great author, a great cartoonist a well-known Suffragist, and other distinguished people arrive and the atmosphere of the place is so intellectual and overpowering that the neighbors and natives generally overcome the prejudice they feel against the interloping Northerners and make friends. Geddes loves Alicia and Jelnick loves Sophy, though they do not discover, until well toward the end of the story that this love is returned. Jelnick and Sophy solve the secret of the missing jewels and have some exciting adventures. All comes well in the end.

Locale: A small town in the South.

Picture High Lights: This could be made into a very effective picture; pleasant, humorous and with plenty of dramatic action. The story is much stronger in material than appears in this short synopsis.

Sinister Island

By Wadsworth Camp

Character of Story: Mystery.
Theme: Fear.
Characters: James Miller; Tony, his servant; Andrew Anderson; Molly, his wife; Morgan; Jake, Anderson's man; Miss Morgan; the fisherman; the coroner.

The Plot: James Miller, a practical man with no belief in the supernatural has been told by his doctor that he must go South for a rest and for this purpose has chartered a small yacht for a cruise in Southern waters. Just as he is starting he receives a letter from Anderson, a friend, urging him to come to Captain's Island on the Snake River where Anderson and his wife have been staying. There is a tone of terror in the letter which rouses Miller's curiosity and while Anderson doesn't say anything very definite about the place it is evident that both he and his wife are very anxious to have some company. Arriving in the neighborhood of the island, Miller is warned by an express agent that the place has a bad reputation and is reputed to have been haunted ever since the early days when a slave trader lived there and plied his trade of importing slaves, even after the importation of slaves was against the law. Arrived at Captain's Island, popularly known as Sinister Island, Miller is met by Anderson who comes aboard the yacht and unburdens his mind of the fears which have been harrassing himself and his wife for some weeks. Anderson declares that not only is the house the scene of many weird and inexplicable manifestations but that there is no doubt that the island is full of snakes and that he and his wife are convinced that it will be a matter of days only before these snakes will make some sort of attack upon them. Morgan, another resident on the island, has noted the same sinister atmosphere of the place although his home is more cheerful. Strange noises are heard in Anderson's house, doors open and close without adequate reason; whisperings are heard and the whole place has an atmosphere of ill-omen. Miller endeavors to laugh at the fears of his friend. The next morning early Miller surprises Miss Morgan on the beach and desiring to speak to her approaches her, whereupon she runs and he chases her, catching her after a hard run. She does not explain why she ran, further than to say that she was frightened. Miller learns that this young woman is an enigma. The second day Jake, the handy man of the Andersons, goes for a walk in the wood to call on Morgan's cook. Anderson's cat has been killed by a snake and Jake is anxious to leave the place. A sudden outcry brings Miller to the woods where he and Morgan find Jake dead, bitten on the leg by a snake and with peculiar bruises on his wrists. The next day Tony is attacked in the woods and received the same marks on his wrist but escapes being bitten. He cannot explain how it happened. Miller agrees to stay in Anderson's house and a rattle is heard in the night but nothing can be found. Then strange blue lights appear. Miller starts to investigate. Miss Morgan appears and begs him not to go. The same strange marks are on her wrist. The ultimate explanation of the story is that Morgan is a smuggler and does not desire other people on the island. He does not stop short of murder to be rid of them. The girl is his niece, not his daughter. Morgan and his lieutenants are captured but Morgan escapes into the burning jungle where certain death awaits him.

Vitagraph News Bits

Every Vitagraph Company is at work on a new production. William Duncan is well along with the first episode of the new serial "Love and Honor," in which Edith Johnson is playing opposite him; and Director William Bowman is making the tenth episode of "The Invisible Hand" featuring Antonio Moreno with Pauline Curley.

Montgomery and Rock have a new leading woman in the person of Patsy DeForrest, and this pair of comedians are now making the last scenes for the first comedy in which she appears.

With the return of Lucille Carlisle from New York, work was begun on a new two-reel special Vitagraph release under the direction of Larry Semon, who also plays the featured part. Bill Hauber and Frank Alexander are playing in support of the director-star.

Helen Lynch is playing opposite Jimmy Aubrey in a two-reel comedy, and Babe Hardy is taking the principal supporting role. Noel Smith is directing.

Director Dave Smith is making the final scenes for an O. Henry story, "An Afternoon Miracle," in which Jay Morely and Virginia Nightengale are featured.

About Metro Players

Selection has been made of a portion of the cast for Bert Lytell's next Screen Classic, "Jimmy Valentine," and Vola Vale will play the lead. Eugene Pallette is to appear in the part of "Red." This company has started work under the direction of Arthur D. Ripley, who has been film editor at the Metro since its producing organizations came to the coast.

Principals for the cast of the second Drury Lane melodrama, "The Hope," being filmed under the direction of Herbert Blache, have been selected, and are Jack Mulhall, Ruth Stonehouse, Marguerite de la Motte and Frank Elliott. Elliott is an English actor who played the leading man role in this city during its original presentation at the Theatre Royal.

"Stronger Than Death" is the latest Nazimova feature released through Metro

Viola Dana's Screen Classic, "Eliza Comes To Stay," has been started, and W. A. Howell, who directed the Flagstaff Comedies, has been engaged to film this subject. The supporting cast has not been selected, but the company is now working at Pleasanton where a number of children are being used. Twenty-six members of the Metro staff are at this Northern California town, making the necessary New England scenes.

Henry Otto has been assigned to the direction of May Allison in "Judah," after one day's vacation following the completion of "The Willow Tree," in which he virtually made three productions as a new process of filming was tried out which will not be used.

The other two companies at work at the Metro studio are those making "Shore Acres" being produced by Rex Ingram, and the forthcoming Nazimova production.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

A change has been made respecting the next film starring Bryant Washburn, it having been arranged to film "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," adapted from the stage play by the same name, instead of filming "Where Julia Rules." This latter play will be produced at a later date. James Cruze is to be director of the next Washburn subject.

Lois Wilson has been selected as leading woman for the Robert Warwick play "Thou Art the Man," which is now being filmed under the direction of T. N. Heffron. The company is working this week at the Cawston Ostrich Farm in Los Angeles, where a number of the South African scenes are being filmed.

Another change has been made with respect to Ethel Clayton's next story. It had been planned that this star would next appear in "All in a Night," under the direction of Walter Edwards, but now it is planned that the next film will be "A Lady in Love." Director Edwards will make this film.

Arrangements have been completed for filming of "The Prince Chap," under the direction of William C. De Mille, and a cast that will include Lila Lee and Kathlyn Williams as principal supports to Thomas Meighan, has been selected. Mr. DeMille plans to make the first scenes for this film December 24th.

Charles Maigne, who is to direct the Robert W. Chambers' novel play "The Fighting Chance" with Conrad Nigel and Anna Q. Nilsson, has arrived in Los Angeles and will begin work on this picture next week.

Julia Faye, appearing in Paramount-Artcraft pictures

Bebe Daniels has been selected as leading woman for Wallace Reid in "The Dancin' Fool," which is now being produced under the direction of Sam Woods.

December the twenty-second will mark the beginning of production of the first George H. Melford Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Round-up"; and it is now announced that the making of "Held by the Enemy," the well known William Gillette play, will not be started until shortly after the first of the year.

Fox Studio Doings

William Russell and a big company of Fox players, especially selected to appear in support of this star in "Bruce of Circle A," left this week for Phoenix, Arizona, where they will make the exterior for this play, adapted from the novel by Hal Titus. Helen Ferguson is to be Mr. Russell's leading woman, and the supporting cast includes Duffy Shade, Robert Cain, George Stewart, Nelson McDowell and John Donnelly. The Russell Company will be in Arizona about ten days.

All the scenes have been made for the H. H. Van Loan story, "The Three Gold Coins," under the direction of Cliff Smith, and Tom Mix is having a brief vacation before the new production is started. Margaret Loomis is the leading woman for Mix in this production.

A number of new players have been engaged by the Fox organization to appear in a forthcoming production. Harry Todd will do a character part, and Henry J. Hebert appears as the heavy in the initial release starring Shirley Mason, entitled "Her Elephant Man." Vivian Rich, who has been on the screen for a year, is leading woman for Buck Jones in "The Last Straw," which is now nearing completion, under the direction of Charles Pritchard. Ben Neely is taking the heavy role in the Madlaine Traverse subject "The Penalty," and Corinne Kirkham is playing an ingenue part in the same, which is being directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

A title "White Lies" has been given to the subject now being directed by Edward J. Le Saint, which stars Gladys Brockwell.

Supervising Director Hampton Del Ruth of the Sunshine Comedies now has five units working on coming productions. No titles have been selected for any of these comedies, which will not be completed for the next two or three weeks.

Universal Newsettes

Several changes are announced to take effect immediately at Universal City. Perhaps the most important is that E. M. Bipitz, formerly of the New York executive organization of the company, is on his way to Los Angeles to assume the duties of controller, succeeding George Morris, who resigned.

M. M. Montgomery has been named as production manager by General Manager Tarkington Baker, and assumes this post immediately. Other changes announced by Mr. Baker provide that Frank Lawrence, film editor, shall have general supervision of the photographic laboratories, succeeding L. L. Lancaster, who has been laboratory chief for several years, who has taken up camera work with the William C. Dowlan Company. Monroe Bennett will be superintendent of the laboratory, assisted by Jack Guerin.

A distinct novelty in titles was filmed this week for "The Breath of the Gods," which stars Tsuri Aoki. For this, the proscenium arch of the Universal City Theatre, which is 38 x 42 feet, was used. Japanese players drew the curtains of the stage aside revealing the title of the play.

Several permanent titles have been

Harry Carey is star in "Marked Men," a Universal production decided upon for the forthcoming Universal productions. The subject made under the working title of "The Three God-Fathers," will be known as "Marked Men"; "The Woman in the Plot," has been changed to "The Devil's Pass Key," and "Ambition" will be known as "The Gorgeous Canary."

The casting department of Universal has engaged Lola Gonzales to play an artist model role in "The Primrose Path," now being made by Wm. Christy Cabanne. Miss Gonzales is a professional model, and has been pictured on more than one hundred canvases. Most of her professional work was done at the Chicago Art Institute.

The week has seen the finishing of "The Devil's Pass Key," under the direction of Eric von Stroheim. Several other subjects will be completed within the next week.

"Blind Chance," with Robert Burns, Charles Dorian and Peggy O'Dare, under the direction of Edward Kull; and "Roarin' Dan," with Hoot Gibson and Ethel Shannon, directed by Phil Rosen, are two two-reel western plays started this week.

With the recovery of Art Acord, who has been ill for a number of weeks, work has been resumed on "The Moon Rider," Universal serial.

Mary Texas, leading lady for Emmet Dalton in "When a Man's a Pal"

A tense moment in "The Third Generation," a Robertson-Cole feature

Goldwyn

After two months' preparation, work has been started on the filming of the first of the "Edgar" series at Goldwyn studios by E. Mason Hopper. This series of pictures is adapted from the Booth Tarkington stories of the same name, and it is very probable that the children engaged for the first release will play in all of the series. A lad named Johnny Jones will take the lead, and the other principal children are Buddie Messinger and Lucile Rickson. players engaged for the first number are Nick Cogley, Arthur H. Lithe, John Cossar, Virginia Madison, Marie Dunn and Fred Moore.

The first of the series will be titled "Edgar" and present plans provide that each release will have an individual name.

Madge Kennedy this week began work under the direction of Harry Beaumont in "Two Cents Worth of Humanness," which is adapted from the Octavius Roy Cohen novel of the same name by Gerald Duffy. John Bowers will be the leading man and is now being given its final editing by other principals of the Kennedy-Beaumont cast are Willard Louis, Florence DeShon and Richard Tucker.

Wyndham Standing has come to the coast to play the leading role in "Earth Bound," an adaptation from the Basil King story which is being produced by T. Hayes Hunter. Other leads in this subject are Mahlon Hamilton, Flora Levelles and Alec B. Francis.

Here and There

George Beban, who has now been at work a month on his coming production, "One Man In A Million," will need fully that much more time to complete this subject which is to be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser. This week, more than 200 dogs, eighteen boys and six babies were used in a number of scenes. Irene Rich, Helen Eddy, and Lloyd Whitlock are principals in support of Beban in this play.

Morris R. Schlank reports completion of filming of the Hank Mann comedy "Paper, Paste and Poultry," which Director H. C. Raymaker. In the mean time, Mann has begun work in a new picture which is at present known as "Barbers and Blacksmiths," which is being directed by Fred Windemer.

Helen Holmes, who arrived in Los Angeles from New York the latter part of last week, was taken ill the day following her arrival and on Saturday, Dec. 13th was operated on for appendicitis. Miss Holmes is convalescent and her doctors assure Manager Sam Warner that Miss Holmes will be able to resume producing activities in four or five weeks.

Manager Sam Warner arrived in Los Angeles a few days in advance of Miss Holmes with his producing staff, which includes Gilbert P. Hamilton as director, and was in readiness to begin producing a new serial when Miss Holmes arrived.

General Manager Sam Rork, this week took the Katherine MacDonald Company to Monterey, where the first scenes for the Monte Carlo story, "The Guests of Hercules," by C. M. and A. M. Williamson are being filmed by Director J. A. Barry. The making of these scenes will require at least two weeks, thus keeping the company away from home over Christmas. During the absence of the production unit, the technical staff will complete the building of the big Casino set at the studio in which much of the action of the photo-play will take place. Norman Kelly will be the leading man opposite Katherine MacDonald, and the supporting cast includes Nell Craig, Edwin Stevens, Howard Gaye, Rudolph Valentino, Virginia Ainsworth, Sybil Gocelyn, Fannie Ferrari, Walt Whitman and others. This subject will be the fourth release for Miss MacDonald on the First National program.

It is now expected that two weeks will be required for completion of the first Lois Weber production for Paramount-Artcraft. This film was at first known as "A Modern Pilgrim's Progress," but this title will only serve as one to be used during the making of the production. An exceptionally big cast of well known players are appearing in this initial subject produced by Miss Weber. The entire cast includes Frank Glendon, Clara Windsor, George Hackathorn, Hal Cooley, Una Trevalyn, Edith Kessler, Helen Kelley, J. P. Lockney, Evelyn Selby, Martha Mattox and Carl Miller. Dal Clawson, who was in charge of photography in the making of a number of Lois Weber productions for other programs, is with Miss Weber in the making of her present release, having been placed under contract for the coming year. A number of innovations have been worked out for this film and have now been photographed successfully.

"Roads of Destiny" will be the next play for Pauline Frederick, which will probably be directed by Frank Lloyd, who has just finished the filming of "The Woman In Room 13."

Changes in production plans are bringing the Mabel Normand Company back to Los Angeles. It was the original intention to film "Maggie" in New York, but now production of this has been delayed until a later date. The scenario staff at the Culver City Studios is now preparing another script which will be used for this star.

HOKUM'S intention of learning the person who brought puttees into the industry as a necessary part of a director's uniform, has caused considerable trouble to the copy boy. He has been forced to run hither and yon in an effort to get the accurate information, and in all instances has discovered he is treading in dangerous waters. Several have intimated that C. B. de Mille brought this great aid to the industry, while others claim that the introducer was Henry McRae, who is now in Japan. Definite dates will be secured, and then the problem will be solved.

Titus Sells Two Stories to Fox

Harold Titus has just sold the picture-play rights for two of his stories to William Fox. One of them is "The Last Straw," in which a certain hero, Buck Jones, will appear as star, and the other is "Shod with Fire," with William Russell as star.

Mr. Titus admits that his job, of course, is manufacturing fiction, but he has various other duties that occupy as great a part of his attention as writing does. From May till September, he has to fish for trout, from September till freeze-up, his mind runs most of the time on ducks, and then there are iceboats and fishing shanties. That is why he maintains that the Great Lakes country is the one place for people who love to live richly, and also why Mr. Titus is one of the best writers of Western stories living today.

Tom Santschi—Veteran

THOMAS SANTSCHI'S interpretation of the brutal "John Sheen" in the American Film Co.'s latest super-feature, "Eve in Exile," founded on the novel by Cosmo Hamilton, is surprising even those who have followed his work consistently since his appearance in "The Spoilers."

In the role of "MacNamara" in this Rex Beach production Santschi staged a fight with William Farnum which is still conceded the greatest tussle ever caught by the movie camera. Immediately he became a prime favorite with the fans. He and Kathlyn Williams were co-starred in "The Adventures of Kathleen," and Mr. Santschi after-

HENRY MORTIMER was the most impressive "nobody" we have ever seen, while he read the prologue in "Everywoman" at the Rivoli last week. At least, he called himself "nobody," and the subtitles frequently referred to "nobody," but it seemed to us, in view of that fact, a tremendously important part. All joking aside, Mr. Mortimer's reading was really excellent.

MAY McAVOY is looking forward to her trip to New Orleans with Alice Joyce in the near future. Miss McAvoy is playing the ingenue lead in the Vitagraph production of "The Sporting Duchess," and will be duly chaperoned by her mother.

ONE OF THE STRIKING FEATURES in "The Miracle of Love" at the Rialto this week, besides Lucy Cotton's performance, which is sure to be exquisitely dainty, is said to be Ida Darling's wardrobe. Miss Darling is widely known for her finished portrayal of grandes dames, and among the gowns worn in this latest picture are a silver tissue tea gown on mediaeval lines, a black velvet dinner dress with a chemisette of jet, and a biege taffeta on bouffant lines. We are looking forward to seeing them.

BETTY ROSS CLARKE, leading lady for William Farnum in "If I Were King," has been signed for the part of the "Eugenic Mother" in "The Very Idea" with Taylor Holmes, writes that she is eating two desserts with each meal, trying to plump up and look truly eugenic. Miss Clarke has decided that the exigencies of the films are varied beyond belief, and we don't blame her in the least.

SASHA VOTICHENKO and Mrs. Votichenko gave an informal reception in their studio at the Hotel des Artistes last week in honor of Lucy Cotton. We are glad nobody like that thought of giving us a reception, because, under such circumstances, we might have been expected to pronounce their names; but we are sure Miss Cotton was equal to the task. Among the guests prominent in musical, literary and art circles were Baroness Alexandra de Markoff; Roshanarza, the Oriental dancer; Emiliano Renaud; M. La Liberte; Mrs. Ariadne Holmes Edwards, composer of "God Bless You, My Dear"; Mrs. Adelaide Cotton, Mrs. Aaron Marx, James Watts, the impersonator, Clara Tice, the artist, and others. The reception was in the nature of a celebration in honor of the contract which Miss Cotton recently signed with the International Film Company, to appear in Cosmopolitan Productions.

EDMUND GOULDING is back in town, after a short visit to England. He is even more enthusiastic about the films than ever, but this time is directing all his energy toward the producing end; and it is rumored that he is about to begin work at the Talmadge studio.

JACK WARNER, president of the Paramount Al St. John Comedy company, is one of the youngest producers in the game. His P. A. affirms, in proof of this statement, that he has been voting but seven years. Perhaps he wasn't interested in politics before that.

R. WILLIAM NEILL, who recently finished his direction of E. K. Lincoln in "The Inner Voice," has been engaged to direct Norma Talmadge's next production, "The Woman Gives."

GEORGE HACKATHORN is now at work with Lois Weber, playing the most difficult role of his career. In this latest Weber production he plays three distinct ages, covering a period of seven years.

No Temperament for Norma Talmadge

THERE is no artistic "Temperament" about Norma Talmadge. Miss Talmadge is one of the most sane and reasonable little women in the world. She has learned by long and hard experience that it pays to control one's temper. About her work she is always kindly and friendly. When things go wrong, she simply gets busy and tries to straighten them out.

"Temperament," says Miss Talmadge, "is too often an excuse for not 'playing the game.' Temperament strikes me as being the anarchistic tendency in life. It is purely a condition of non-co-operation.

"If one is grouchy and wants to escape the consequence of acting in accordance with that grouch, one lays it all to 'temperament.' A real artist cannot afford to be temperamental. She has an important mission to fulfil, and temperament, or shall I call it temper, hinders rather than helps her to obtain true success.

"I have often heard it charged that women of the stage or screen were more temperamental than men. I have heard it said female players 'blew up' and 'raised cain' about the place oftener than those of the opposite sex. There is nothing more unture. I don't believe there is a bit of difference between the cosmic make-up of men and women. Given the same circumstances of living and the same training, I believe one will find that women will develop the same mental and spiritual attitude that is found in men, or vice versa."

Miss Talmadge is an alert, thoroughly modern American girl. She has risen to the very highest position among dramatic actresses of the ward directed and played the leads in a number of feature productions.

Early in 1918, after eleven years in pictures, Mr. Santschi began a free lance career as character heavy or lead, appearing in several of the Madlaine Travers and Gladys Brockwell pictures, with Anita Stewart in "Her Kingdom of Dreams," and with Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," "Shadows," and "The Stronger Vow."

As the "Sheen" of "Eve in Exile," he has a role that is greatly to his liking—"the best thing I've done this year," says he. It is a part that calls for a portrayal of strong conflict that is both mental and physical. Charlotte Walker is "Eve" of the title, and the cast boasts such other screen players as Wheeler Oakman, Melbourne MacDowell, Harvey Clark, Violet Palmer, George Periolat, Martha Mattox, L. C. Shumway and Perry Banks.

Tom Santschi cares not a rap for dolled-up hero roles. He vastly prefers heavy parts, believing that such characters offer not only greater opportunities for acting, but a wholesome variety which keeps the actor out of ruts and protects the fan from the weariness of seeing the same player time after time in roles of a similar nature.

MAY McAVOY is looking forward to her trip to New Orleans with Alice Joyce in the near future. Miss McAvoy is playing the ingenue lead in the Vitagraph production "The Sporting Duchess."

Everything designed by "De Racon" is exclusively for Miss Barriscale in her screen productions.

HERE'S THE LATEST YET!

Eliot Howe, now directing Frank Keenan, was to meet his star, part of the actors and his technical force out on a location in the Mojave Desert, California. But the director and his camera man missed the only train out of Los Angeles for the isolated desert town. Autos could not reach it, and the next train was twenty-four hours late. That twenty-four hour delay would have cost the company something like two thousand dollars.

"But why have modern inventions if you can't use them?" demands Mr. Howe.

So he hired Miles Wescott, a Los Angeles aviator, to take him to the desert location. They flew over the Sierra Madre mountain range and landed safely at the railroad station that was to have Mr. Howe's destination an hour before the train he had missed pulled in! The air-line distance was but seventy miles, and Mr. Wescott's biplane, a military tractor pattern, made the flight in fifty-five minutes.

Last Week We Met—C. V. Rucker

NO, FRIEND READER, the illustration does not belong with another heading but with this particular one just as you see it. The name of "C. V. Rucker" has been identified for so long awhile with the Radio Slide Company that it is doubtful if one supply dealer out of a hundred knows that the person signing the firm's correspondence is a woman. But such is the case.

Mrs. Rucker came from the South about so many years ago (it is left to your imagination after viewing the excellent likeness of the subject to decide on this delicate question) as soon as she arrived in New York she entered the photographic business. Even then she was interested in slide making.

She looked about her and discovered that the lantern slide was to become a large factor in the exhibition of motion pictures, to announce coming attractions, to make special announcements, etc. As a result of this hunch she set at work on a slide of a special nature, which developed into the Radio Slide of today.

When the Radio Slide was perfected, she had it patented in the United States and in practically every foreign country. Today as president and active head of the business she stands out as one of the most successful women in the motion picture industry, or in any industry for that matter.

Mrs. Rucker has ideas on the Woman in Business which are somewhat different from those which others of her sex have formulated.

"I do not believe," she said, "that a woman should become mannish as soon as she enters the business world. There is no need for her to put her smile in storage and solemnly swear to emulate the stern facial expressions of so many business men. The business profession isn't as bad as all that."

Without further comment we will allow the reader to judge from Mrs. Rucker's likeness whether or not she lives up to her creed.

No doubt there are many men who could take lessons from her in the science of merchandizing. As has been said previously she has patented her slide in every country where its sales possibilities are worth the outlay, and in many of these countries she has established agencies or else has sold the "rights." But this has not been done blindly. Before she enters a country she analyzes conditions until she is absolutely certain there is a demand for her slide already existing or waiting to be worked up, then she goes ahead with a merchandizing scheme.

Her firm is probably the only one of its kind in this country selling exclusively through agencies. Although Mrs. Rucker advertises extensively, you will notice that the home address of the firm is never given. Instead the buyer is referred to "agents everywhere." Mrs. Rucker has found that this method of sales is profitable inasmuch as it enlists the dealer in wholehearted cooperation because he knows that whatever business is done in his district will be done through him and will not be side-tracked to the home office.

Mrs. Rucker is a credit to the motion picture industry. Starting with only an idea—but a good one to be sure—she has increased the scope until every part of the globe or wherever motion pictures are found, are finding innumerable uses for her product.

Equipment Operating Projection, Questions Answered

The Transverter—What it is, How it Works How it Differs from Others, and What it Does

A Complete Article on This Device with Dependable Data from a Personal Test

MANY requests have been received from readers to prepare an article on the Transverter that would show by means of diagrams and drawings how the machine works and what happens at different points in its operation. On the occasion of a recent visit to Cleveland, the home of the Transverter, the Editor discussed with Mr. D. C. Cookingham of the Hertner Electric Co., the desirability of publishing some real facts on the operation and behavior of his Transverter. Up to that time, so far as we know, the electrical characteristics of the device had never been commented upon, although demonstrations had been freely given to all who had desired them.

Mr. Cookingham agreed heartily with the scheme of the News and offered the services of his assistants and the facilities of the shop to be used as we wished. We were told that we could run any sort of test we had in mind and could publish the figures as we obtained them.

Standing in the shipping room were fifteen Transverters waiting for the expressman. We were allowed to select any one of these machines for our test. A 50 amp. double arc machine was taken and placed on the stand where all tests are made in the Transverter factory.

The test of the Transverter will be made under conditions as specified by the standardized rules of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. One of these conditions is that the test be made at the normal operating temperature of the machine. In order that this temperature be attained it will be necessary that the machine operate under normal load for several hours before the electrical measurements for the computation of the efficiency are made.

Therefore, the Transverter was connected up to the supply lines and run with normal load for several hours. As writers of fiction would say, while the temperature is being brought to normal we will spend our time looking over the machine to see how it is made.

The Transverter is a motor generator set of the vertical type. The floor space taken up by the machine varies from 18 in. square to 21 in. square depending on its capacity. This small space requirement is a big advantage of the vertical type motor generator over the horizontal type.

The height and weight of the Transverter also vary with its capacity, the limits for height being 33 in. to 45 in. and in weight 500 to 1500.

Transverters have now been developed in the following sizes:

Single Arc Machines (35
(50 Amps. D. C.
Double Arc Machines (35

Although being manufacturer, the single arc machine is not recommended for motion picture work. Where two projection machines are used, the single arc allows a steal over from the first arc to the second, but as the second arc is cold, the changeover is accomplished by some sputtering and unsteadiness in the arc. With a double arc machine the arcs of the two projection machines are connected in series, the one not in use being short circuited by means of the switch on the projection machine. The second arc may be warmed up without disturbing the first arc and the changeover accomplished without any sputtering and unsteadiness and the operator is assured that the current through the first is exactly the same as the current through the second, hence the light from the two arcs will be the same.

The Transverter is a motor generator set consisting of an alternating current, squirrel cage induction motor and a specially designed direct current generator which supplies the current to the arc, each mounted on a separate shaft and couples together with a flange coupling. The design of this coupling is such as to allow easy removal of the armature in case it is necessary to turn the commutator. In the case of the Transverter the motor is operated from an alternating current supply line. By means of the energy developed in the rotor the motor drives a generator which delivers direct current to the carbon arc.

Motors can be supplied with the Transverter for single phase, two phase or three phase operaion and for any commercial frequency and voltage. The change in frequency for any given capacity does, however, often make a difference in the dimensions of the finished machine. As for nstance where the supply is 25 cucles the 75 amp. double arc machine would have to be made considerably larger than the same capacity machine for use on 60 cucles, the weight and price increasing correspondingly.

The Motor

The motor is the squirrel cage induction type with unusually low resistance rotor. On account of this low resistance rotor the speed of the motor s kept practically constant even under the sudden changes in load that occur when the second arc is struck and also when it is short circuited. f the speed varied considerably at these changeovers the arc would show unsteadiness and be particularly hard to handle.

For the benefit of the few who are unacquainted with the term "squirrel cage type of rotor" it will be described briefly. In a rotor of this description there are no "coils" in the commonly used sense of the word. The conductors which take the place of the coils consist of rods of solid copper, one rod being placed in each slot of the rotor. All of the rod ends on each side of the rotor are usually connected together by means of a circular copper band or end-ring. In the Transverter a large number of slots are used which reduces the resistance of the rotor.

In the Transverter all connections between the conductor and end rings are acetylene welded with copper, a feature which serves two purposes. First: that of further reducing the resistance of the rotor and second: assuring ruggedness and freedom from loose rotor bars. The rotor has a large number of bars, these being screwed across the surface. Both these latter factors tend to eliminate the noise usually encountered with alternating current motors.

The Generator

Here lies the heart of the Transverter success. While any motor of several types might be used with fairly good results to drive a generator, on the design and operating characteristics of the generator depend the action and behavior of a motion picture arc.

What will happen when the second are is struck?

What will happen when one arc is short circuited?

What will happen if both arcs are short circuited?

What will happen when the arc lengthens and the voltage increases across the arc?

These and similar queries must be satisfactorily answered by the behavior of the generator before its use can be considered in projection work.

In the case of the Transverter, the style of the generator is explained by the phrase "Bi-polar shunt wound commutating pole type."

Exhibitor's Supply Company

MR. H. A. R. DUTTON, founder of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, is the president of this rapidly growing enterprise, while Mr. K. R. Douglas is vice-president and secretary and Mr. G. A. Lincoln treasurer.

Two years ago, when the present sales plan of the Simplex Company was evolved by Mr. E. M. Porter, the Exhibitors' Supply Company was chosen to represent the Simplex product in Chicago and the greater portion of the state of Illinois. So rapidly did the enterprise flourish that in a very short time Mr. Dutton found it necessary to open a branch office in Indianapolis, Ind. This office, which is located at 157 North Illinois street, is operated under the personal supervision of Mr. R. E. Gunn, who is a conspicuous figure in the theatre equipment world and whose administration of business affairs has made the Indianapolis branch one of the most efficient in the chain.

The Exhibitors' Supply Company, in order to thoroughly cover the territory included in the Simplex franchise, opened up also a branch office in Milwaukee. Through this office, which is located at 204 Manhattan Building, southern and eastern Milwaukee is taken care of, as well as Clinton, Des Moines, Henry, Jackson, Lee, Louisa, Muscatine and Scott counties in Iowa.

Chicago Office Exhibitors' Supply Co.

This latter office is in charge of Mr. C. E. Bunce and is also fitted up in the same general manner as are the other branches of the Exhibitors Supply Company.

Mr. Bunce speaks very encouragingly of the future outlook of his branch for 1920, and expresses the opinion that the number of theatre installations that will materialize from the untiring efforts of his office will more than double the past year's business.

one of the oldest supply houses in the nation, having been founded in 1893 by Mr. George Breck.

This supply house, which distributes Simplex projectors in northern California, western Nevada and Oregon, can indeed be considered a pioneer, and the activities of the company in question are well known to all engaged in the motion picture industry on the Pacific Coast.

A finely furnished and equipped headquarters is one of the features of the Breck Photoplay Supply Company, which establishment is under the personal supervision of Mr. Thomas Maguire, general manager. Mr. Maguire, too, is an old-timer in the Pacific Northwest, having operated one of the very first motion picture theatres in Portland, Ore., and his exhibition experiences, together with a knowledge gained during his service in the supply business, qualifies him especially for the distribution of the popular Simplex.

At the Breck headquarters can be found everything that is needed in the way of equipment for the up-to-date theatre, and it is at its headquarters at 98 Golden Gate avenue that there is daily visualized scenes of extreme activity.

Analyzes Condenser Breakage

SOME weeks ago when he was employed as projectionist in a theatre at Midland, Michigan, the writer of the letter printed below had a great deal of trouble with cracked condensers. His query to the department was seen by H. F. O'Brien, representative of the Westinghouse Company on the West Coast, who immediately sent in his idea of the trouble, together with a way to correct it.

Mr. Templin says:

Thanks to Mr. O'Brien—also the News.

I have just finished reading both your suggestions in the November 15th issue of the News, and will tell you of my method which I tried and is in use in the theatre at present.

First, I have not been connected with the mentioned concern for the past three weeks, having resigned my position. I am now open for any good thing that may turn up, my former place being filled upon my leaving.

Now, back to "Condenser Breakage."

Before I left the theatre, I put in a set of 6½ x 7½ P. Convex and Bi-Convex condensers. Putting the 7½ P. Cx. next to the arc. Now, by doing this it threw my arc far enough back to prevent the flame from reaching the condenser, but did not overcome the breakage on one machine, as the condenser cracked after it had been in about four hours. The other one is still in good shape, on the other machine, as it hasn't even cracked.

Now I laid this to one of two things:

The continued extreme heat from the carbons being yet too close, or,

The booth ventilation.

But, both machines are equipped the same, with the exception that one has a Powers Inductor and the other a Fort Wayne Compensarc.

There is plenty of room for expansion in the condenser holders.

I am going to try and get the manager's permission to try out Mr. O'Brien's suggestion and will be glad to let you know the results.

During my almost two years stay on this one job, I talked Motor Generator until I think I would make a full-fledged salesman, all to no advantage.

This house is one that a town of this size can respect without a hazy conscience. That's why I could never understand myself why I never got the "outfit" which both the house and patrons deserve.

Reply:

Although the placing of your 7½-inch condenser lens next to the arc made it possible for you to draw back your arc, yet you should consider that by so doing you increased the wastage of the light source. With a given size condenser lens, say, 4½-inches in diameter, the cone of light which it will pick up will be mainly proportional to its distance from the arc. In other words, the nearer you can get your arc to the glass the greater the cone of light which will be rendered useful.

The mere fact that with similar operating conditions on the two machines your trouble was with but one arc would seem to show that there is some local trouble to be fixed up. Try out Mr. O'Brien's suggestion and let us know the result. If the theatre is in the class you infer that it is there is not a single reason why a. c. should be continued. Here's an opportunity for some M. G. salesman.

How to Set Motiograph Shutter

E. K., Chestnut, Ill., asks:

Please explain how to set a shutter on the old type Motiograph which used the inside shutter? Also where can the music be obtained that you review for the piano?

Answer:

The principle of setting the shutters for the Motiograph is the same as for any other Motion Picture machine, that is, the larger wings of the shutters should cover the light opening at aperture as nearly as possible during the time that the intermittent sprocket and film are in motion and the smaller wings should pass during the exposure while the film is at rest. It is not necessary to pay any attention to the small wings when setting the shutters, as they take care of themselves and are only intended as interrupters of the light, which reduces the flicker in the picture to a minimum.

To set the shutters remove the front plate which carries the lens after which remove the outer shutter wing (the one nearest you), loosen the screws on the inner shutter, leaving the shutter just loose enough on the shaft to be turned easily by hand, and tight enough so they will not move of their own accord. Remove the gear cover, after which take hold of the balance wheel and turn the mechanism in the same direction as during the operation of the machine, turn very slowly until the intermittent sprocket wheel starts to move, after which set the lower edge of the large wing of the inner shutter about ½ inch above the center of the aperture opening (indicated by a dotted line in illustration Figure No. 1) when looking on a line parallel through the center of the light aperture. Now revolve the mechanism slowly in the same direction, observing when the intermittent sprocket wheel stops, that the top edge of the large wing of the inner shutter is about 1-8 inch below the center of the aperture opening (indicated by a dotted line in illustration Figure No. 2).

Tighten the screws firmly after which revolve the mechanism until the inner shutter is at the original position, that is, the lower edge of the large wing should be about 1-8 inch above the center of the aperture opening. Replace the outer shutter on the shaft, tighten the screws partially in the same manner as was done with the inner shutter, set the top of the large wing about 1-8 inch below the center of the aperture opening (indicated in Fig. No. 4) after which tighten the screws firmly.

The space between the two large wings of the shutters should be exactly the same width when the intermittent sprocket is just ready to start (but not started) as it is just as the intermitten sprocket has come to rest after turning, and said space should be exactly in the center of the aperture opening when looking on a line paralle through aperture opening.

After the setting of the shutters has been once done it will be found very simple and easy to repeat.

George C. Dobbs Manufacturing Titles

ONE of the best known figures in the technical end of the motion picture industry during the last twelve years or more has been George C. Dobbs, who was laboratory superintendent for the biggest producing organizations, including such firms as the old Triangle, Universal, etc. His experience led him to realize that in too many cases the lack of perfection in the titles has made them interruptions rather than acquisitions to the films. He has, therefore, spent several years perfecting a process which has now culminated in a patent, and which he is now employing in his own organization, Moving Picture Titles, Inc., which is located at 260 West 42nd street. The fundamental part of this process is a dead-black background, which is really dead-black, and which Dobbs claims permits all illustrations and reading matter—hand lettered or type, and of any size—to stand out to a greater degree than possible heretofore.

Moving Picture Titles, Inc., has acquired the entire top floor of Loew's American theatre building, where a large force is installed to handle the accounts of producers and exporters of films. In addition, there is a group of translators on the premises, who are competent to turn English titles into correct foreign idioms for European, South American and Oriental trade. Upon the installation of his new plant, Mr. Dobbs was the recipient of good wishes from his friends and co-workers in the industry, including the laboratory superintendents of practically every important producing and export firm.

Camera! An Article on the "How" and "Why" of Practical Cinematography

Explaining Many of the Technical Problems of the Assistant Cameraman

By William Barbarin Laub

IT is our idea to make this little talk on motion picture photography of interest to the vast army of theatre-goers who have in the past d manded information on every other phase of motion picture production. Many have taken up cinematography with inexpensive amateur outfits available today and many others probably would drop Kodakery for this art if they were more certain of getting fair results.

Film players, scenario writers, directors and assistant directors, too, should also know something of this all-important step in the building of the galloping daguerreotypes.

The amateur photographer, the professional assistant cameraman working for better things and the cameraman who has not attained top-notch perfection and refinement in his work, may find the contents of some value. But it is not for the expert that it has been offered for we are going to touch on very few subjects that he is not familiar with, or should be, at least, though if he finds any food for thought, may he chew to his heart's content. A great many men who have gone through the "mill" and become proficient in this art seem reluctant to encourage others who seek to follow them and often refuse the most elemental instruction. It seems that they feel that newcomers are a menace to them; that the field is already overcrowded and that a safe motto must be "the fewer the better." Nothing could be further from the truth nor more selfish and narrow for the field of real motion picture photographers will never be crowded. Too few of them are artists or ever will be artists, and every year that goes by progress in production of picture-drama demands more and more that photographers be more than merely expert in their line; they must be expert in other lines closely associated with their work and moreover possess an intuitive, artistic and dramatic sense.

I am going to devote little space to the most elemental things in photography. Neither will I go very far into any subject upon which others have ably written, for the nearest library will produce their work. Film manufacturing concerns have also put on the market handbooks dealing with lenses, laboratory work, color photography and ordinary "still" photography. This offering is essentially "from the inside" of the motion picture studio and is intended as a foundation of cinematography.

THINGS IN GENERAL

One of the leaders in motion picture camera work was giving a few words of advice to his assistant who had been intrusted with the taking of a few minor scenes. Listen in with me: "Be sure kid. 'Never say to a director after shooting a scene, 'Yes...I think it's alright.' You must be sure that it is alright or he will not be sure of you." Words of wisdom!

If there is any doubt in the mind of a tactful cameraman when working with a tempermental star or director it is far better to find some imaginary fault with something you have just photographed and ask for a retake, it is possible, than to remain doubtful and cause others to distrust your work. When working with reasonable people, simply be honest and ask for the retake.

Remember at the very start, that it is very important to be sure of your work; the success or failure of the picture is largely on your shoulders, directors and writers to the contrary notwithstanding, and your responsibility is as great if not greater than that of any other member of the company. There are times when a cameraman is out on location with a high priced star for weeks when it may not be possible to receive frequent reports on the negative he has shipped to the laboratories.

His responsibility assumes still greater proportions and he must be sure of everything.

The real cameraman doesn't spend sleepless nights until his stuff returns from the laboratory. He is pretty certain when he stops grinding on his last scene and the exposed film has been taken away that it is every bit alright and the best work he and his camera can do, because he knows what is happening in his camera every time he turns his crank handle.

THE "COMPACT"

Kodak of Cinema Cameras With a Weight of Ten and One-half Pounds.

To reach this necessary degree of skill in cinematography a man must understand the elementary science of photography. He must also be mechanically perfect, or in other words, must become a part of his camera to such an extent that he goes through the mechanical business of preparing to take pictures without a slip.

I have seen the most experienced men occasionally forget to readjust their film after removing it in certain types of cameras for the insertion of a focusing ground glass. I have seen them forget to open an outside vignetting iris. Frequently the machine is not leveled properly and once in a while they'll grind away without an inch of fil in the magazine.

Then some much abused laboratory force accused of losing a valuable piece of film. Th director knows positively that it was shot. Wh has happened really is this: a budding you cameraman, ashamed to confess that he has ru out of film in the middle of a scene, has kept grinding with a wonderful poker face. Often, to he escapes blame. But he cannot always away with it. Besides, the most foolish cheat is the man who cheats himself.

WHAT HAPPENS INSIDE

You may be able to load a camera, expose fair accurately and secure passable results unde average conditions, but do you really know wh you are doing? Or, perhaps, it would be bett to say: Do you know what is going on inside the camera?

Yes, you are exposing film, at a varying ex pense per foot and someone else is paying for It might only be fair to the fellow who is footin the bills to know what you are doing.

You know that a certain amount of light necessary to produce a negative of the prope density. In that simple fact lies the thought of century and an appaling amount of scientific investigation. The result of years of experimentation has been no rule that can be applied to every case and when we get into motion picture work, rules simply give up without a struggle.

Your exposure must be approximately correct, though of course there is quite an amount of latitude possible either way from an absolutely normal exposure and skillful laboratory workers can secure good prints from slightly "under" or slightly over-exposed negatives. An over-exposed negative, however, is easier to handle so long as it has not been "burned."

A negative is produced by the action of the rays of light passing through the lens and coming to a focus on the sensitive surface of the film which is composed of an emulsion of silver salts. It is well to remember that these rays of light are those which are reflected by the object or objects you are photographing. Thus, light colored objects reflect the strongest rays and have the greater effect on the sensitive surface of the film. It is as though the subject you are photographing is producing these rays in various colors of the spectrum.

It is the oxidization of the silver salts by the light rays which produce various degrees of oxidization and thus, accurate reproduction (in negative) of various colors. The whole is a negative impression of the subject photographed.

Rays from a bright, clear sky will render the sky in the negative opaque, or nearly so, and should usually be avoided unless a filter is used. The rays reflected from a white surface will be almost as Slow motion and still subjects should usually be photographed with a 170° shutter, while fast motion, especially on water or in the air, with good light, should be photographed with less exposure (see exposure tables). The professional will explain that this "snaps up the action" and that is just what it does, for this reason. The action of the film in threading through the camera is a stop-and-start action, each square of film stopping in front of the lens at the instant the aperture of the revolving shutter passes the lens and admits the light or exposure.

Thus it may be easily seen that the size of the shutter opening controls the time of exposure.

As has been already pointed out, your lens diaphragm opening is controlled somewhat by the length of your exposures, though we were then considering varying speeds in turning the camera, which also affects the duration of each exposure. For an example, you may be taking a scene at a race track under light conditions that call for a stop of about f-16 and your shutter is set at 120°. The next scene you photograph is a view of racing automobiles coming at a speed of 100 miles an hour around the track. You should change your shutter to about a 90° opening and open your diaphragm to about f-11-f-16; "splitting," stops, such an opening is called. But always remember that the shutter opening has no effect on the depth of focus of your lens. The lens stop alone controls that, and you must not sacrifice too much definition for speed of exposure unless you can change your focus while taking a picture, or unless you are working with your lens at infinity.[*] Changing focus can be done on any camera, but more easily on some than others. Depth of focus, or definition of a lens, is its power to sharply define at the same time objects nearer the camera and objects further from the camera than the object focused upon. The nearest point showing satisfactory definition will vary according to the focal length and the stop used, and it should be remembered that the shorter the length of focus the greater the depth of focus, i. e., you will have more latitude either way from the object focused upon with a two-inch lens than with a six-inch lens. The length of focus is the distance in inches or millimeters[†] from the center of focus to the focusing screen when the lens is focused upon infinity.[*] Photographically, infinity is a distance beyond which no readjustment of focus is necessary to secure a sharp image of more distant objects, and it increases in proportion to the focal length of lens used.

Negative and Positive Films Showing Correct Contrast for Interior Work.

New Camera Technic Reported

UNUSUAL interest has been aroused by a new process of motion picture phtotography which gives to the screen the appearance of a painting.

Pastelography, as the process has been named because of its pastel-like quality, has been perfected by Erich Von Stroheim, a Universal director, who has recently gained fame with his "Blind Husbands" production.

At first sight a photodramatic scene made by Pastelography appears to be slightly out of focus. The impression, however, is set aside after the first few feet of the film have been screened.

The effect is that of soft diffusion, without the murky fuzziness that makes some of the ultra-futurist photodramas so difficult for the eyes to follow.

Erich Von Stroheim worked out his system of Pastelography in collaboration with Ben Reynolds, the cameraman who filmed "The Devil's Pass-key," which Stroheim has just completed at Universal City. In speaking of the new-found art:

"Mr. Reynolds and I consider Pastelography the greatest stride toward more artistic photodramas that has been taken by the industry in years. We believe that it has the artistic quality that playgoers so much appreciate without the vagueness of other methods of diffusion."

Just how Pastelography is done was not divulged by Von Stroheim; and Reynolds, when questioned at Universal City, was inclined to belittle his part in the perfecting of the process and attribute it to the director's suggestions.

At a recent meeting of a Los Angeles photographic society the subject of Pastelography was brought up in debate. The following suggestions as to its character were offered:

"Pastelography is attained by using a soft focus lens."

"Pastelography is accomplished by the use of a lens slightly clouded by the makers; a lens undoubtedly made to order."

The three suggestions outlined in the foregoing were swept aside by statements from Von Stroheim and Reynolds.

"A soft focus lens," said the director, "will show a greater diffusion toward the edges of the picture. Pastelography is uniform in diffusion."

With a technical analysis of the second theory, that Pastelography is out-of-focus photography, Reynolds said that any part of a long room screened by Pastelography will be equally in focus with any other part of the room. He added: "If the view were out of focus there would be some part of a long room that would be clearer than others; depending upon whether the correct focus was too far from the lens or too near. Pastelography gives an absolutely even focus to near and far objects."

The third suggestion was not considered seriously by either Von Stroheim or his cameraman. They agreed that a clouded lens would so greatly cut down light that its use on a motion picture camera would be impossible and that its effect would be a foggy film rather than the sparkling effect of Pastelography.

MUSIC

Musical Equipment

Ultra Presentation

IT has again been proven that the only successful method of exhibiting pictures is to place the musical destinies of a theatre into the hands of a capable musician who has not only had sufficient experience, but is also a man of aggressiveness and constructive wits. By the above statement, I don't wish to create an impression that a capable musician is all that is necessary to assure financial and artistical success of a theatre. The real man behind the gun is the man who has full charge of a house, but an able musician represents one of the most important links in the chain of theatrical management.

Mr. Tom Grierson has been engaged to supply the artistic environment in the houses controlled by the Regorson Corporation of Rochester, N. Y., which will undoubtedly place these theatres in a class by themselves and will establish them as institutions of national importance. I dare repeat "national importance" because surroundings are one of the greatest factors in the life of a man, woman, and child. The above Corporation has for its president, Mr. George Simpson, a man in the business since its infancy and a man who has gone through the stages of seeing admissions paid from a nickel to a dollar, the price being paid today, to witness a motion picture show in Regorson houses, the Regent, the Piccadilly, and the Gordon, all under the management of Mr. Will Callahan. The above mentioned gentlemen have been successful exhibitors, but, nevertheless, are advanced and progressive enough to realize that modern exhibition needs not only good management, but also must have artistic environment.

"Show me the people you associate with and I will tell you who you are." The very same applies to music. According to reports which I have recently received from the Regorson Corp., they intend to develop the art of music in their theatres to the utmost perfection. They are increasing their orchestras; they are spending a tremendous amount for music and are engaging the best musicians; in fact, expenses are not taken into consideration. There is only one thing in mind, and that is "perfect exhibition of pictures."

After reviewing the intentions of the above Corporation as well as the fact that they have with them Mr. Tom Grierson, one among the most competent musicians in the country, I wish to put the following questions to some exhibitors.

"Why is Mr. Simpson spending all this money in spite of the fact that he has already attained enviable success?" "Why does Mr. Simpson surround himself with all these capable men in spite of the fact that he has proved himself to be able to take care of all the phases of the game?" "Why is he attempting to create a more artistic atmosphere in his theatres in spite of the fact that none of his patrons have ever objected to the existing entertainment." "Why don't their patrons object to a raise in the price of admission?" Because he is giving a little better than the best.

In the main principles of showing pictures, as far as the picture itself is concerned, Mr. Simpson's shows are exactly the same as any show in any Nickelodian but he gets a high priced admission for the atmosphere and methods of presentation.

I firmly believe that Mr. Grierson will fully live up to the traditions of modern and dignified picture exhibition, and will unquestionably create an atmosphere in the above three theatres, which will be unequalled anywhere.

I predict that in a very short time the theatres, controlled by the Regorson Corp. under the musical guidance of Mr. Tom Grierson, will be the drawing power of vast audiences and it will be the theatre itself and the atmosphere, if once established cannot be obliterated. In brief, you can see a picture "anywhere," but you can't surround yourself with an environment of refinement and art—"anywhere." As music editor of these columns, and as a man who has been in this industry for years, I congratulate the Regorson Corporation on their excellent choice and wisdom in engaging Mr. Tom Grierson for the purpose outlined in the above paragraphs. THE EDITOR.

Music Is the Master

IT is an indisputable and established fact that "music" is of great importance and an absolute necessity for modern motion picture presentation. "Silence" is the predominating factor of the motion picture; and music is the only means possessing sufficient power to bring about the metamorphose from silence to realism.

To some of our exhibitors the above may read like a vainglorious tribute to our fellow musicians, but it really isn't, although some of them may be able to prove in plain figures that music cannot add to their box office receipts. Far be it from me to call such exhibitors narrow-minded, or anything of the kind. In theatres located in very small towns or secluded sections of large cities, any music or no music will do. It is evident that a theatre located as mentioned above is exclusive in itself and there is no necessity of adding extra attractions such as music, to give it exclusiveness. But where competition reigns additional features are essential. Builders, and architects in alliance with business ingenuity and capital have created an abundance of effects, for the purpose of establishing "exclusiveness." But, in no instance were they able to accomplish this without music. Some of the lighting effects and stage settings in our modern theatres are marvelous, but they are mute; all for the eye, and nothing for the ear. They are all additional fictions to pantomime, nothing but decorations to a dumb show.

The motion picture screen of today is in the strictest sense of the word, a world's mecca. We see Russians, Hindoos, Chinese, Arabians, Spaniards and every nationality of the world, portrayed in characteristic episodes. Who knows all these languages? No other interpreter but "Music" can accomplish the feat of telling us of their vivid lives. No other language but "Music" can be called international. So, why not give music the honor of being the sole and only element able to elevate Motion Picture presentation into the realms of "exclusiveness."

The acme of perfection in motion picture presentation can only be attained if allied with an appropriate musical accompaniment and any exhibitor deviating from the above, will soon become convinced through actual experience that his theory is false. Innumerable instances warrant the truthfulness of the above statements.

The Capitol Theatre of New York City is but one example. In building this tremendous house all parties concerned had but one thing in mind—"exclusiveness." Its seating capacity, lighting effects, in fact everything installed in this modern giant, represents the latest that inventive genius was able to create. The Capitol theatre is unquestionably the 20th century marvel, of interior decoration, and offers the greatest comforts to its patrons. In brief, it is the last word in modern theatrical construction. The Capitol theatre is in a class by itself, but its exclusiveness in construction were by no means sufficient to give it that exclusiveness in motion picture exhibition. "Music" gave this up to date theatre colossus its final touch. The famous band of 70 men under the able leadership of Arthur Pryor, together with the great organ, these were the factors that gave the Capitol theatre "exclusiveness," in the strictest sense of the word, and placed it among the greatest institutions in the world for the purpose of Motion Picture presentation.

Mr. Exhibitor, bear in mind that "Music is the Master."

THE EDITOR.

Tempo

THIS word is used in both English and German to express the rate of speed at which a musical composition is executed. The relative length of the notes depends upon their species, as shown in the notation, and the arrangement of longer and shorter notes in bars must be in accordance with the laws of Time, but the actual length of any given species of note depends upon whether the Tempo of the whole movement be rapid or the reverse. The question of Tempo is a very important one, since no composition could suffer more than a very slight alteration of speed without injury while any considerable change would entirely destroy its character and render it unrecognizable. The power of rightly judging the tempo required by a piece of music, and of preserving an accurate recollection of it under the excitement caused by a public performance, is therefore not the least among the qualifications of a conductor or soloist.

Until about the middle of the 17th Century, composers left the tempi of their compositions entirely to the judgment of performers, a correct rendering being no doubt in most cases assured by the fact that the performers were the composer's own pupils; as soon, however, as the number of executants increased, and tradition became weakened, some definite indication of the speed desired by the composer was felt to be necessary, and accordingly we find all music from the time of Bach and Handel marked with explicit directions as to speed, either in words or by reference to the Metronome, the latter being, of course, by far the most accurate method.

Verbal directions as to tempo are generally written in Italian, the great advantage of this practice being that performers of other nationalities understanding that this is the custom and having learnt the meaning of the terms in general use, are able to understand the directions given, without any further knowledge of the language. Nevertheless, some composers other than Italians have preferred to use their own native language for the purpose, at least in part. Thus Schumann employed German terms in by far the greater number of his compositions, not alone as tempo-indications, but also for directions as to expression and Beethoven took a fancy at one time for using German, though he afterwards returned to Italian.

The expressions used to denote degrees of speed may be divided into two classes, those which refer directly to the rate of movement, as Lento—slow; Adagio—gently, slowly; Moderato—moderately; Presto—quick, etc; and those (the more numerous) which rather indicate a certain character or quality by which the rate of speed is influenced such as Allegro—gay, cheerful; Vivace—lively; Animato—animated; Maestoso—majestically; Grave—with gravity; Largo—broad, etc. To these last may be added expressions which allude to some well-known form of composition, the general character of which governs the speed, such as Tempo di Minuetto—in the time of a Minuet; Alla Marcia, Alla Polacca—in the style of a march polonaise, and so on. Most of these words may be qualified by the addition of the terminations etto and ino which diminish or issimo, which increases, the effect of a word. Thus Allegretto, derived from Allegro, signifies moderately, lively, Prestissimo—extremely quick, and so on. The same varieties may also be produced by the use of the words Molto—much; Assai—very; Pin—more; Meno—less; Un Poco—a little; Non Troppo—not too much, etc.

The employment, as indications of speed, of words which in their strict sense refer merely to style and character (and therefore only indirectly o tempo) has caused a certain conventional meaning to attach to them, especially when used by other han Italian composers. Thus in most vocabularies of musical terms we find Allegro rendered as "quick," Largo as "slow," etc. Although these are not the literal translations of the words. In the case of at least one word this general acceptance of a conventional meaning has brought about a misunderstanding which is of considerable importance. The word is Andante, the literal meaning of which is "going," but as compositions to which it is applied are usually of a quiet and tranquil character, it has gradually come to be understood as synonymous with "rather slow." In consequence of this, the direction, Piu Andante, which really means "going more," i. e. faster, has frequently been erroneously understood to mean slower, while the diminution of Andante, Andantino, literally "going a little," together with Meno Andante—"going less"—both of which would indicate a slower tempo than Andante—have been held to denote the reverse. This view, though certainly incorrect, is found to be maintained by various authorities, including even Koch's Musikalisches Lexicon, where Piu Andante is distinctly stated to be slower and Andantino quicker, than Andante.

A gradual increase of speed is indicated by the word Accelerando or Stringendo, a gradual slackening by Rallentando or Ritardanto, all such effects being proportional, for every bar and indeed every note should as a rule take its share of the general increase or diminution except in cases where an Accelerando extends over many bars, or even through a whole composition. In such cases the increase of speed is obtained by means of frequent slight but definite changes of tempo (the exact points at which they take place being left to the judgment of performer or conductor) much as though the words Piu Mosso were repeated at intervals throughout. On returning to the original tempo after either a gradual or a precise change the words Tempo Primo are usually employed or sometimes Tempo del Tema.

The actual speed of a movement in which the composer has given merely one of the usual tempo indications, without any reference to the Metronome, depends of course upon the judgment of the executant, assisted in many cases by tradition.

In brief, an orchestra conductor or musician must use, in every case, good judgment and discretion in deciding on the tempo of a musical composition, and in every instance, he must observe one important fact: To render a number in such a way that it doesn't become monotonous and tiresome.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Why?" (Because I Love You Dear), a beautiful ballad fox trot, of originality and charm, by the famous Sol. P. Levy, writer of "That Naughty Waltz," the international hit. (Belwin Inc.)

2—"Bo-La-Bo," an Egyptian fox trot, by George Fairman, with a special arrangement for orchestra by George Trinkause. (Witmark Sons.)

3—"When the Cherry Blossoms Fall," the big hit of the biggest hit in the history of musical comedy, "The Royal Vagabond," now playing at the Cohan & Harris Theatre, New York City. (Carl Fischer-Witmark.)

4—"The Royal Vagabond," a fox trot, introducing "When the Cherry Blossoms Fall," "Love is Love," and "Here Come The Soldiers," by Geo. M. Cohan and A. Goetzel, all from the comedy "The Royal Vagabond." (Carl Fischer-Witmark.)

5—"Let the Rest of the World Go By," by Ernest R. Ball. A most delightful waltz melody. (Carl Fischer-Witmark.)

6—"Dreamy Alabama," by Mary Earl, writer of "Beautiful Ohio," "Dreamy Alabama" is a melodious waltz, proving to become the sensation of the two continents. (Shapiro and Bernstein.)

7—"Wonderful Pal," a one-step, by the writers of "Mammy O' Mine." (Shapiro & Bernstein.)

8—"That Naughty Waltz," by Sol. P. Levy. A waltz that's wonderful, different and beautiful. (Forster Music Pub. Co.)

9—"Karavan," a fox trot by Rudy Wiedoeft. This fox trot is thought to be the logical successor to "Hindustan." (Forster Pub. Co.)

10—"Sweet and Low," the wonder-waltz by Chas. L. Johnson. It is expected that this waltz will become as popular as the famous "Missouri Waltz," a "Forster clean-up." (Forster Pub. Co.)

11—"Madriola," by Sol. P. Levy and Jos. Samuels. A Spanish song one-step different from the others. (Belwin Inc.)

12—"Lovelette," a novelty by Sol. P. Levy. A beautiful conception of charm and rhythm, especially adaptable for scenes of light character. (Belwin Inc.)

13—"My Isle of Golden Dreams," by Blaufuss, a dreamy haunting waltz theme, the style of melody characteristic of "Hawaii." (Jerome H. Remick.)

14—"I Am Climbing Mountains," a beautiful ballad one-step. This number is said to be even better than "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles." (Jerome H. Remick.)

15—"You Ain't Heard Nothing Yet," a fox trot, sung by Al Jolson in "Sinbad," successor to his famous song "I'll Say She Does." (Jerome H. Remick.)

16—"Dardanella," by Felix Bernard and Johnny Black. "Dardanella," is an echo from the east, in the form of a Characteristic Intermezzo, or fox trot. (McCarthy and Fischer.)

18—"When You Were Sweet Sixteen," a fox trot featured with success, in Ziegfeld's Production "Follies of 1919." (T. B. Harms.)

" A Roman Scandal "

(Christie Comedy—Two Reel Special)

MACK SENNETT is not the only comedy producer who can burlesque antique plays. Here is Al Christie coming forward as the sponsor of an ancient pattern and so successfully has he ridiculed it that there is no doubt of its reception among the lovers of film comedies. Whether "The Burning of Rome" was ever a play may be left to the statistical experts of the theatre. It reminds us of something which Lincoln J. Carter produced when Columbus was a boy. We do know that the title adorned the page of a piece of music written by E. T. Paull. But regardless of its source it looms up as an offering worth booking.

Here is a company of theatrical folk putting on satire of the "Burning of Rome." Nero is fiddling for dear life in his balcony, and his cohorts are busy applying the torch to the scenery. The bull enters the arena disguised as a cow. But who will throw it? "I will!" shouts a gladiator. With this over the imperial and musical Nero shouts for a duel. When the victim is down, he asks for a demonstration of the sword. And you can guess the outcome with the mad ruler pointing his thumbs down. There is an audience looking on at this play, two of its most interested spectators being Earl Rodney and Colleen Moore. They decide to go on the stage and show their histrionic ability. And the chance is presented them when the real actors strike. With no troupe, the stage manager is forced to have the principals double, as it were. This is the funniest part of the comedy. For their object is to act as amateurish as possible. The real Nero has walked out with his fiddle which compels his substitute to use a banjo. The cow or the bull is on strike too. So two stage hands are compelled to bedeck themselves in cowhide. And the burning of the glorious city is done by one flickering torch. The amateurs carry on the performance despite the efforts of the real troupers to disconcert them.

At the Rialto in New York the comedy made the audience register spontaneous laughter. Which is sure indication that it has its merits. There is enough incidental business and good natured tomfoolery to please a mean man. Need more be said?—LAURENCE REID.

" The Adventures of Ruth "

(Fifteenth Episode Ruth Roland Serial—Pathe)

THERE is a peculiar interest attached to this serial because it is written by the serial star herself and it is also the first serial produced by her own company. Pathe is the distributor. ,

The first three episodes show the usual serial essentials of the mystery, the chase, and continued pursuit with a certain objective.

There is an atmosphere of art and class displayed and the sordid is conspicuous of its absence. Although the director is not named, he or she has nothing to be ashamed of, for this is very well directed and has an even continuity.

A moment from Rex Beach's drama of the North, " The Girl from Outside," a Goldwyn production directed by Reginald Barker

Ruth Roland is as ever the typical serial heroine and she is supported by William Human, Herbert Heyes, Thomas G. Lingham, Helen Case and Charles Bennett. The first three episodes are entitled respectively, "The False Countess," "Kidnapped," and "The Bewitching Spy."

Her father is killed by the "Hound," a member of the "Terrible Thirteen," and he leaves her a task to perform assisted by the butler and her juvenile cousin. Thirteen keys are each mysteriously placed in her possession at different times with instructions as to what she should do.

Although this is a typical serial it has an air of class and judging from the first three episodes there is enough punch and excitement in it to bring them back for the succeeding episodes.—TOM HAMLIN.

" Tough Luck "

(Snub Pollard Comedy—Two Reels—Pathe)

HERE is Harry (Snub) Pollard, the comedian with the walrus moustache who has been acting as Harold Lloyd's foil for a considerable time, branching out as the star of his own comedies. It was only a question of time before Rolin would permit him to shine by himself. He is too capable a funmaker to unload his comicalities for the benefit of anyone but himself. As original as Mr. Lloyd showed himself to be, Snub Pollard was not far behind. Between them they made the Rolin Lloyd Comedies prize packages for exhibitors.

Snub has a style of his own—a style that has not been imitated so far, though it is likely that several so-called comedians will adopt his methods, now that he is being featured alone. They can imitate his make-up but they cannot imitate his style. That is a gift of his imagination, of his own keen sense of humor. And so in "Tough Luck" picture-goers will find him the same old Snub—the Snub with the roly-boly eyes, the quick, nervous manner, and the walrus moustache. As the title indicates the comedian is the victim of a series of misfortunes. He is superstitious to a degree and as "tough luck" would have it, he cannot take a step but that "signs" make his life miserable. There is an old-fashioned chase in which he figures—a chase that makes him pursued by a group of "keystone" cops. Slippery pavements, freakish Fords, and what not are dished up to keep the action zippy.

The comedy is not original in any way, but it does contain some clever stunts which are always traveling on high. These will amuse the average spectator. We feel certain that when the star hits his stride he will be found on the program of more than one first run theatre. He hasn't such an assortment of tricks in his suit-case as Harold Lloyd and he depends mostly upon characterization. His ensemble—the girls for instance—is capable and attractive. "Tough Luck" is a satire on superstition and the misfortune to be jinxed.—LAURENCE REID.

" The Penny Philanthropist "

(Seven Reels—Directed by Guy McConnell—World Rights Controlled by Hyman Attractions)

CLARA E. LAUGHLIN wrote this widely read novel and in the screen version, dainty Peggy O'Neil is the star. Peggy is the "Penny Philanthropist" who has sold newspapers on the streets of Chicago until she is eighteen and the proprietor of a tiny store called the "News Emporium." Her kitchen in the back room is a "home" for many homeless girls.

Dainty Peggy O'Neil brings the same charm and vivacity to the screen that endeared her to the public in her famous stage success "Peg 'O My Heart." She is supported by another popular player of the legitimate stage, Ralph Morgan and an adequate cast, of whom two deserve special mention. They are Thomas Carey, the boy who plays the amateur detective and Frank Weed in the character role of an Italian, Luigi, whom he makes true to life.

This is one case where the story as it appeared in book form has not been changed and it gives Miss O'Neil the same sort of wistfully pathetic role illuminated by her Irish wit as that in which she appeared in " Peg o' My Heart " and the hosts who admired her on the stage will be equally pleased with her on the screen.

The scenes are all laid in Chicago and familiar localities and manufacturing plants lend local color and interest to the swiftly moving story. The picture as a whole carries a strong appeal and will be as wholesome for the children as for the parents. L. H. MASON

"THE CAPITOL"

(ARTCO-HODKINSON)

Intrigue and Politics Burden This Picture

AUGUSTUS THOMAS' "The Capitol" cannot be called an entirely interesting picture because of its involved melodramatic episodes. There is enough action in this story to suffice for a half dozen features and the trouble is the director has attempted to crowd it all in for one picture. The result is the scenes present a topsy-turvy appearance, offering here a slice of sex conflict, and there a talky presentment of politics. And the action covers a period of twenty-five years at least.

A wife and mother runs away from the fireside to join a culprit. She is disillusioned to the extent that she follows the Salvation Army. The child is put in a foundling asylum and turns up in Washington later, the wife of a Congressman, while the outraged husband and father joins the priesthood. The culprit? He becomes a lobbyist in Washington. In fact all the characters in this quadrangle turn up in the Capitol and eventually come to an understanding. The villain gets his just deserts, and the mother and daughter find happiness in each other's arms, receiving at the same time the husband and father's blessing.

Many of the characters could be dispensed with and the plot would be more coherent. And the angle against profiteering does not sound any dramatic moments. The titles could be rewritten and improve the picture immensely. Its shining light is the atmosphere, the backgrounds being genuine scenes of Washington. The director has gone to some trouble to collect these and his striving to be realistic is commendable. Leah Baird assumes the burden of a dual role and differentiates the two characters, mother and daughter, with admirable adaptability. We don't recollect of having seen her do anything better. The theatricalities are so strong that the other players are helpless in their attempts to be human.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The third play of Leah Baird's series of Artco Productions is "The Capitol," an adaptation of Augustus Thomas' play of the same name which scored a success upon the stage. This picture will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Both in theme and enactment the subject grows in power. It is a story of politics and love and intrigue in modern Washington with the shadow of the nation's political structure and the background of the United States Senate for atmosphere. The star portrays the role of Margaret Kennard, the young wife of a prominent lawyer, who is induced by a scheming individual, James Carroll, to abandon her home and flee with her baby daughter, Agnes. Pursued by Kennard, Carroll escapes, leaving the woman and child in his house which is subsequently destroyed by fire. Kennard believing that his wife and baby perished, enters the priesthood.

Twenty years later under the name of Margaret Doane of the Salvation Army, Kennard's wife becomes active in Washington as an associate of Henry Garretson, who is engaged in fighting food profiteers. At that time Agnes, the daughter, appears at the capitol as the wife of Congressman Blake whose social ambitions for her place him in the power of Carroll, now a lobbyist for the food interests. The mother has not seen her during the intervening years since the child was placed in a home. While on a boating trip Carroll forces his attentions on her. The boat capsizes and Agnes is rescued by her own father though he doesn't recognize her, and Carroll is also saved. He traps Agnes in his apartment, but the priest, Margaret, Garretson and Blake learn of the scheme and overpower him. Thus identities are disclosed and a reconciliation takes place.

PROGRAM READER

"The Capitol," Augustus Thomas' powerful drama of political and social Washington, which scored such a triumph on the stage, will be the attraction at the ——— theatre next ———, with Leah Baird, the emotional actress, as the star. The story is laid in the atmosphere of exclusive American society circles and it fairly teems with sensational episodes, ranging from the burning of a bungalow to the capsizing of a canoe in the Potomac river. It is a play of politics—of present day politics and therefore its timeliness brings an added value. It is also a play of love and intrigue and presents a woman who bared her soul to right a wrong. You will see the processes of our Government taking shape—you will see a bitter fight between food profiteers and the public's representative. You will see thrill after thrill, all of which are punctuated with romantic moments and dramatic events. Leah Baird is the star, and she is supported by a capable company.

A tense moment in "The Capitol," starring Leah Baird and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson

SUGGESTIONS

It would be well to publicize this picture as an adaptation of Augustus Thomas' play of the same name which met with great success on the stage. Feature this playwright in large letters and mention the other pictures which have been made from his plays and in which the star appeared. Tell that the action transpires in Washington and that the story is one of politics, love and intrigue. Feature it as the picture of the HOUR. Make mention that it dramatizes the fight against the food profiteers, but that there is romance and thrills to keep pace with the political note.

Feature the star and her company. Bring out that it is an Artco production. Your fans should remember the name if you showed "The Volcano."

"THE MIRACLE OF LOVE"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Strong Flavor of Romance in Picture

THOSE exhibitors who would please their patrons with roma tic love stories, need have no scruples about booking "Th Miracle of Love," Cosmo Hamilton's latest story which Rol ert Z. Leonard has whipped into screen shape for the Paramoun Artcraft programme. The author, who is usually daring in his co ceptions of artificial life, is exceedingly quiet here as far as visua izing his familiar touch. While he has drawn a theme based upo the eternal triangle, the sex element never intrudes and in its plac you have a keynote of flavored romance.

The wife of a dissolute English nobleman finds herself in lov with another nobleman who is as upright and manly as his rival i degenerate. Tradition and custom prevent the lovers marrying unti the demise of the husband, and even with him out of the way th author elaborates his romantic suspense by offering the clean Britisher on the altar of finance. He is about to marry a rich America girl when her quarrelsome lover arrives from the States and take her away, thus permitting the English romancers to complete thei happiness.

A dainty bit of drama if one is looking for sustained drama. It compensations are its rich vein of romance, its theme of love, at firs sight, its absence of sex entanglements, its photoography revealed occasionally in sepia tones, its carefully detailed atmosphere, and its admirable suggestion of English aristocratic life. Mr. Leonard's backgrounds are faithful and artistic. There is a faint bit of conflict, noticeable in the attempt of the sinister husband to hold his wife. This fellow is painted as a wretch of the first order. Lucy Cotton and Wyndham Standing are the featured players and they play their parts with admirable poise and feeling. A first rate enertainment of its kind.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Miracle of Love" featuring Lucy Cotton and Wyndham Standing, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre beginning ———. This offering is a picturization of a story by Cosmo Hamilton which appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and it presents a reproduction of English aristocratic life. The author knows his blue-blood atmosphere and writes it entertainingly. His characters are true to life. In this instance the action which envelops them, is helped considerably by remarkable British backgrounds.

The story concerns a younger son of a noble family. Clive Hurbert, who takes up a life of idleness because work is disgraceful for a man of his station. He decides that the best thing to do is to leave the country and find employment somewhere. At the pier he encounters a pretty Duchess, the wife of a dissipated nobleman, with whom he falls in love. At the same time a telegram reaches him that his elder brother has been killed in an accident. So Clive assumes the title out of a sense of duty. The dissipated Duke has heard of the affair between his wife and the young man and he proceeds to make life miserable for her.

Matters go from bad to worse until the lord decides to marry a rich American girl to save his estate. But the love of the Duchess asserts itself and so he throws discretion to the wind. When the Duke dies he plans to marry the wife, money or no money. Then the good news arrives informing him of a lucrative post in the diplomatic service and all ends happily. It 's a picture which abounds with tense dramatic situations and the romantic interest provides a happy balance. Miss Cotton and Mr. Standing contribute outstanding performances and the rest of the cast is capable. Robert Z. Leonard directed.

PROGRAM READER

A fairly common situation in British aristocracy, which is non-existent in this country owing to our lack of a social order of nobility, is treated in Cosmo Hamilton's story, "The Miracle of Love," which has been adapted to the screen. The tale appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and created a sensation. Perhaps many of you remember it. Surely you remember that Mr. Hamilton is one of the most prolific writers of fiction and that he can write of English high life with remarkable insight and feeling. You will see a play of the eternal triangle as it is enacted against a background of British atmosphere. You will see a charming Duchess married to a caddish husband although she loves another. And her station in life forbids her gaining notoriety through the divorce court. What happens? This you will find out when these stirring scenes come into dramatic action in "The Miracle of Love" which comes here next ———. Lucy Cotton and Wyndham Standing are the featured players.

A strong moment from "The Miracle of Love," a Paramount-Artcraft production featuring Lucy Cotton and Wyndham Standing

SUGGESTIONS

You can feature the author here and you are sure to arouse curiosity. Cosmo Hamilton is one of the most prolific writers before the public eye. And a majority of your patrons have doubtless read him in current magazines. They have seen his stories visualized on the screen and the offerings never fail to entertain. So play him prominently. Treat the story as a romance of aristocratic life in England, and that its theme can be traced to the eternal triangle. Treat it in a dignified way—a way which will be in harmony with the theme. Emphasize the fact that the people of the nobility are as human as those in the street and that they are bound by conventions .

"FLAMES OF THE FLESH"

(FOX)

Gladys Brockwell Takes Up Vampire's Burden

GLADYS BROCKWELL has a Theda Bara role in her newest offering, "Flames of the Flesh," since it presents her with an opportunity to portray the vampire. It may be said of her that she makes the character almost lifelike—something which cannot be said for many of her screen rivals who have attempted to play it. The result is the picture takes on a value which otherwise would be missing. As far as the theme itself is concerned it presents the familiar formula of a woman who becomes a vampire through choice because of disillusionment. She had trusted a man and found him lacking in virtue, which of course started her on the primrose path with a desire for vengeance against the masculine sex.

It is easy to penetrate this plot, and you know for a certainty that when an American comes to Paris to rescue his brother from her clutches, that his father will come in turn to save the former. The dénouement naturally, presents the head of the family as the man responsible for her downfall. Although she has a regeneration of character, it is too late, and realizing her shortcomings she takes poison and dies in her lover's arms. A touch of Juliet, of Sapho, of Camille, rolled into one for this character. And its pathos in the latter scenes will compensate for the bold attitudes struck off in the introductory reels.

The action is fairly progressive and Clara Beranger's continuity is well arranged to emphasize the high lights. But it is not an elevating story and its daring conclusion may shock some sensitive patrons. The picture may well be called a study in gray, since there are no happy moments.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Brockwell, the Fox emotional star, will appear at the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her newest photodrama entitled "Flames of the Flesh." This is one of the most powerful plays in which Miss Brockwell, the "girl of a thousand expressions," has yet appeared. It provides her splendid opportunity to move her audience. The story is a forceful one told in a series of stirring scenes. The action is swift and sure and the finale is as surprising as it is dramatic. Miss Brockwell gives a forceful impersonation of a waif of the world who experiences amazing transformation of character. When the action opens she is about to commit suicide but is prevented by Craig Boardman, a stranded American, outcast of society. He takes her away from the Portuguese city to Paris where she becomes schooled in the ways of the world. Candace assumes the name of Laure De Saxe, and so seductive is she in her beauty that she becomes the toast of the French capital.

She meets Charles Eastcoat, a rich young American, and attempts to ensnare him. His father and brother learn of his adventure and the latter realizes that the only way to disillusion Charles is to make the courtesan fall in love with him. But in attempting this plan he also loses his own heart. The father then takes a hand and when he would denounce the young woman she recognizes him as the man who started her on the road to temptation. Bruce Eastcoat offers her his undying lave and devotion and it is then that Laure realizes that the world is beautiful. Rather than bring him unhappiness she takes poison and dies in his arms.

Forrest Halsey wrote the story which has been scenarioized by Clara Beranger. It is a play of big situations and Miss Brockwell has taken advantage of them by investing her role with deep emotion. She is assisted by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

Gladys Brockwell, the emotional star, is coming to this theatre shortly in what is considered her greatest photodrama, "Flames of the Flesh." You have recognized her emotional capabilities and it must be said of her that she rises to the occasion here with remarkable adaptability. You will see her interpreting the part of a waif, a victim of man's bestial nature. She becomes a derelict, a wanderer on the primrose path. It is a fascinating character indeed. All the famous women of history have been victims of outrageous fortune.

Does she play with fire? Does she become the temptress? Does she lure men to destruction? Does love—pure, simple and honest love—come to her? What happens to her? These questions are answered dramatically in this powerful picture of love and intrigue, pride and passion. It will hold the attention and excite the fancy and carry you from one tense moment to another. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

The appeal of this feature lies largely in its title and the way that you develop it in your advertising. It suggests of course a play of emotions and certainly you can promise anything in the emotional line for the picture is crammed full of tense scenes of this character. Feature it as a story of the primrose path—a path which leads to oblivion and death if the trespasser is not heedful of the danger signs. You might bring out that it presents a waif who becomes a courtesan through the lustful nature of man. But we would not concentrate too much on the theme.

Simply mention it as a daring, vital, and vivid story of a woman, who by a trick of fate, became a derelict. By all means bring out that it unfolds a deal of truth, simplicity and pathos. Mention the star and emphasize the fact that there are few actresses on the screen who are as well endowed with emotional talent. Tell that it is a play of woman's revenge. Use catch lines featuring the high lights. But don't forget that title. It will appeal. Don't go wrong on advertising it.

CATCH LINES

"SHOULD A WOMAN TELL"

(METRO SCREEN CLASSIC)

Star and Director Put Picture Over

IN spite of the handicap of a very weak story the director and star pull this picture up by its very roots and plant it on a pedestal. John Ince, the director, gives it a smashing opening that is full of thrills, and then Alice Lake, the star, just naturally carries the picture on her shoulders in a manner which firmly establishes her as a permanent fixture in the niche occupied by the very few emotional stars of the screen.

And toward the end the director again comes to the rescue of the spineless story and provides the essential anti-climax. The cast is capable and well balanced, and the piece is well mounted and cleverly directed, augmented by good photography.

There is no question about Alice Lake being a high class screen artist. She does not only look charming, but in the emotional periods she will undoubtedly sway any audience. The high spots in the direction and scenes are the ship wreck at the beginning and the mardi-gras toward the finale. The mediocre story allows the picture to sag somewhat in the middle, but the average patron will overlook this because of the splendid work of the star. Although it is a sex story it is suitable for any audience.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and generally pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, good puller and entirely pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Tom Hamlin..

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Alice Lake is the new Metro star in "Should A Woman Tell?" which will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

According to reports the critics were unanimous in declaring that the new star's great emotional work in this picture assures for her a permanent place among the leading stars of the screen.

Jack Mulhall is her leading man and Frank Currier has a prominent character role. John Ince directed the picture and has provided opening scenes that are described as very remarkable. These scenes portray the ship wreck near the little fishing village and are said to provide many thrills.

A wealthy lady is one of the survivors and is taken to a fisherman's cottage until she fully recovers several weeks afterwards. Alice Lake portrays the pretty daughter of the fisherman. The lady grows quite attracted to her and promises to educate her. A few years later her unscrupulous nephew takes advantage of the girl when she is visiting his aunt during a vacation from college.

The girl leaves college and goes back to her own home. She finds her father had passed away but there was her little brother and sister to support as well as the mother who never understood her and was very mercenary. When her youthful lover proposed marriage she wrote a letter explaining her big mistake and the mother destroys the letter. The young man marries her and on their wedding day he learns of the college incident. He leaves her and goes to Paris to complete his art studies.

Her mercenary mother persuades her to marry the young man who took advantage of her and told her that her husband had died in France. In order to help her family she marries her traducer who was threatened by her mother with exposure if he did not marry the girl.

But the ceremony was performed by a mock-minister. In a distant town during a mardi-gras celebration she meets her youthful husband who was now a noted artist. He had been informed that she was dead and their amazement was great.

It was at this time that her drunkard traducer appeared to discover the young couple talking together. Then the great fight took place.

Alice Lake is featured in the Screen Classics production, "Should a Woman Tell"

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture your best exploitation bet is the title. Alice Lake, the star, is not known well enough as yet but her name should be used in all your advertising as well as the brand, which could be called a "Metro-Classic." The photographs and cuts should be freely displayed at every possible place as they are striking enough to bring them in. Being what is ordinarily termed a "sex" play it will hardly stand for any tie-in stunts such as interviews, etc. So your surest way is the title, catch lines and photographs. Tell them they will witness one of the greatest storm scenes at sea and the most remarkable ship-wreck, ever portrayed on the screen. Mention besides Alice Lake, the following names: Frank Currier, Jack Mulhall, Jack Gilbert, Lydia Knott, and also that John E. Ince directed it.

PROGRAM READER

"Should A Woman Tell?"

An important question is decided in a remarkable picture scheduled to be shown at this theatre next week.

Alice Lake is the star and it is a Metro-Classic.

A poor fisherman's daughter attending college at the expense of a very wealthy woman is an easy conquest for that woman's unscrupulous nephew.

In shame she leaves college the next day and goes back to her old home to find that her father had just passed away.

Her mother and a little brother and little sister were in need of her services. She must earn a living for them.

Then her former sweetheart begged her to marry him and she wrote him a letter telling of the incident in college. But her mercenary mother destroyed the letter and allowed them to wed without the husband knowing of the daughter's mistake.

When he learned of this after the ceremony on their wedding day he left her and sailed for France.

But this is not all. There is a great anti-climax and a tremendous climax.

"IN OLD KENTUCKY"

Picture Adapted from Stage Success

A DOMINANT line of action permeates this adaptation of Charles P. Dazey's favorite melodrama of yesterday, "In Old Kentucky." As put forward by Marshall Neilan for First National, it presents a series of dramatic events calculated to please the most exacting patron. If you want an old-fashioned Kentucky feud you'll find it here; if you're searching for romance you'll find that too. And if you want a quota of exciting thrills you will be greeted with an abundance of them. And to cap these pictorial highlights you will be introduced with rich atmosphere and an adequate vein of humor.

If there is any flaw in the production it can be found in the continuity, which is not always united with the proper sequence of scenes. This may be due to the cutting process, for there is evidence of the picture having been taken in several thousand feet. The average spectator will not notice a lapse or two in the progression, because the story moves forward to its denouement and the characterization is interestingly drawn and interpreted. The plot details a romance between a girl from "them thar" hills and a youth from the Blue Grass region.

Interspersed with this is a counterplot which presents a race horse. The scenes attendant upon this line of action are as graphic, as colorful, as atmospheric, as suspensive, as any which have ever been shown. They stand out above the romantic and every other element. Anita Stewart looks better here than in some of her recent releases. There is a freedom of movement in her actions, a grace, which denotes enthusiasm for the role. Mr. Hamilton is a trifle too theatrical, however. Other parts are capably played by Edward Coxen and Edward J. Connolly. Mr. Neilan has done a neat job here, all things considered.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Marshall Neilan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Anita Stewart, the charming and talented First National star, will be seen at the——— theatre beginning———in her latest photoplay, "In Old Kentucky." It is a Marshall Neilan production, this adaptation of Charles P. Dazey's play which was a favorite with theatregoers a decade ago, and it is considered one of the most elaborate and highly entertaining pictures in which the star has appeared. Under the direction of Mr. Neilan the picture has been given a masterful production with such well known players as Mahlon Hamilton and Edward Coxen playing opposite the star.

Miss Stewart assumes the role of Madge Brierly, a girl of the Blue Ridge mountains. She is betrothed to Joe Lorey, a moonshiner, whose father and her father having been killed in a feud by Horace Holton. But when a young man comes from the Blue Grass region she falls in love with him. Holten is also in the party although disguised and when he attempts to defraud the girl out of her property, Frank Layson, the young man in question, compels him to return the money. To get revenge, Holten tells Lorey that Layson is a revenue officer with the result that the latter is severely punished. Madge comes to his rescue and out of gratitude she is invited to his home.

The great Kentucky handicap race is on, in which Layson has entered his thoroughbred, and staked almost his entire fortune. Holten again tries to get revenge by setting the barn on fire, his motive being due to Frank's indifference to his daughter. As a last resort the wretch drugs the jockey. Madge learns of the plot and dons the jockey's costume, rides the horse and wins the race. The conclusion of the story brings in a thrilling scene of night riders who are searching for Lorey. But Madge comes to the rescue again and accuses Holten of the crime. And so she finds love with Layson.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have an old time stage success to play upon for exploitation. Make the most of the title and the credit it received upon the stage. Emphasize the fact that it is a thrilling and romantic tale of the Blue Grass region and the hills of Kentucky. Mention a few of the high lights. Take advantage of its thrilling line of action by pointing out such features as a fascinating and exciting horse race, a fox chase, a battle between mountaineers and moonshiners and revenue officers.

Touch upon the fact that it is a Marshall Neilan production. Use his name in all your advertising as the man responsible for "The Unpardonable Sin" and "Daddy Longlegs." Then there is the star. You can feature her always. She has a distinct following. Bring out that she has her most colorful role here—a role which is new to her. Feature the other players. Send out circular letters calling attention to the fact that the picture is an adaptation of the old stage success, and a picture calculated to entertain everyone.

"BECKONING ROADS"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Barriscale's Latest Has Interesting Moments

BESSIE BARRISCALE has in "Beckoning Roads" a picture which follows the general pattern of her subjects. That is to say it provides her with a role which expresses her emotional capabilities along the lines of shattered romance and intrigue. While it is obvious material and the action easily anticipated, yet Director Hickman has taken advantage of its high lights to make it interesting most of the way. The line of action is simple, but contains a fair quota of dramatic situations, and these, coupled with the notes of pathos and heart interest—notes which are always generated in a Barriscale offering—make it rise above the average program subject.

A wife leaves her husband's roof because of his father's tyrannical attitude. The latter is dictatorial in his conduct toward them and the son gives in to such an extent that it destroys his wife's respect. Something new in a screen story, is it not? You've seen the mother-in-law character presented often, but when have you seen the masculine specie? After she battles her way along the steep and hard road, she meets success. The intrigue is found in her motive which is to beat a Wall Street bandit at his own game. After her successful conflict the wife is reconciled to her husband who, ad interim, has developed all the requisite virtues of the masculine sex.

The pathos is expressed in her loneliness and desire for companionship. "Beckoning Roads" keeps moving at moderate speed except for a brief sag in the middle. Miss Barriscale has had stronger roles, but none which have presented her so attractively. Her wardrobe should interest feminine patrons. Niles Welch gives an effective portrayal of the weak-willed husband who found himself. The picture is well mounted.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Marquita Shay	Bessie Barriscale
Humphrey Wells	Niles Welch
John Grayson	George Periolat
Baron Brinker	Joseph J. Dowling
Henry Wells	Emmett King
Mrs. Rose Gordon-Chester	Dorcas Matthews
Cecil Barrington	Thomas Holding

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her newest offering, "Beckoning Roads." This picture is an adaptation of the book by Jeanne Hudson, which was published in serial form in the Red Book Magazine under the title of "The Call of Life." The story provides the emotional star with opportunities to express her talents. She rises to dramatic heights as Marquita Shay, who leaves her young husband and assumes the burden of life alone, when she discovers that he is too weak-willed to resent the dominating influence of his father.

The road that Maquita chooses is rough and full of pitfalls, but she had the necessary courage to rise above her environment. She becomes the secretary of Baron Brinker, a stock gambler and owner of a fashionable gambling den. She had a reason for associating with him. He had mulcted her guardian out of his hard earned fortune and driven him to suicide. She gains the "wolf's" confidence, starts a stampede in the market and wipes him out. Humphrey, who had shaken off the shackles of his father, finds her and a reconciliation takes place.

This is a picture which unfolds a tense line of action and scenes of heart interest. It also presents picturesque backgrounds and offers the star a chance to reveal herself bedecked in beautiful gowns. A cast above the ordinary supports Miss Barriscale. including such well known players as Niles Welch, Joseph J. Dowling and George Periolat. Howard Hickman directed.

PROGRAM READER

Two roads beckoned to Marquita Shay. One was a sheltered. secluded path where all was rosy and safe, but in choosing it she would be shackled to a man who was dominated by his father. Although the latter showered her with money he also dictated to her and her husband. Her independence of spirit prevented any communion under his roof. What of the other road? This one led to pitfalls and traps, and the way was steep and hard. If she won, success was hers. If she lost—

Which road did she take? Which road would you take under the circumstances? Of course she took the hard road, the open road to success or oblivion. How she pitted her wits against the Wall Street gambler and avenged the crime of her dearest friend, is told in a series of gripping events. See Bessie Barriscale in "Beckoning Roads," supported by Niles Welch.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this feature is attractive enough to play up for exploitation. You can have your artist draw for lobby frame a woman standing at the crossroads undecided as to which road to take. Have the posts read "SUCCESS" and "OBLIVION." Have the latter road a crooked one, the former, straight. This is a simple drawing which could be done entirely in black and white. Then emphasize the fact that the star is seen to splendid advantage in a strong dramatic part. Feature that she is compelled to leave her husband's roof because of his father's tyrannical attitude.

Make mention that your patrons will have the opportunity to see how a home can be broken up by a father-in-law, instead of a mother-in-law. Surely a note worth mentioning. Mention that Niles Welch, a great favorite with feminine fans is the star's leading man, and also bring out that Joseph J. Dowling, the actor who played the title role in "The Miracle Man," is also in the cast. Mention the director and that he is responsible for the fine Barriscale pictures. Feature her beautiful wardrobe and use stills showing her in some of these lavish costumes.

CATCH LINES

See how a clever woman beat a Wall Street wolf at his own game. See Bessie Barriscale in the dramatic offering, "Beckoning Roads."

She left her husband because of his father-in-law. You've heard of mothers-in-law breaking up happy marriages of their children, but we daresay you've never heard of a father-in-law doing it. See "Beckoning Roads."

See the emotional star, Bessie Barriscale, in her latest photoplay, "Beckoning Roads." A picture of pathos and heart interest.

"THE BROKEN MELODY"

(SELZNICK)

Will Afford Good Average Entertainment

THOSE that fancy Eugene O'Brien will be delighted with this picture. Those that do not happen to care particularly for his style of acting will be suitably entertained, although it is not of such heavy calibre that they will go out and rave over it. Lucy Cotton is very charming, and the cast, direction, continuity and photography are up to present day standards.

He is a struggling young artist and she aspires to the stage. They love each other and live in a Bohemian atmosphere in New York City. An eccentric musician composes a song for the girl and she is an immediate success on the stage. And a wealthy widow persuades the young artist to go to Paris where she finances him until his talents win success.

The widow loves the young artist but he does not respond. His sweetheart needs him, according to word received from a mutual friend. So he returns to America and the young couple are reunited with the promise of a happy future. This one will afford good average entertainment.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Eugene O'Brien and Lucy Cotton in "The Broken Melody" is the Selznick attraction scheduled for a ——— days' run at the ——— theatre beginning———.

The youth and maiden lived in Greenwich Village, New York City, and they dearly loved one another. He was a talented artist and she had a beautiful voice and aspired to the stage. Neither had their chance as yet until one evening a wealthy widow visited the Bohemian cafe which they patronized and took an interest in the youth.

She finally told him that she would finance him in Paris until he perfected his art studies and became a great artist. But he did not want to leave his little sweetheart. But she loved him so that she urged him to go. Some of the many strong emotional scenes of the production are registered at this point.

While he was winning his spurs in Paris she secured a song from an old eccentric musician in New York and finally found an opportunity of singing it at a performance. The girl sprang into fame overnight. One night while singing before a large audience she fainted away. It was for grief owing to the continued absence of her loved one.

She had given him the impression that she loved him no longer in order that he would embrace the opportunity that Paris offered him. A mutual friend told the youth the true state of affairs and he determines to come to America at once. But his wealthy widow friend loved him and wanted him for herself. He did not want to appear ungrateful to her for giving him his great chance but after an affecting and effective scene he departs for America.

The meeting between the young couple is described as one of the most intensely romantic scenes in motion pictures. And as they are both successes in their art the future looks bright for them.

PROGRAM READER

He painted a remarkable picture in Paris entitled "A Face from Memory."

The inspiration won for him the long-hoped for success. But it did not bring back to him the girl whose face of the bygone days still haunted him.

For she had told him that she did not love him and that he should embrace the opportunity offered him and study in Paris.

But the girl DID love him and only urged him to go for his own good. She loved him so much that she wanted him to succeed even if she must lose him.

In the meantime she had also become a success in her chosen art. An eccentric old musician wrote a song that enabled her to secure a position on the stage and after she sang it once she was an immediate success.

Eugene O'Brien is star in "The Broken Melody," a Selznick feature

The situation was that they were both individual successes and loved each other dearly. But she was in New York and he was in Paris. And he thought that she fairly hated him for consenting to be financed in his art by a beautiful widow.

"The Broken Melody" is the Selznick photoplay portraying these romantic events and is coming to this theatre next week.

Eugene O'Brien and Lucy Cotton have the leading roles.

SUGGESTIONS

The name of the star and his leading woman can be prominentlv featured after you book this feature. And as the Selznick brand is very well advertised it would be well to mention the producer's name in all your advertising. The photographs and cuts of Eugene O'Brien and Lucy Cotton should be displayed in as many places as possible. This is about your only legitimate exploitation on this particular picture. The Bohemian atmosphere of Greenwich Village, New York City, should interest many of your prospective patrons and it would be well to mention that this environment has been portrayed faithfully and true to life.

CATCH LINES

She told him a lie when she said she did not love him. But she wanted him to have his big chance. .

One girl sacrifices her love for her sweetheart rather than handicap him in his art.

He met success in Paris and she won applause in New York. And yet each would have gladly traded this success for the old love.

One young couple achieved great success when apart. And they both finally realized how really empty this alleged success was without love.

"OUT YONDER"

(SELZNICK)

Excellent Entertainment for Majority

THERE are some very good scenic effects in this picture and the action all takes place in and about a picturesque lighthouse reef. Olive Thomas has a role quite away from any of her recent pictures and it affords her wider scope. Some very heavy dramatic situations are portrayed.

Suspense has been maintained, a few thrills injected, and the romantic element will appeal. Direction, continuity, cast and photography are fully up to present day standards. A better than average picture that will afford excellent entertainment to the majority.

The star appears as the daughter of a lighthouse superintendent who secretly grieves as he believes he has killed a man many years previously. His assistant had been an eyewitness of the struggle and holds it over the heroine's father that he may obtain the daughter as his wife. The hero on a nearby yacht loves the girl, but learns that his father was the man her father had killed. When the assistant is finally trapped he confesses that he, and not the father, was the real murderer.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and very pleasing;. Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, big puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Olive Thomas in "Out Yonder," a Selznick picture, is the attraction at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

The scenes are all laid in and around a lighthouse on a reef and a nearby yacht. Ralph Ince is the director and is said to have provided many thrills in these picturesque surroundings by the sea.

Olive Thomas appears as "Flotsam," and her father is the superintendent of the lighthouse. She rows about the dangerous inlets dressed in overalls and one day rescues a lady, whose boat had overturned, and returned her to her yacht.

The son of this lady of the yacht took an immediate interest in "Flotsam" and visited her many times on the lighthouse reef. When he asked her father for his daughter the father was apparently overjoyed that his daughter should have won such a charming and wealthy youth.

But his assistant at the lighthouse wanted "Flotsam" for himself. He threatened to tell of the superintendent's secret sorrow. It seems that he claims to have witnessed an affair where the superintendent many years before had killed a man. And he finds that the murdered man was the father of "Flotsam's" fiance.

Here is where the heavy drama and many thrills are said to occur in the photoplay. When the villainous assistant tells of the crime the father then tells his daughter's fiance that he is really not her father. He does this in order that she may go through with the wedding and obtain happiness.

But she feels that he has lied when he denies her and comes back to him. Her fiance follows her and they are witnesses to the big scene in the lighthouse where the assistant taunts the father about the truth of the killing and acknowledges that he killed the man. As the father finds that he is not really a murderer after all these years he pursues the villain up the lighthouse stairs. Then occurs the great struggle as the light goes out and the nearby yacht is threatened with disaster.

PROGRAM READER

"Flotsam" plunged into the sea and rescued the wealthy woman from the nearby yacht and then her romance started.

They thought "Flotsam" was a boy until the cap was removed from a head of shimmering hair.

Her father was the keeper of the lighthouse on a perilous reef. The son of the woman of the yacht quickened to an immediate interest in the pretty girl "Flotsam," and accompanied her in a rowboat to her picturesque home.

Olive Thomas is star in "Out Yonder," a Selznick production

Olive Thomas is "Flotsam" in this Selznick Picture coming to this theatre next week. Ralph Ince directed it and the photoplay is full of thrills.

"Out Yonder" is the title. It is a story of stormy coasts and sunny hearts. The thrilling death struggle in the lighthouse as the great light is extinguished is awe-inspiring. As the light goes out the nearby yacht is in great danger.

"Out Yonder" is the best Olive Thomas picture to date according to all the critics.

SUGGESTIONS

Selznick's national advertising campaign may be of great assistance to you after you have booked this picture so it is good policy to mention in all your announcements that this is a "Selznick" picture. And Olive Thomas, the star, is another name that may be productive of box office results. The name of the director, Ralph Ince, should also be used in your advertising. For a lobby display any sign man can rig a front for your box office very cheaply. Let it represent the lower entrance to a lighthouse painted so that it gradually tapers to the top where a searchlight may be placed to be thrown around the front of your theatre. This will attract considerable attention and be in keeping with the scenes portrayed in the picture.

CATCH LINES

A struggle to death atop a lighthouse.

The pleasure yacht rides to apparent destruction on the perilous reef as the great light goes out.

She was a waif of the sea and they called her "Flotsam."

He is told that his own father met death at the hands of his fiance's father.

When her own father denied that she was his daughter she knew that he lied.

"THE CORSICAN BROTHERS"

(UNITED PICTURE THEATRES)

Famous Story and Play Makes a Success

ALEXANDER DUMAS' stirring story of Corsican love and vengeance, which served as dramatic fare for Robert Mantell upon the speaking stage for many years, has finally found its way to the screen. "The Corsican Brothers" contains enough ingredients to while away an interesting hour for any exhibitor's audience. It is not a misstatement when we declare that it is one of the few costume plays which have proved worth while presenting. And the reason may be found in its assortment of dramatic elements which embellish a vivid and vital story. It does not have to rely upon its atmosphere, rich as that factor is, nor upon the value of the author's name.

One of the virile Farnums, Dustin, to be exact, has been given the opportunity to interpret the dual characterization of the twins. whom death could not even separate. The role does not call for any marked differentiation, but Mr. Farnum does supply his vigorous personality, and his romantic fervor, and these points are sufficient for the interpretation. The story centers mostly upon a duel fought for a woman's honor. One twin follows her to Paris, and when he is killed in protecting her name, his brother in Corsica is apprised of the fact through mental telepathy. So he goes to the French city and avenges his twin's death. Inasmuch as the woman had loved him in preference to his brother the romance is easy of fulfilment.

The story is familiar enough to make the action obvious and the plot is so carefully detailed that anyone not intimate with it can easily see how it will develop. Still that does not rob it of its vigorous tone, nor the fascinating characterization. Director Campbell has, seemingly, caught the proper perspective throughout. The double exposure work is commendable.—Length, 6500 feet.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Directed by Colin Campbell.
Photographed by Dal Clawson and Wm. Foster.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dustin Farnum, the romantic actor, will come to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ——— in his latest photoplay production, "The Corsican Brothers." This announcement should attract attention owing to the fact that the story is by the famous French author, Alexander Dumas, and that as a play it served Robert Mantell for many years. The picture is marked for its remarkable atmosphere and the fact that it restores the costume period to screen entertainment. It is a tale of brotherly love, revenge and intrigue, and Mr. Farnum in the dual role of the twin brothers of Corsica, gives a performance that stands out for its depth of feeling and sincerity. Being a romantic actor, he is able to show an emotional fervor in that direction.

Mr. Farnum as Louis Dei Franchi is embitious and decides to leave Corsica to make a name for himself. He becomes infatuated with Emilio de Lesparre, a Parisian belle, and follows her to the French city. In protecting her good name he is challenged to a duel by Chateu Renaud, whose intentions toward the girl are not of the best. The result is he is killed, but at the hour of the assassination, the brother in Corsica realizes that Louis is dead, the victim of a duel, and so he goes to Paris to avenge his death. He emerges the victor in a duel and continues the romance of his twin. The picture unfolds a deal of forceful action and the characterization is well drawn. Mr. Farnum is supported by Wedgewood Nowell, Winifred Kingston, Ogden Crane, Andrew Robson and others. All give capable performances. Katherine Carr attended to the scenario, while Colin Campbell directed.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture taken from Alexander Dumas' story of the same name so it would be a good plan to emphasize the author and what he stands for in the literary world. Make mention that the story was adapted to the stage for Robert Mantell and played by him for many years throughout the United States. Tell that the star of the picture is the romantic actor, Dustin Farnum. Tell that it offers him a splendid opportunity to express his talent. Feature the atmosphere. But don't state that it is a costume play. This might keep some people away, since the impression is that costume plays are lacking in action. Emphasize its theme, and its qualities of brotherly love and respect for womanhood.

Bring out that the story contains a wealth of action which is concentrated in a couple of duels. What of the title? Surely your older patrons will remember it if they have seen Mr. Mantell in the play. You have three angles to play upon her for advertising. One is the author, the second is the star and the third is the director. Feature Mr. Campbell as the director of that masterpiece "The Crisis," and the powerful drama, "The Thunderbolt," which starred Katherine McDonald.

CATCH LINES

See "The Corsican Brothers," an adaptation of Alexander Dumas' powerful novel of the same name. A stirring picture of brotherly love, intrigue and romance. Dustin Farnum is the star.

When he died the victim of a duel in Paris, his brother was apprised of the fact through mental telepathy. He hastened to Paris to avenge his death. Did he succeed? See "The Corsican Brothers."

The brothers were twins and even death could not separate them. They both loved the same girl and both fought a duel with the same rival. What happens? See "The Corsican Brothers."

Do you like a tale of passion and love? Do you like a tale of throbbing action and suspense? If so then "The Corsican Brothers" is the picture for you. See it at this theatre next ———.

PROGRAM READER

The brothers were twins and had never been separated in their lives. One was ambitious to go out into the world and make a name for himself, the other was satisfied to remain at home and take care of their mother. A beautiful girl came to their home in Corsica and both of the brothers fell in love with her. But as Louis had decided to go away his infatuation led him to Paris. How he was killed in a duel in protecting her honor, how the brother who stayed at home felt a pain at his heart when he realized that his brother was killed, apprised of the fact through mental telepathy, how he journeyed to Paris and avenged his brother's death and carried on the romance, is told in a series of dramatic and romantic events—events which can only be appreciated by seeing them in this powerful story by Alexander Dumas. This is the same story which was adapted to the stage and acted by Robert Mantell for so many years. Dustin Farnum is the star of the picture. A fine production. Don't miss it.

"TWELVE-TEN"

(REPUBLIC)

Heavy Drama with a Mystery Element

HERBERT BRENON directed this abroad and the scenes are laid in England and Paris, with Marie Doro and an European cast. The star emotes all through the production and at one time is supposed to temporarily lose her mind. Rats frighten her as they also may frighten your women patrons when shown on the screen.

There is an atmosphere of depression throughout the picture. It is very heavy drama with the mystery element and embellished with a suicide and attempted murder. A rich man's superintendent desires the ward of his employer and after attacking her he is repulsed. He then plans to obtain her by framing a will stipulating that she must spend the night alone in the castle with the corpse of her guardian. He then poisons the guardian.

He is thwarted, however, by his employer who arises from the bier in time to prevent the villain from assaulting the girl. An erratic continuity assists in maintaining the mystery element and everybody overacts. There are undoubtedly certain people that just dote on this sort of story, but it does not afford pleasant entertainment.

THE CAST

Louis Fernande	Pierre Maillard
Marie Fernande	Marie Doro
Francois	Phillip De Bus
Lord Chatterton	Ben Webster
Arthur Newton	James Carew
Geoffrey Brooks	Geoffrey Kerr
Dr. Wightman	Fred Kerr

Presented by Edward Godal.
Directed by Herbert Brenon.
Photography by Alfred Moses and L. Roseman.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Herbert Brenon directed Marie Doro in "Twelve-Ten" a Republic production coming to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

With scenes laid in Paris and London, and a cosmopolitan cast composed of American, English and French artists, the production was made abroad by this well known American director.

Mystery, thrills and gripping dramatic events are portrayed, and the star is afforded wide scope for her tremendous emotional abilities, according to report.

Her father is a sculptor and in disappointment because he could not sell the last toy model which he had invented after many years, he jumped into the River Seine.

Lord Chatterton, a wealthy Englishman, adopts her and takes the pretty little French girl to England. His secretary is a scoundrel and pays ardent attention to the girl but is repulsed.

The secretary plans a new will for his employer at his request and this leaves everything to the young girl. But the secretary manipulates the will so that when it is finally signed it makes a very strange request.

One day the secretary rushes down stairs crying that his employer had passed away. He had planned to poison him and had placed a glass within reach of the patient and therefore believed he had accomplished his object.

When the will was read it requested that the ward spend one night alone in the castle with the corpse. And here enters the mystery and the "Twelve-Ten" episode. After many stirring incidents and very dramatic events the villain is unmasked and the girl wins happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

Names are your best bet after booking this picture. Marie Doro the star and Herbert Brenon the director. And for novelty the title offers wide latitude in special exploitation. The face of the clock with the hands pointing to ten minutes past twelve is your best bet. This can be utilized as a lobby display and even on throw-aways and by sandwich men if you care for street stunts. A novel card could be issued to be handed around promiscuously and called, "An Acquaintence Card," Introducing—— and containing the words, 'Meet me at 'Twelve-Ten' at the ——— theatre." Youths would delight in handing these around to girls and the cards would afford considerable amusement and no doubt have a good effect on your box office.

CATCH LINES

Any shrinking girl would hesitate about going to sit up all night alone with a corpse in a deserted castle.

Poison just missed the lips it was indended for and returned to the sender like a boomerang.

A pretty little French waif wins her way into the heart and arms of an Englishman of wealth.

Ten minutes past the dreaded midnight hour her world collapsed and then—.

PROGRAM READER

Her guardian's will requested that in order to inherit his vast fortune she must sit up all night alone with his corpse in an old castle.

And the girl had almost always been afraid of the dark, and was very superstitious.

But she loved her guardian and wanted to grant him this last request.

If it had been the money alone she would have refused to go through the terrible experience.

Then the corpse arose from the bier and seized her.

But it was not her guardian. She screamed. Then a series of fast moving events and very dramatic incidents occurred.

Herbert Brenon directed a great picture over in England. It is entitled "Twelve-Ten," and its stirring scenes are laid in both Paris and London.

Marie Doro and a cosmopolitan cast of American, French and English artists interpret the various roles in this first screen offering of the Republic Company.

This masterpiece of mystery and romantic drama will be presented at this theatre next week.

"Everywoman"

USE IT!

The following prologue was spoken by "Nobody" at the opening performance of "Everywoman" at the Rivoli, New York. It was written by Dr. Frank Crane

Underneath the wonderful stars, and in all this wonderful world, there is nothing so wonderful as love.

Being the greatest thing in the world, love is the most abused, most perverted, most beset with dangers.

Therefore in this vision you will see how the woman tempted by flattery, by wealth, by luxury, comes at last to see that only love is worth while, is safe and beautiful and everlasting, when it goes hand in hand with truth.

I am Nobody! And Nobody can tell you how divine and glorious love is when love clings to truth, 'for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer,' even unto death; and how terrible the fate of that love, which, losing the companionship of truth, drifts down to the rocks of ruin.

O, Soul of Woman, look! In this picture you will see yourself. And well for you if you shall also see that underneath the wonderful stars, and in all this wonderful earth, there is nothing so wonderful as love, when love's other name is truth!

AND there isn't a let-down in the comedy from the start to the finish. Here is one of the really superlative comedies of the year. You can clean up with it for it has a draw like a thousand-foot chimney. Once you get 'em in, you won't have room enough for the repeaters and the new-comers for it's that rare sort of film, the "don't-miss-it-for-love-or-money" variety.

William Gillette wrote it. There's a lot of fame and fun in that fact. Donald Crisp directed it and Tom J. Geraghty wrote the scenario and they did an extraordinarily fine job. Get in on this one while the getting's good!

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS CIRCUIT

A First National Attraction

Exhibitors said she was unknown as a star → who is she ?

She can't be a star. !
What's all the big noise?
It's Katherine MacDonald
Who says she's unknown?
Ray for the American Beauty.
B

But look what happened when

Katherine MacDonald

The American Beauty

starred in

"THE THUNDERBOLT"

Here's what the exhibitors said after playing it.

COAST RECORDS SMASHED

Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt," an instantaneous success in San Francisco and Oakland. Capacity business in both Turner and Dahnken houses and thousands turned away. Played at Berkeley to biggest business in the history of the theatre. Crowds were standing in line for two hours at San Jose. Star extremely popular and play a masterpiece, as conceded by everyone.

CHICAGO RECORDS BROKEN

The Riviera, Chicago, played Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" for a week to absolutely capacity business with the highest box office receipts the theatre had ever played to, holding box office records over such productions as "The Brat," "Daddy Long Legs," "The Red Lantern," Chaplin and "His Majesty, the American."

SCORES GREAT TRIUMPH

Great crowds thronged the Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky. Everyone enthusiastic, declaring it to be one of the strongest dramas ever screened. Star scored great triumph.

BUSINESS TREMENDOUS

Katherine MacDonald broke every record in "The Thunderbolt" at the Broadway theatre, Richmond, Va., in a week's run against such opposition as "The Miracle Man," Warwick in "Missouri," Nazimova in "The Brat," Farnum in "The Last of the Duanes." Lines a block long waited to get in.

KNOCKED THEM COLD

The picture was wonderful and knocked them cold in Stillwater, Mich. Was shown a second time by popular request. Biggest business in the history of the city.

BIG BUSINESS IN ST. PAUL

Tremendous business for a week at the New Garrick theatre, St. Paul, Minn. Katherine MacDonald pleased all exceptionally well, and the production was great. Everyone enthusiastic.

S. R. O. SIGNS UP

Big clean-up and S. R. O. signs up every afternoon and evening for a week at the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich. Played a second run in city, because of popular demand. Theatres jammed.

SETS DETROIT BY EARS

Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" set Detroit by the ears. The picture a veritable sensation and star a tremendous hit. At the Madison theatre it beat the box office records of such pictures as "Virtuous Wives," "The Perfect Lover," "Sunnyside" and "Shoulder Arms."

MILWAUKEE RECORDS TUMBLE

Broke all house records at the Alhambra, Milwaukee, with "Broken Blossoms," "Fair and Warmer," "Valley of the Giants." Olga Petrova in person as the strongest opposition in the history of the city. Never were such favorable comments received on star or production.

Going stronger daily with her

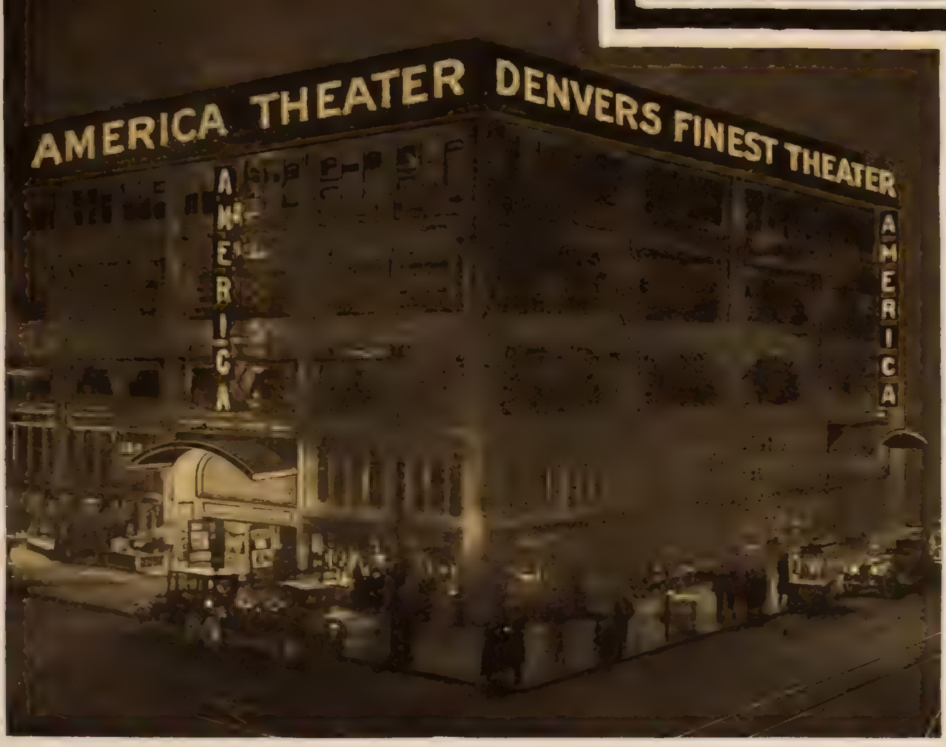
ALVAH G. TALBOT
Managing Director
America Theatre Denver, Col.



ALVAH G. TALBOT showed Realart Pictures for several successive weeks in his big America Theatre, Denver.

Why?

Mr. Talbot is in business, like most of the rest of us, to make money. He expected Realart Pictures to add to his profits and to the prestige of his theatre.

Was he justified?

Here is his own opinion: "Tremendous crowds . . . . . hundreds turned away . . . . . congratulations."

Realart promised. Now Realart is delivering!

A howling mob is just outside the door.

What Should a Picture Be?

Crammed with action?—powerful in love interest?—rich in clean humor? — a magnificent spectacle? — based on a world-famous novel by a popular author?—made by one of the greatest American directors?—and steeped in wonderful advertising possibilities? Many pictures have part of these profit elements. One picture has them all—

"SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE"

An ALLAN DWAN Production

This isn't bald assertion; it is fact, backed by evidence from a regiment of exhibitors who have shown the picture.

"SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE" is doing big time everywhere because it has proved it gets 'em coming and keeps 'em coming!

It's a MAYFLOWER Product!

469 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY

REALART PICTURES

REALART has rejected a lot of opportunities to do advance boasting and boosting. It might, for instance, have predicted that in her first starring vehicle, directed by John S. Robertson and based on the novel, "Barnabetta," the story of a modern Cinderella, by Helen R. Martin, would win instant recognition. But Realart preferred the message should come to you first hand from other exhibitors—from such men of vision as William Sievers of St. Louis, who says, "Miss Binney is destined to become one of the leading and most pcpular stars of the screen."

CONSTANCE BINNEY

"ERSTWHILE SUSAN"

Realart has quoted many other exhibitors in these pages, and will quote more. But the trend of all the comment is the same: " 'Erstwhile Susan' is a big buy," and "Constance Binney is a comer who has arrived."

N. Y. NEWSPAPERS REVIEW "12-10"

CAPITOL THEATRE, N.Y.

The picture is a real thriller. Mr. Brenon simply can't make an uninteresting picture. His direction is imaginative and dramatic. Then, too, Marie Doro is more beautiful than we have ever seen her before, and her acting is sensitive and expressive.
"The Morning Telegraph," December 22, 1919.

The ethereal beauty of Miss Doro was never quite so appealing as it is this week on the Capitol Theatre screen, where she is the star of "Twelve-Ten." And it has been a long, long time since Mr. Brenon has produced a picture quite so generally satisfying.—"The Evening Mail," December 23.

It is worth going to the Capitol merely to solve it and see Miss Doro's winsome acting in a story that is like a happy New Year wish —"The Sun," December 22.

Marie Doro, in a really surprising mystery photoplay, "Twelve-Ten." produced in Paris and London, is both beautiful and tensely dramatic.—"The Evening Sun," December 22.

.... It is a superior picture ... scenes reveal the skill and the intelligence that go into the making of the best photoplays.
.... Mr. Brenon could not have done this all alone. He received invaluable assistance from Miss Doro, who, in addition to her competence on the speaking stage, is a pantomimist of unusual talent. Her actions, especially in emotional scenes, have plain meaning and subtle significance.
"The New York Times," Dec. 22.

"A Child For Sale"

A Photodramatic Thunderbolt in Six Acts
by
IVAN ABRAMSON

Copyrighted 1919

The most intensely human, timeliest and most powerfully dramatic offering for the screen since the inception of the cinema

---

The story is based on the question of the responsibility of parents to their offspring which is now being agitated in hundreds of newspapers in the United States and which will soon spread over the civilized globe.

The drama, " A CHILD FOR SALE," depicts thoroughly the present economic and social conditions prevailing in this country, and will be the most thoroughly advertised photoplay yet produced, and will live as long as " Home, Sweet Home."

"WHOLESOME" MEANS HEALTHY

"Wholesome films" mean healthy returns. They're clean, strong, internationally and universally interesting subjects that nourish any box office into a state of vigorous good health.

"Wholesome films" are carefully made and built upon the most solid foundation of popularity known—stories that young and old alike crave and enjoy.

For children's matinees you can't beat 'em. You couldn't serve a more satisfying entertainment to grown-ups, the folks who used to know 'em and who like to be reminded of their happiest days, the days of real sport, the days of childhood.

They are a separate business in themselves. You don't have to rely on theatres for your bulk of business. Every club, society, and welfare organization is a prospect for them—and we can back this statement with real live, honest-to-heaven proof.

State Righter, now is the time. Can you recognize a real opportunity and grab it quick? We'll see.

OUR OPINION

Leah Baird has in her new production a story that has been splendidly produced and has a way of holding the attention steadfastly. There are a number of thrilling events that have been well handled without giving one the impression of a serial. The star is called upon to portray a triple role and in each of the roles she is sincerely convincing. While there is some double exposure, it has been handled in a simple fashion that makes one forget that one person is portraying the two roles. Leah Baird has supporting her to good advantage Robert T. Haines, William B. Davidson, Alexander Gaden and Downing Clark. The story is an adaptation of the famous Augustus Thomas play and has been laid in the capital city of the country. The exteriors selected are beautiful and the interior stagings have been handled in a splendid manner

Combining the famous characters of
"THE LONE WOLF" & "FALSE FACES"

THE CHICAGO HERALD EXAMINER says: "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is a big sepia thriller, gorgeously photographed; lavishly acted. Beautifully told by J. Parker Read, Jr. Griffith and DeMille themselves do no better than the maker of this new production.

THE CHICAGO JOURNAL says: One of the most important productions of the year is "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" starring Louise Glaum. Its story value is unsurpassed on the screen. Louise Glaum is an actress to be reckoned with.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE says: One quite understands the hold Louise Glaum has on her fans after witnessing "The Lone Wolf's Daughter." In it she is beautiful, gracious, appealing... She has a story that moves swiftly to a climax of fire, water, revenge and a strong love finale.

A MESSAGE TO ALL MOTIO

A STATEMENT FROM THE WEST

Dear Mr. Black: Cleveland, O., Dec. 26, 1919.

As you appointed me on the Reel and Slide Advertising Committee at the St. Louis meeting, I venture to take advantage of your public offer and submit to you such "questions, comments and suggestions" as may enlighten the exhibitors of the country on the general subject of screen advertising.

Question No. 1. You say that "a searching investigation" led you to the officers of the Universal Film Company where you found happiness in the fulfillment of your hopes. Will you please tell the exhibitors of the country whether you had any aid in your "searching investigation"? Did you consult any of the members of your Slide and Reel Advertising Committee or some one whose office is not so far from the Universal as the City of Cleveland is? Who outside of yourself supervised and arranged the bargain with Universal bringing so much Christmas cheer to the fireside of even the humblest exhibitor? When did the conviction of the Universal's most excellent educational films penetrate your reason? Was it at New Orleans or more recently on the 7th floor of 1600 Broadway when two were company and three constituted a multitude?

Question No. 2. In "your searching investigation" did you discover just about when Universal decided to pay the exhibitor for running its "educational films"? Was it about the time the Committee for the Protection of the Screen began to become inquisitive? Please advise us how much money the company made by running advertising films on the screens of the exhibitor before it decided to pay something? No exact sum is demanded. Our Screen Protection Committee will be very grateful to you for even an approximately accurate estimate.

Question No. 3. You say you have seen "industrial and educational films" recently made by the aforesaid producer and you express a hope that one of them showing how much of the world's rubber supply comes from Sumatra will soon "grace" our screens. What do you think of the "industrial and educational films" "The Awakening of Tim," "Hope of the Hills," and "Heads Win"? Some exhibitors tell me these two were just "raw advertising and an imposition on the exhibitor." What do you say?

Question No. 4. Do you think it wise and a benefit to the exhibitor to be tied up to any particular film manufacturer particularly when in the past this same manufacturer has specialized in camouflaged advertising?

Question No. 5. Do you really believe in an exhibitors' organization which must be supported directly or indirectly by the doles of the manufacturers? To me it seems that such an organization might tempt the pencil of the cartoonist and the writer of comic scenarios, but I cannot see it as a source of real usefulness to the exhibitor.

Question No. 6. Who is paying for the lavish advertising in the trade papers wherein you eulogize one certain brand of films and then sign your name to it as "president, etc."? In view of the fact that the brand of the aforesaid company is mentioned seven times in two ads to the exclusion of all others, am I over suspicious in my conclusion that you did not pay for it but that the manufacturer did, although the "Announcement" is made in your name and in the name of your pretended organization? A little "educational advertising" on the printed page, eh?

JUST ONE COMMENT. It is to laugh.

With one statement in your various outbursts I most heartily agree. You say "The World is Full of Wonders." It is indeed, and the greatest of them all is the accelerated philanthropy of the noble producer under whose protecting wings you would gather your "vast" flock of unsophisticated exhibitors.

With assurance of my most distinguished consideration, I beg to remain,

Yours truly, HENRY H. LUSTIG.
President Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association.

P. S. In order to avoid all possible misunderstanding between your- and the Universal Film Co. please take notice that Cleveland exhibitors not to be included in your bargain. I tender you without regret my gnation as member of your "Reel and Slide Committee."

FELLOW EXHIBITORS:

To judge by the excitement about screen advertising created in the advertising columns of the trade press, one might think that this is the overshadowing issue of the industry. It is not. It is a question of lesser importance. It is significant only because it shows the sharp division between the men who want to sell and mortgage the screens to producing interests and the men who stand for the commercial independence of the exhibitor.

There you have the overshadowing issue. Exhibitors in close to forty states have effected state organizations. At last even the exhibitors respond to the instinct of self-preservation. If the exhibitors are in a particularly helpless condition is it because they have heretofore been sold, betrayed and delivered? The men who are now engaged in an earnest and honest effort to protect the property of the exhibitors are theater owners with no conflicting interests.

It is not our intention to be turned aside in our constructive work by any personal abuse.

We feel that we are fighting interests who fear for their illegitimate gains. These interests seem to be behind Mr. Alfred S. Black, the shadow president of a shadow organization. We are not hitting at Mr. Black. We want no controversy with Mr. Black. Our case against him was fully proved last September in the trade press, whereupon he and his sponsor disappeared suddenly into the shadows. The exhibitors of this country have sustained us and the matter is closed. He interests us about as much as the inspired dummy dancing on the knee of the clever ventriloquist. We are out to reach the interests and influences which are using Mr. Black.

Mr. Black has seen fit to challenge our record and to charge us with the pursuit of personal gain. It is an old trick to resort to personal attack when you are trying to defend a bad cause. It always tends to divert attention from the inherent weakness of your proposition.

We are willing to let our records be compared with the records of the men who are moving this little pawn across the chessboard—these masters of Mr. Black.

As far as the men referred to in the advertisement of Mr. Black are concerned, they need no defense. Since they have been identified with organizations they have not directly or indirectly asked or received one penny from any source. Can Mr. Black say the same? They are neither altruists nor grafters. They are interested in organization because they believe that the protection of the screen against hostile legislation or producers' intrigues can best be achieved by united action. Such a mental attitude perhaps defies the comprehension of the men for whom the gentleman from New England is acting—not so much as a spokesman but as a decoy.

As for us, we would never come across even the existence of Mr. Black, if it had not been for our efforts to give the screen owners of America a genuine protection. In the pursuit of that object we discovered that Mr. Black and his Boss were putting obstacles in our path and in devious ways seeking to prevent exhibitors from getting together. Just as we were starting our drive to stop the producer from using our screens as a signboard for his advertising films, the trail of Mr. Black and his Boss leads to the offices of one of these producers whence he issues a plea for the use of this particular producer's "industrial and educational films."

Nothing presses more heavily upon the exhibitor today than the infamous five per cent rental tax which has now grown to the proportion of three times the original size, due to the increase of the price of film service. What effort has Mr. Black made to bring about a revision, if not a repeal, of this burdensome tax? At the recent taxation hearing before the House Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Black was conspicuous by his absence.

At that hearing in Washington, advertised with eclat by Mr. Black's overlord, who as chairman of the taxation committee, appointed innumerable "state directors" throughout the country, only one of these state directors appeared. Mr. Black himself was absent and only one man spoke for the exhibitors, a neighbor of the chairman of his taxation committee. This same man who at the Chicago convention had so tactfully referred to his fellow exhibitors as "cattle," characterized the motion picture theatres of the country as "illegitimate theatres" and only the good sense of the chairman of the committee, Representative Fordney of Michigan, prevented this chaste and refined characterization of the exhibitors from becoming a part of the Congressional Record.

The case of the exhibitors at that hearing was presented in such a pitiful way that one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee commented upon it as quite extraordinary. The exhibitors of the country may indeed deem themselves fortunate to have escaped additional taxes after such a wretched showing on the part of the alleged representative of the motion picture theatre owners of America.

We call particular attention to the letter of Mr. Henry Lustig of Cleveland, Ohio, a one hundred per cent exhibitor who attended the alleged convention at St. Louis and came from it hopeless and disgusted. He answered the questions in Mr. Black's effusion.

As recently as the 5th of August of 1919 it may interest you to know the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. at the convention held at Rochester made an offer to the executive committee of the New York State Organization of Exhibitors to pay something for the use of our screens. The executive committee carefully considered the proposal and rejected it unanimously. First—because it offered no effectual help against crude and inferior industrial pictures. Second—because the compensation offered was ridiculously inadequate. Third—because the committee did not think it proper to form an alliance with any particular producer, particularly in view of the fact that an exclusive endorsement was asked for.

Mr. Black has indulged in a lot of talk about personal gain. May we not ask Mr. Black to explain a most delightful little paragraph in a most delightful little contract that he entered into with the Book Lovers Picture Game Corporation on the 17th day of July, 1919, shortly after he had received the benediction by Louis at St. Louis. Here is the paragraph of Mr. Black's contract:

> "Herman A. Mintz, Esq., shall be employed to represent the interest of said 'exhibitors' in the carrying out of this contract and in obtaining the co-operation of the motion picture theatres and shall be paid for such services only out of the revenue received as aforesaid the sum of One Hundred Fifty Dollars weekly and ANY expenses incurred by him in connection with said employment."

And this other paragraph even more interesting and numbered 11 in the contract:

> "After said 'exhibitors' have retained the sums provided for in the preceding paragraphs, the balance remaining on hand shall be paid as follows. Fifty per cent thereof to the said 'company' fifteen per cent thereof to said Kimball, fifteen per cent to the said Mintz, and the balance shall be retained by the exhibitors in addition to the provisions contained in paragraphs 9 and 10."

You, Mr. Black, appointed Mr. Herman A. Mintz, Esq., to represent the exhibitors. His compensation was to be $150 per week, fifteen per cent of the profits and all expenses. Will you deny that Mr. Herman A. Mintz is your personal attorney at Boston?

Under the Booklovers contract the exhibitors would have received practically nothing, and the entire scheme came to naught. Will your contract with the Universal, made without consulting any of the appointed committeemen, yield any more profit than the Booklovers did or be any more of a success?

It is quite obvious that this organization has not assumed "a luke-warm attitude in the matter of one harmonious exhibitors movement" because we have banded together to wage war on any individual or concern that stands in the way of an honest exhibitors organization, controlled by the exhibitors and maintained exclusively for their benefit.

All benefits arising from organization are to be enjoyed in equal measure by every member of the organization. At the next gathering of exhibitors looking toward a national organization, the first proposed paragraph in the constitution will read something like this:

Any officer or member of this organization who uses or attempts to use the name or the advantages of the organization for his own personal benefit in any way whatsoever shall upon proper proof be immediately expelled from the organization.

Before we leave the subject of screen advertising we will say in response to one of Mr. Black's questions that we have been offered and are about to release a number of industrial subjects made by several manufacturers which will be acceptable to the exhibitors. While these industrial films confer a legitimate benefit on the advertiser, their first object is the entertainment of patrons. In this they differ strikingly from some of the films heretofore offered, which were principally cheap, crude and clumsy products. We will not allow any representative of the predatory interests to draw a red herring across the trail and to confuse the issue, issues which far transcend all personal questions and which we stated at the opening of this article, involve the commercial independence of the exhibitor and the integrity of his investment.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America cannot be thwarted in their determination to have a one hundred per cent exhibitors organization.

A sample of the spirit which is now abroad was shown at the Syracuse convention in the State of New York, where the exploiters were given short shrift. Just as these powers that prey are now dead in the State of New York and have been succeeded by a live, virile, efficient organization there will be a NATIONAL effort to finish the grafters and the job will be done at an early date. To this national gathering every motion picture theatre owner will receive an invitation to assure its thoroughly representative character.

This is our final word on the subject. We now have thousands of individual contracts, signed by one hundred per cent exhibitors in all parts of the United States, and the list is growing daily. If you have not signed, see the secretary of your local organization or write to this office. Under Mr. Black's plan generous provision is made for his personal attorney. Under our plan, all money received goes directly into the hands of the various exhibitors' organizations for the exhibitors of each State to do with as they see fit. You may be sure that the sum the exhibitors will receive will be a just share of the amount paid by the national advertiser for the use of your screen.

THE THIRD GENERATION

WITH A NOTABLE
BRENTWOOD CAST

A Brentwood production of the calibre of "The Turn in the Road," "Better Times," "The Other Half," and "Poor Relations."

It is a powerful picture that challenges the very existence of the many "ordinary" films of the day. A strong cast with Betty Blythe, Mahlon Hamilton and Betty Brice.

The Tong Man

A marvelous melodrama that earned the following tribute from "Observer" in The Chicago Examiner:

"People coming out of the Alcazar yesterday into the full day of Madison Street were jumping when traffic cops raised their hands; they were looking behind themselves at every second step, wild-eyed and bristling.

"And you have only to go into one of Mr. Moir's houses to get the same way, for in there Sessue Hayakawa goes through some of the darkest, most devious deviltries that ever beset John Chinaman."

350 N. Clark Street, CHICAGO

The following companies demonstrate their belief in their own products by advertising in the current issue of PHOTOPLAY to the patrons of motion picture theatres: Paramount, Goldwyn, Universal, Fox, and Selznick.

On the generally accepted basis of five readers to a copy, this means that these producers have sent their messages to two and a half million theatre patrons.

PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE SCREEN SUPPLEMENT

——the single reel of ALL the stars!

Informal, personal close-ups of half-a-dozen of the better known players in every issue. In all the world, there's no reel like "the Supplement"!

Advertising possibilities that mean real box-office value for any real showman—entertainment, in good taste, that will add to any program.

Released once-a-month, just like the magazine. Booking at eighteen independent exchanges—write or wire NOW for information and open dates.

To the Industry in general:—

The primary—the essential—object of everybody connected with the motion picture industry is to keep the auditorium full!

We are doing it in the only way it can be done: By producing posters that are so powerful, so strong and so convincing that the passing public is literally forced to enter the theatre that has them on display. To get the maximum box-office receipts, RITCHEY posters must be used! No matter how much time, thought and money is expended upon a program, it is all wasted if mediocre posters are used, for the public judge a show by the posters that advertise it!

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is the greatest organization of poster artists and poster printers in the world! Our poster advertising specialists are the only ones who can make the kind of posters that pack auditoriums. All the great poster artists of the country are in our organization. These are the men who are responsible for every great poster that has appeared upon the boards in the last twenty years.

Great posters are inevitably RITCHEY posters!

Looming Up Ahead

¶ We shall probably face Federal censorship again in 1920.

"Probably" merely means that Congress may find itself too busy with matters of greater political significance than censorship of motion pictures.

If the day and night activities of one Wilbur F. Krafts gain their end we shall have a bill to deal with, backed with all the power this high priest of fanaticism can call to his aid.

It is well, decidedly well, to prepare now to fight this perennial nuisance; and to bear in mind, in this connection, these salient facts:

The First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees the freedom of the press in this wise:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press——"

Numerous court decisions have left no doubt as to just what is meant here respecting the freedom of the press; as for instance, this well known decision from Judge Story:

"It is plain that the language of this Amendment imports no more than that every man shall have a right to speak, write and print his opinions upon any subject whatsoever without any prior restraint, so always that he does not injure any other person in his rights, person, property or reputation; and so always that he does not disturb the public peace or attempt to subvert the Government."

Then there is the following elucidation by Blackstone:

"Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press. But if he publishes what is improper, mischievous or illegal he must take the consequences of his temerity. To subject the press to the restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done before and since the revolution (of 1688), is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion and government."

Here, in the Amendment and these two undisputed interpretations, we have the gist of censorship in the following simple and basic facts:

First—The freedom of the press means the freedom of the motion picture.

Second—Censorship, as threatened by our Federal and State bills, means preventive censorship and preventive censorship means "prior restraint." There is a broad and clear distinction between censorship which would control our newspapers and film prints, prior to their publication—and the responsibility which follows their publication, which responsibility can readily be fixed by our courts and applied by our police powers.

Third—To restrict the press or the picture to the licensing power of one man or a group of persons is a direct and fundamental destruction of American liberty; it is, as Blackstone points out, "to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion and government."

This is all very simple, indisputable and conclusive.

It is the clear knowledge of these facts and their logic which induced President Wilson and Charles E. Hughes to declare themselves against the censorship of motion pictures—and which will lead any statesman, any student of the American Constitution, any lover of American liberty, any broad minded citizen to take the same stand; that censorship is intolerable, let alone impracticable and impossible.

Speaking Editorially

Responsibilities and Opportunities

WHEN we speak of the film as the modern printing press, it is well to realize that its appeal is much greater and its responsibilities therefore heavier.

What will it do for Americanism?

The question is of the utmost importance.

It is highly important to our country; it is extremely important to the motion picture.

It is so important that the motion picture cannot, if it would, let its unique power stand helpless in the face of this its greatest opportunity.

Wherever you find men gathered together today it is ten to one you will find them discussing the menace of the red, or socialism, or the relations of capital and labor.

And you will hear them say: "If there were only more education!"

The employer must be taught, as well as the employe.

The young American must be taught; women with their new voting power must be taught.

Above all, our huge foreign born element, and particularly their children must be taught.

Only teaching will permanently lay low the red flag; only teaching will bring about a clear understanding between capital and labor; only teaching will uphold Americanism.

And only the motion picture, remember, will adequately reach this country's population, of whom eight million cannot read the printed word and for whom the light of education is, now, absolutely imperative.

What will the picture do—for the cause of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?

What will it do to fight propaganda with propaganda—the propaganda of selfishness, fanaticism, destruction and anarchy with the propaganda of truth, security and good government?

Never in the history of America has a situation more dangerous existed; never in the history of the motion picture has greater opportunity knocked so loudly upon its door; never again will there be a greater opportunity.

We are glad now to say the motion picture helped win the war. We will be prouder still to look back and say the motion picture helped carry the world safely through the after war pestilence of social disorder.

Bolshevism is with us. Let no one mistake this fact. Bolshevism today is widespread enough to challenge this government and the individual welfare of each of its subjects.

A committee from the industry has been appointed by Secretary Lane. The House and Senate Committees on Education are deeply interested.

This committee needs the sympathetic help of every creator and exhibitor of motion pictures.

We gave, last week, a partial list of directors to whom we will largely look this year for the better pictures the public wants.

To these men, also, the industry, the public and the government will look for pictures the public needs—pictures directly inspired by the needs of the day, pictures, all of them, breathing the spirit of clear, clear Americanism.

Propaganda—and Power

PRESS dispatches from abroad carry a rather amusing insinuation of "dry propaganda" against the American film. It so happens that our English brethren witnessed some three or four productions each with a plot revolving around the "reformed drunkard." They were soon surfeited, and then came a glimmering suspicion that perchance the American producer was in league with the "Pussyfooters."

It is well enough for Broadway and a good part of the country to smile, and remark that our neighbors are not very well acquainted with the genus producer. Here's hoping that the dispatches will prompt some measure of gratitude on the part of clerical, prohibition and censorship advocates.

Speak Up—Gentlemen!

TO a New Jersey exhibitor are we indebted for the first concrete proposal that has been put forward in the discussion on percentage booking.

A. P. Waxman has the courage to state definite figures in his letter appearing on page 589 of this issue. Will more of our readers have the courage now to step forward with an equally concrete response to Mr. Waxman's suggestions?

An opportunity rich in possibilities is presented.

If distributors and exhibitors, checking over their own experience against the figures in Mr. Waxman's suggested scheme, will favor us with their observations a long step will have been taken towards the solution of the rental problem that lies at the root of so much of the industry's trouble.

Men with the experience of Louis Mayer, Al Lichtman, Arthur Kane, J. D. Williams, William Fox, Sol Lesser and Hiram Abrams should be quick to accept this challenge. Exhibitors—now that definite figures are offered as a basis of discussion—should be willing to forget the wariness that envelops them when the subject of percentage booking is broached.

Motion Picture News believes sincerely that, for the better class of attractions on which the future of the motion picture depends, percentage is coming. But in the same breath we declare to distributors who are always so enthusiastic in their approval of percentage proposals, that the day of percentage booking will never arrive while the average distributor will consider only such propositions as give them "an ace in the hole."

Percentage must mean equity—else there will be no percentage.

So now, with the opportunity presented for the open discussion and exchange of knowledge that will bring about equitable proposals, let us hear from distributors and exhibitors.

And remember, gentlemen: Talk facts; offer figures. Come on! The percentage kettle is boiling now; keep it sizzling.

Words and the Bank Account

"NEW YORK'S conception of motion picture conditions throughout the country is about eight per cent correct," says J. D. Williams in an interview in this issue of Motion Picture News. And we can well imagine that Mr. Williams was begrudging in allowing even that eight per cent.

Well do we know that you are right, Mr. Williams. No one can sit at a desk in a trade paper with a responsive circulation and not realize in short order that exhibitors out over the country do their thinking in an entirely different key to that of New York. One week's batch of letters will tell the story.

Particularly is this true as concerns relative importance of the "magnuts" in New York and Oshkosh. The metropolis stresses individuals, who loom as high as mountains against the Times Square landscape or through a press agent's glasses; the exhibitor emphasizes product and the means by which he may secure it.

The exhibitor would rather read a trade paper column which gave details regarding a coming attraction, its story, cast, advertising possibilities, than six inches giving Mr. Hokus Pokus' opinion on the future of the motion picture. For that picture is going to play either his house or that of his competitor—and there the trade paper story establishes a relationship with his bank balance.

He would follow every word of ten pages telling how a picture was being played and advertised at various theatres; and skip hastily over a single column giving Mr. Jazbo's opinion that the picture is certain to be a knockout and a whirlwind.

He can't hand Mr. Jazbo's opinions over to his sign painter and house manager; but he can turn the ten pages of facts into extra money at his own box office.

There's a tip here for publicity men and publicity men's bosses. Forget New York, Times Square and the Astor lobby. Think of the exhibitor as a business man—and talk business.

The page of bunk may look fine in the scrap book but a single line of ink on the right side of the ledger is a lot more fattening.

Dealing in Personalities

WE hate to open this page—so near to the dignified editorial columns—with mention of advertising, but it simply must be done.

We have just seen the color proof in one of the inserts appearing in this week's NEWS and it is so prominently in our minds that the typewriter won't mention anything else. This battling Remington of ours sometimes takes command of the situation just as a Ouija board would.

Just now the keys want to bang this out:

Turn back a few pages, boys, and gaze on the Photoplay Magazine insert. It's a reproduction of the January cover that is now seen on the newsstands. Isn't it a beauty?

But it isn't because of the striking color work alone that we feel impelled to talk about the Photoplay campaign of which this insert marks the beginning. There's another reason.

A publisher's merchandise is advertising. And what hits home with us is the faith in his own merchandise that Jimmy Quirk shows through this campaign.

That thought remains with us. We could expand on it to indefinite length if it were not for our fear that we have already said enough for the Advertising Department to accuse us of giving away space.

So we had better stop here.

But take another look at that insert.

S. G. Howell, editor and publisher of the Dallas Motion Picture Journal, was a visitor to office one day this week.

ARTHUR KANE will have an important announcement to make about January 15th.

There's an advance tip on a bit of real news for you.

It comes to us from one of our personal sleuths who has been trailing Mr. Kane in and around Los Angeles. The detekative gives us hints of various sorts connecting Bre'er Kane with different independent producing aggregations, but the only definite word he has is the former Realart head's statement: "I will be back in New York about January 15th and will have an important announcement to make then."

The same sleuth reports to us that the Kane itinerary was given a rude shock when taken in hand by Los Angeles hospitality. But at last Mr. Kane got away from the round of banquets and "such like" and he is closing the week in Portland and Seattle.

IN the course of a talk with a NEWS representative a week or so ago Adolph Zukor said something to this general effect: "If they want statements I'll start making statements."

And so he has.

After the many months during which everybody but Paramount has been talking about Paramount's theater plans, Mr. Zukor steps forward this week with a few words on the subject himself. To say that every word he utters will be read is putting it mildly. We'll guarantee a second reading for each line, and three glances between the lines.

If it were not for the fact that an ordinary trade paper person might be considered over bold we might go on to add our personal opinion that Mr. Zukor would have been wiser to speak up many weeks ago. It's funny how different a man's proposition sounds when he tells you about it himself. And it is far from funny to think of the deal a film man's plans get when all knowledge of them is dispensed by rival camps of salesmen.

Some of Isaac's Marcosson's most interesting chapters are those describing his success in convincing the original Standard Oil group and other prominent financiers that the pitiless light of publicity is the only insurance against distrust and misunderstanding.

When I. M. gets into book form we think we'll supply a marked copy with every film magnate's subscription.

WATTERSON ROTHACKER is going to get in trouble with the Government if he doesn't watch his step.

Just after we get through reading about Secretary Lane's plans to enlist the industry's aid in the Americanization campaign we come across an article by Watterson that appeared many weeks ago in about a dozen of the country's leading technical publications. And we'll say that the Chicagoan beat the Secretary to it.

In the course of a couple of thousand interesting words, Bre'er Rothacker tells what the motion picture can do to further the cause of Americanization. As the pioneer industrial man, Rothacker knows his subject when the conversation turns to picture propaganda.

The industry's Americanization campaign, by the way, is humming along merrily. We know that the manufacturers and distributors are doing their share. It won't be long before the exhibitors will be called upon to show that they are wholeheartedly back of Secretary Lane.

And before the year is out the industry will have shown once more that it ranks even higher than the press as an aid to the nation's progress.

FRANK REMBUSCH has jumped into the industrial picture row. Just after we had made up page 590, which tells of the latest news developments in the discussion, a telegram came sizzling over the wires from Indiana. Here it is:

"National Screen Advertising plans are excellent. The actual merits or demerits of either plan in controversy are only known to me through trade paper advertisements. Any exhibitor organization activities look good even though they seem at cross purposes. We hold a meeting in New York next week, which I hope will bring harmony. Exhibitors have before them the greatest opportunity for a successful business this year. We need cooperation between competitive exhibitors, better pictures and intelligent efforts with broader co-ordination between all branches of the industry.

JUST because Frank Rembusch wound up his telegram with a word of New Year greeting we have the excuse to bring in here a wire from the Christie boys that cheered our hearts one morning last week:

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Wish you and all the staff happiest of New Years. The greatest industry having thrown away its infant clothes and donned long trousers should have the greatest success yet in 1920. We hope you share a large portion of it.

THEY are telling a good story out in the Des Moines territory, which, as our informant declared, "Shows how people trust each other in the picture business."

The story discloses a prominent film man who might be accused of not even trusting himself.

A. H. Blank, the largest theatre owner in the section, and rated ace high in business circles, recently took over the Princess theatre in Sioux City, Iowa. Everything was running along smoothly, with all film and printing bills paid in advance as usual when one bright day brought a "collect."

Resident Manager Wood paid for it and entered the item on his cash sheet. But back came a scorching letter from the Blank head office in Des Moines.

"Who the blankety blank sent a collect shipment to a firm of our standing? What the bang-bang were they thinking about? Let us know at once so that we can go to the mat with the nervy cuss."

Back to A. H. Blank went this meek reply: "The First National office in Des Moines."

And A. H. Blank owns the First National exchange in the territory!

We haven't heard about the mat session.

Hiram Abrams Exclusive Article In the News Brings Advice To Exhibitors To "Have the Courage of Their Attractions"

"SAY, Mister Butcher, what's the matter with your meats? I got a steak in here yesterday and it was tough and dry."

"Let me see," said Mister Butcher, "you are in the habit of buying loins and porterhouses, are you not? Yesterday you said, 'Let me try a shoulder steak for a change.'"

"What's the matter with the films?" No more than there is the matter with the steaks. Exhibitors often want porterhouse films for shoulder steak prices. Not only that but they try to sell their wares to the public on the same basis, or rather the reverse. As Mr. Abrams says, they expect as much at the Box office for the picture that costs them $100.00 as they do for the one that costs them $250.00.

Classification of the theatres? Fair enough in the cities. But what about the small towners? Admission prices are putting grey hairs into the heads of lots of us. Some say, let the smaller towns watch the city pictures and prices and govern themselves accordingly. When the high priced theater plays a picture let that be the small town man's cue to advance his price, and vice versa. Well, I claim that cities are as variable in their tastes as individuals. A picture that might go big in Denver will not draw the hat off your head in Podunk. So what's the answer?

I don't know anything about the city fellers but from the viewpoint of a small towner it looks to me like it is up to the individual. To me there are about three points to be considered. First, Know the game you are playing. Second, Know your people. Third, Don't lie. And we might add a fourth, have nerve enough to stand by your convictions. ———Again, first don't try to play poker if tiddle di winks is your forte. Second, talk to your patrons, let them express their likes and dislikes. Many a Manager is Johnny on the spot at the door when the picture is good and a good crowd, but let it rain or a bum picture slip in on him and he isn't to be found. Face the music, let them knock to your face. It will help your judgment next time. Advertise the truth. Tell them all that is possible and reasonable but don't stretch it. You will gain your patrons' confidence and then when you raise the price they will respond and lastly, if you are convinced that a film is worth the price asked —convinced that it is a super production (Oh, that much abused word)—convinced that it is the type of picture that your patrons want, grab it and set the price accordingly and stand by it. A time or two of worth while pictures at advanced prices on a picture that is worth it and you have them coming just the same.

I certainly agree with Mr. Abrams, that the public will pay and pay handsomely for real pictures.

"Charity begins at Home" they say. Well, I think that criticism should also begin at the same place. Find fault with yourself until you have gotten out of the rut that has worn deep in the last four years. Sell your goods like any other merchant. The 'one price for all' reminds me of a fellow on a fence. The world is having less time for the man who neither 'is' nor 'isn't' these days than ever before. Diagnose the situation at home and I think there will be less chance for complaint as to the quality of the films. I do think rentals are often out of proportion but the market is large enough for a fellow to buy the ones that he thinks are priced right.

Classification of the theater is showing up all over the country. I think the earmarks are discernible in many of the cities. It is the only ultimate solution. But the small towner is doomed to be a three in one man. He can't show all good ones (that is big ones), he can't select all medium nor all cheap ones. He must combine them all and then it's up to his judgment of the wants of his people and the value of the picture.

I read The News from cover to cover and I get so filled up sometimes that I just must let it out on some one. We are quite a distance from the big city and seldom see anyone to argue with except the film salesmen and they come in flocks and then there's none for a few months.

If these sheets of paper that I have used serve no other purpose they will help the janitor start a fire in the morning and with coal as scarce as it is they will serve a good cause.

"More Light on Percentage"

A Distributor and an Exhibitor Give Their Views

Dear Mr. Johnston:

IT is with all sincerity that I can say—"Percentage is coming." I heartily agree with the Michigan exhibitor who made the above statement, as outlined in your recent editorial. Percentage must come. I can see no alternative. It seems to be the only equitable basis upon which to book film productions. With a percentage as the basis, the screen play stands or falls on its merits. If the film is a success, the exhibitor gets his proportion of the earnings, the same as the film owner. If the film is a failure, the exhibitor does not face his loss alone. The film owner stands his share of the loss.

In paying a flat rental, the exhibitor runs all the risk. The film owner merely stands back, pockets his rental fees, and does not necessarily feel called upon to cooperate with the exhibitor further than furnishing the film.

On a percentage basis, the film owner works just as hard as the exhibitor, and sometimes even more so, to put the picture on right.

The plays of Klaw and Erlanger, and the Shuberts, have always been handled on a percentage basis. If any legitimate theater was asked to play a stage attraction on the same rental basis as a film, he would place a notice in his lobby, "Closed for repairs," and go home. He simply would not work on a rental basis.

One of the great evils of motion picture development is the rental evil. It seems to have developed into nothing more or less than horse trading.

On a percentage basis the film rests on its merits,—on a flat rental it stands on its previous reputation. To me it appears as if the percentage is the handwriting on the wall.

Sincerely,
SOL LESSER.

Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen:

Regarding your editorial that exhibitors are only paying ten per cent gross for film rentals. I have this to say: I have been interested in theaters in towns of 2000 for the past six years. We pay from forty to ninety per cent of gross out in film rentals. I suspect that the small town exhibitors will all tell you the same.

I would gladly sign a contract with the exchanges for all film on a percentage basis giving them forty per cent gross.

Possibly you might say well, lack of advertising runs his percentage up. But there you would be wrong. In a town of 1636 people I use the following paper every day: 2 to 3 sixes, 2 three, and a lobby display of 4 ones and 1 and 2 sets of photos. I use a twenty-four sheet twice each week.

On special productions I increase my advertising accordingly. Sometimes spending more for advertising than the cost of the picture. On specials I usually get out a nice announcement which is mailed to our patrons.

We also carry an announcement of the entire week's program in two papers, as well as getting out a four page weekly program which is distributed to our patrons.

I do not believe that any exhibitor in a

Will This Proposal Work?

Here Is a Concrete Percentage Proposition—It Comes From a New Jersey Exhibitor Who Sees Both Sides of the Question

Editor, The Motion Picture News.

HAVING had considerable experience with "legit" attractions, either back or ahead, as well as feature pictures handled as road shows, and also having spent quite a bit of my young life as an exhibitor, I think my opinions on the subject of "Picture Playing Percentage" may not be entirely valueless.

My advice to the Distributor, who thinks Percentage the only way to market his pictures, is; Don't!

The attractions that have made money for their owners on a Percentage basis, can be counted on a man's fingers.

You notice I use the phrase "attractions," instead of pictures.

Attractions they were; not merely pictures. "Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," "Cabiria," "Quo Vadis," "Neptune's Daughter," "Traffic In Souls;" who would consider them as merely pictures?

As for the whole host of would-be attractions that followed on the heels of these money-getting masterpieces, the only comment necessary is, they started on percentage, but finished on a rental basis.

They soon found out, that whether playing 60-40, 65-35, or even 70-30: (after paying an advance man, a second man, a company manager, their own orchestra, their own operator, their share of the advertising, furnishing billing free instead of selling it at ten cents a sheet) they had come out at the short end of Cornucopia's horn.

Even though weather conditions and local conditions were right and business O. K., 'old man overhead got the dough."

Any distributing organization that complains it is not receiving sufficient for its product should start cleaning house. What they need is a different type of picture or a new sales-manager, not a new distributing method.

Nine times out of ten the former's the reason, because I've heard of mighty few sales organizations that couldn't get every last nickel coming to it, provided their product was there.

The average exhibitor is more than willing to pay the price for real features, provided they are deserving of the name "Feature;" meaning something that attracts, draws, satisfies and builds up patronage.

However there are so many "Press Agented Features" and so few "People Pulling Pictures" that you can't blame Mr. Exhibitor for being cagy. Give him, though, an "attraction" that has been "produced" by a combination of ability, talent and showmanship, in all the departments co-operating in the making of this "attraction," and he'll meet Mr. Producer more than half way every time; but give him a "release" turned out to fill a release date, whose only excuse for existence is that it fills a booking, and keeps those on the regular pay roll employed, and you can't blame Mr. Exhibitor for looking dubious and claiming residence in Missouri.

> ¶ How does this suit you? That's what we want to know.
> ¶ Exhibitor Waxman has had the courage to use definite figures in his proposed percentage method. How do they suit you?
> ¶ Compare them with our own experience. Where do they satisfy? Where are they weak?
> ¶ Come on—boys! Tell us!
> ¶ How does this suit you?

If, however, percentage is to be the thing, the following plan, I think, might prove a workman-like one, and one that may prove beneficial to both parties, in the case of "specials" that are "specials."

We'll say the exhibitor's average film bill is $500.00 per week.

That's his overhead on film no matter whose film it is; therefore the first $500.00 should go to the party of the first part, the film man.

He shouldn't however get a nickel more in the way of a guarantee, than the average cost of film to the exhibitor, as he is going to share on the extra business his picture will do above what the ordinary picture does.

Mr. Exhibitor, now that the producer has had his picture paid for, should get his overhead expense out, plus his usual profit.

That is to say, if his overhead, other than film rental is $500.00 and his usual profit, we'll say, is $500.00 he's entitled to both of these amounts. If he can get these normally with ordinary stuff, he's entitled to the assurance of them with a big special, else why play specials?

Following this method we see that the Producer has received, for his special, no more than he would receive for an ordinary picture, but the exhibitor has also received no more than he would get if he played an ordinary picture.

Now comes the test of whether the special is really a special, or whether it's just a press agent's special; because barring holidays or special local events that bring business, such as fairs, etc., any extra business above the usual, can be attributed to the attraction, which is therefore entitled to the major share of this additional business, as is done with legit attractions, say 65 per cent of the first thousand over the amount needed to cover the overhead; 70 per cent of the next thousand; 75 per cent of the next, and so on; with the attraction sharing on the additional expense, extra advertising, special exploitation, etc., on a pro rata basis, according to its precentage.

The Producer has then taken his proper share of the gamble, proven his claim that his special is a special by bringing additional patronage to the theatre, (the only concrete proof) and been rewarded accordingly; while the exhibitor has thus been relieved of shouldering the entire burden of expense, been assured and practically insured of his usual profit; and has paid for it, accordingly.

Of course my figures are figurative, but the basis of the plan is practical. I've found it so, through experience, both as manager of the house and manager of the attraction.

It assures a square deal to all concerned and is equitable to both parties. The producer takes a somewhat bigger risk, but as he is getting the bigger reward, and as he is the one who is now asking to do business on this Percentage basis; why, there it is.

Below is a chart, based on the presumption that the business done will be up to the usual claims made for specials by the distributor, viz double or better than the usual business, and his share of which, totals, just about what he usually asks, better than double the price of an average subject.

		Producer	Exhibitor
First	$500	Average Film Rental...........	$500	$000
Next	500	Exhibitor's Overhead	000	500
Next	500	Exhibitor's Usual Profit........	000	500
Next	1000	Here's where the Special begins to do business above the average and "HE" therefore gets 65 per cent of it......................	650	350
Next	1000	Here's where the Special makes the Boss believe all his press agent and selling staff have said of it, and he therefore gets 70 per cent of it......................	700	300
	$3500		$1850	$1650

Of course, the exhibitor, no doubt, will find objections to this plan, particularly as it applies to showing his books to the distributor, and giving the latter an inside insight into his business. But, it can be safely said, that any distributor who through his regional representatives—exchange managers—does not know the exhibitor's business, doesn't know his own either; and where can such a phenomenon be found?

Very truly yours,
A. P. Waxman,
The Rialto, Passaic, New Jersey.

small town can run his theatre every day and pay the prices asked by producers and show a profit on each day's program.

Every time a producer makes a picture that is a slight improvement over program standard he immediately increases the price to four or five times the real value and calls it a special production.

Now I know of towns that have from five to ten times our population that do not pay more than ten to twenty per cent increase for their pictures. The small exhibitor is the backbone of the industry and the producer that does not realize that fact, is killing the goose that lays the Golden Egg.

Industrial Dispute Growing Warmer

Sydney Cohen Answers the "Show Down" Challenge Issued Last Week by Alfred Black; Both Sides Have Statements from Supporters

A STORMY wake has arisen from the advertising challenge launched in the trade press last week by Alfred S. Black of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., directed against the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. the latter body signed by Sydney S. Cohen, Samuel I. Berman and Chas. L. O'Reilly. These differences, primarily based on the question of the use of the screen for national advertising, have also drawn statements from others, prominent among them H. H. Lustig, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Lustig is quoted in the advertisement of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and has issued another statement in Cleveland as well, in opposition to the M. P. E. L. of A. and Universal arrangement in regard to distribution of industrials.

The "Show Down" Given

In Mr. Black's open advertisement were insinuations on the good faith of the members of the M. P. E. L. in their attitude to national advertising on the screen, minced with hints of "personal gain." Such questions to what Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman could offer the exhibitor with their plans for distribution of industrials, and what they could offer national advertisers were asked.

The gist of the entire article was contained in the title which called for "all the cards on the table."

The officials of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League in their reply state that a number of assertions made by Mr. Black are "absolutely false," and declare they will give him an opportunity of proving his allegations. Requesting that the "true facts" be published, the statement follows:

"First, Mr. Black called upon us and presented to us the necessity of making a united front at Washington. He said that he had heard that the State of New York and other states in sympathy with the State of New York were about to have introduced separate legislation for the repeal of these taxes. He said·that he would deplore any such separate action, as it might tend to create a bad impression in the national legislature. We were disinclined to accede to his request because the tax situation had been poorly handled by his predecessor. He thereupon gave us most explicit assurances to the effect that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee had given him to understand that the Committee looked favorably upon at least some modification of the tax. We pointed out to Mr. Black that the exhibitors of the country had no confidence in the man he had appointed as chairman of his tax committee and we urged him to take the leadership himself. We also urged upon Mr. Black the need of having an exhibitor as chairman without any side interests.

"We told him we thought it unwise to antagonize the trade press by singling out Mr. Blumenthal's Exhibitors Trade Review as the champion of tax reform. To this Mr. Black replied that Mr. Blumenthal told him he was going to dispose of his trade publication in a short time and would completely divorce himself from exhibitor organizations thereafter. Mr. Black also begged us not to press this point because it would cause a lot of personal embarrassment to him to remove Mr. Blumenthal at this time. He also pointed out that his tenure of office would not go beyond a few weeks, because the hearing on the tax situation would be held at an early date thereafter.

"Placing faith in his earnest and repeated assurances and convinced that even the appearance of a dissension in the ranks of the exhibitors might work to the injury of the cause which was close to all our hearts, we yielded to Mr. Black's desires. He thereupon assumed complete responsibility for the consequences of the hearing and what these consequences were is a matter of public record. One member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House at first friendly disposed towards some modification of the tax. after the hearing expressed himself very freeely as to the wretched showing made on behalf of the motion picture

FROM the Far East as well as from right around home, come letters which indicate where Motion Picture News stands with its readers throughout the trade.

From F. H. Horibes, The Yokohama-Kwan theatre, Isezakicho, Yokohama, Japan, comes the following:

"We are pleased to say that the NEWS is the magazine for theatres."

And here is just one commendatory expression from the many received upon our Christmas issue.

"The Christmas number of the Motion Picture News is a 'Pippin.' Heartiest congratulations. May the new year be the biggest, best and brightest in the history of the NEWS."

Platinum Belt Buckle studded with dia monds presented to A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of Robertson-Cole, by the twenty-six branch managers, the field manager and three supervisors of the organization

Exchanges Honor Kirkpatrick

Belt Buckle with Thirty Diamonds is Presented to Robertson-Cole Official

TO show their esteem for him as a man and leader, the twenty-six branch managers, the field managers and the three supervisors of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation tendered A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, a platinum belt buckle studded with thirty diamonds.

The tribute was in the form of a Christmas gift. The front of the buckle is platinum and inlaid is a map of the United States. The back is of gold. Albany, Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Orleans, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, San Francisco, St. Louis, Seattle and Washington are represented on the platinum map with a large diamond. The four corners are decorated with larger diamonds of Joe L. Merrick, field manager; O. R. Hanson, Newton E. Levi, and Fred G. Sliter, supervisors.

The buckle is of special design and is the creation of one of the best known jewelry designers in the country. The map of the United States is outlined and in lieu of naming the exchanges, the spot is studded with a large diamond.

The presentation was made by Mr. Merrick, who called Mr. Kirkpatrick into his office, where Mr. Kirkpatrick was met by the home office force and the presentation made.

It was a big surprise to Mr. Kirkpatrick. As he opened the box he said: "Christmas is a time for good cheer but that good cheer is reckoned greatly by the fact that hard work is appreciated. I admit I have given the boys the best in me but I am more than repaid by the manner in which they have proven their worth and the spirit in which they handle difficult tasks.

"Nineteen Nineteen saw the birth of this organization—hence a lot of real hard work. The start is always the uphill push. Nineteen Twenty sees us firmly established and the indicator points to even greater success for the ensuing year. It is a pleasure to be at the helm of a ship guided by sailors whose time is given to loyal endeavors to bring the craft to port safe and sound."

Following are the branch managers who contributed to the handsome Xmas gift for Mr. Kirkpatrick:

Jerome Safron, R. A. Davis, F. F. Kimmerle, E. J. Hayes, Max Levey, Charles Casanave, Morton A. Levy, R. C. Herman, H. D. Cassidy, George J. DeBute, C. W. Tyler, E. McAvoy, A. R. Patton, Lewis Klar, I. F. Mantzke, Al. Durning, F. Goldfarb, T. R. Richards, E. J. Tilton, J. F. Gill, George Moore, Theodore Johnson, W. A. Crank, Fred A. Keller, L. Wingham, and E. L. McShane.

Officials Tender Regrets at Explorers' Deaths

Tarkington Baker, general manager of Universal City, has just received a communication from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, enclosing copies of letters sent by the Belgian Ambassador and by Secretary of State Robert Lansing, extending sympathy to the Smithsonian Institute and the families of Dr. Robert Armstrong and William Stowell, on the death of the explorers which occurred recently in the Belgian Congo.

Dr. Armstrong headed an expedition sent out jointly by the Smithsonian Institute and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to explore Africa with the camera. William Stowell, the widely known leading man, directed the photographic end of the expedition. Both men met death when a special car in which they were riding was telescoped on a down grade by a runaway tank car.

Zukor Announces Theatre Agreements

JONES, LINICK & SCHAEFER SELL INTEREST IN FIRST NATIONAL EXCHANGE

BALABAN & KATZ have purchased the one-half interest of Jones, Linick & Schaefer in the First National Exchange of Chicago, Nathan Ascher retaining his one-half interest, thus completing one of the largest moving picture deals ever executed in that territory.

When the First National Exhibitors' Circuit was formed several years ago, Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher were the first to favor it and secured the franchise for Illinois for their Central Film Company, soon afterward changing it to the First National Exchange.

The new arrangement assures the showing of the First National products throughout two of the largest and most influential theatre circuits of the central west.

Simultaneously with the sale of their interest in the franchise by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Aaron J. Jones has resigned as a director of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to take effect at once.

F. P.-Lasky, Through Arrangement with Theatre Owners, Assured Permanent Outlet of Product; Monopoly Danger Is Belittled

EXTENSION of the activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into the field of motion picture exhibition, through the association of the company with the present management of large houses strategically situated in leading American cities, is the substance of a statement issued yesterday by Adolph Zukor, president of the company.

" The outstanding feature of my six weeks' trip to California and through the far Northwest," said Mr. Zukor, " was the very general expression voiced by theatre owners everywhere that they regard with great favor and enthusiasm the opportunity to assure to themselves a consistently steady supply of high class motion pictures of the Paramount standard.

" Danger " Talk Wrong

"There is no denying the widespread feeling of confidence in motion picture exhibiting. The public's desire to patronize the best theatres exhibiting the best pictures is a sign that so long as producers continue to improve their product at the rate of past growth, theatre enterprises may be undertaken of a most ambitious character, drawing to the industry many millions of dollars for theatre development.

"For fifteen years, first as an exhibitor and subsequently as a producer and distributor, I have watched closely each phase of the industry's development. I have always had a keen recognition and an earnest appreciation of the delicate machinery that must function ceaselessly if one or all branches of the industry are to operate successfully. It is a truism that one cannot exhibit good motion pictures in the finest of theatres unless the incentive to produce the best is given to the man who makes them.

"There was a time in our growth when the thought of closely co-ordinating production and distribution was regarded by the inexperienced in our industry as a sign of danger. All sorts of false prophecies were made. Yet the result has been highly satisfactory, great economies have been effected and clear-thinking producers have been able to proceed with their work in the confidence of an intimate understanding of the market for which they are creating.

"One of the reasons why the motion picture industry has plunged ahead with such gratifying strides has been because of the commercially adventurous men and women that have been its very life and soul. And I do not withhold this compliment from any branch Personally, I know of men who have risked much to put over a theatre. Any spirit short of indomitable would have been crushed during the period of adolescence for that enterprise until it became a self-supporting and prosperous undertaking.

"That these men—and there are thousands of them—should carefully guard their enterprises from aggression is only natural. They know at the present time that their success is attracting constant attention from other

Picture Boom in Scandinavia

Manager of F. P.-Lasky's Office Here From Abroad Tells of Business Increase

IN few countries in the world have American pictures gained greater prestige than in the Scandinavian nations, according to Ingvald C. Oes, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Scandinavian offices at Copenhagen, who arrived in New York December 23rd, for a stay of several weeks. This is Mr. Oes' first visit to America since his departure for Copenhagen three years ago to take charge of the interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Fully seventy-five per cent. of the pictures shown in Scandinavian theatres today are American made, Mr. Oes declared in an interview shortly after his arrival. The return of peace and the elimination of the hazards of war-time shipping have brought about an even greater interest in American pictures, with the result that photoplays from this side of the Atlantic are so solidly entrenched in Scandinavia today that they can never be dislodged from the high position they hold in the estimation of the general public.

"The motion picture business in Scandinavia has been very prosperous," said Mr. Oes, "and the exhibitors are reaping a harvest with high grade American pictures. Paramount Artcraft productions are immensely popular, and there is scarcely a theatre of any size in Denmark, Sweden and Norway in which they are not shown all or part of the time. Interest in the latest Paramount-Artcraft pictures is at a high pitch, and the release of each new production is followed by record-breaking crowds at all of the theatres.

"The removal of war-time restrictions upon shipping has helped greatly to stimulate the motion picture business. So keen is the demand for our productions that one of our most prominent exhibitors, the manager of a large string of high class theatres, with headquarters in Christiania, has a standing request that he be notified of the arrival of each shipment of films from New York. A few days later he shows up in our offices at Copenhagen for an inspection of these films, in order that he may arrange his program for his houses.

"The return of peace has brought about a revival of interest in theatre building throughout all Scandinavia and most especially in Sweden. This country has about 700 motion picture theatres, many of which compare favorably with the finest theatres in this country.

All Chicago Amusement Men Band Solidly

An event of unusual interest to Chicago exhibitors was the consolidation last week of all legitimate, vaudeville and burlesque houses with the motion picture theatres, film exchanges and accessory dealers, as members of the Allied Amusement Association. This organization, which already has done so much in promoting and safeguarding the interests of Chicago motion picture exhibitors, hereafter will handle all matters affecting theatres of every kind and all amusement purveyors of Chicago will work together to head off detrimental legislation or ordinances injurious to any class of exhibitors.

Dr. Sam Atkinson, manager of the Hoyburn theatre, Evanston, was unanimously elected business manager of the enlarged organization at a meeting held last Friday.

The present officers including Maurice A. Choynski, president; Sam Atkinson, vice-president; Max Hyman, secretary; Robert R. Levy, treasurer; William Rohe, sergeant-at-arms, and directors, Nathan Ascher, Joseph Trinz, Samuel Katz, H. A. Gundling, Geo. B. Hopkinson, H. E. Newell, I. E. Berkson, Andrew Karzas, Louis Marks, Frank M. Teter, Ludwig Schindler, John Bobeng, Arthur Schoenstadt, S. Abrams and Peter Schaefer are remaining in office and promise to give the same careful attention to affairs of the new combination that won them so much praise in their conduct of the Allied Amusements Association during 1919.

Seriously Considering One General Exchange in New York

The dream of every film exchange man in New York—to bring all the exchanges of the city under a single roof, may be realized if plans now under consideration by the Film Exchange Building Committee of the National Association of The Motion Picture Industry materialize. It is reported that several of the largest of the distributing companies have approved the general idea of the erection of one big, modern built structure to house the exchanges and accessory companies.

An impetus to the plan is given by the success of the National Association's Committee in formulating and carrying out negotiations for the erection of exchange buildings in several large exchange centers throughout the country. In Kansas City a $500,000 building has just been completed and plans are practically consummated for the erection of similar specially constructed, fire proof buildings in Cleveland and Chicago, the total investment represented being in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

"New York's Opinion Is Not Weighty

J. D. Williams, Manager of First National, Upon Completion of Nation-Wide Tour, States Views of New York Film Circles Are Inadequate

CONTRASTING the facts, obtained at first hand on his recent trip of five weeks into eighty per cent of the exchange territories, with the pre-tour opinions and ideas, expressed to him by prominent film men in New York on a score of important film topics, J. D. Williams, Manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has returned from his work of nationalizing that organization's exhibitor campaign against producer monopoly of theatres with the declaration that New York film circles are just eight per cent accurate in their gauge of country-wide conditions in the industry.

"And that eight per cent of accuracy in New York-born opinions that are supposed to be statements, applying to the entire United States," he declares, "is no less because New York City, as a film territory, represents about eight per cent of the gross revenue on the average release."

Heads Must Tour Annually

"Moreover," adds Mr. Williams, "no motion picture executive has either the right or the ability to assume the responsibility for directing the national destinies of a film concern unless he considers it a very important part of his success to visit the various territories, at least once each year, and acts accordingly. A theatre tour at least once every six months by film executives would be nearer to a practical discharge of executive duties.

"Film conditions, according to the Broadway ideas, may be accepted, as an average, as being eight per cent correct. Before Mr. Schwalbe, Mr. Gordon and I left New York, we heard countless opinions about what exhibitors were doing; what they intended to do; what trend the business would take in the year to come; what the big developments of the next twelve months would be; and, of equal volume in discussion, but of greater inaccuracy and greater importance, the actual conditions now existent in all territories, which have a very material bearing on the immediate future. We heard local happenings talked about with a gusto which made obvious the opinion of the speakers that they considered the New York events of national importance.

"The actual fact is that the exhibitors out in the territory read very little, and care less, about the changes in the administrative personnels of the various film concerns; about the rumors that the president or general director of this company or that has resigned, or is about to resign; that a certain production was given a private showing atop the Grand Central train sheds to a selected audience copied from the Congressional Blue Book; that a director favorite in the Clarastor grill has taken a company to Jersey City or any other Southern point for exteriors; or that a film executive just imported from some other industry announces his candidacy for exhibitor favor with an expose of his views of the motion picture business.

"In personal talks with many keen, capable exhibitors, there was not an instance when one of them requested

C. A. Meade Joins C. B. Price Company, Inc.

As another evidence of the expansion of the business of C. B. Price Co., Inc., they announce the association with them of C. A. Meade.

Mr. Meade entered the picture world via the General Film Company at Kansas City and the Mutual at Omaha, and when the V. L. S. E. was organized he was selected to open the offices at Dallas, Texas and New Orleans which he managed for nearly two years. He was next transferred to the management of the V. L. S. E. offices at Cleveland and Detroit, leaving the V. L. S. E. to become Special Representative of Pathe on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Meade brings to the C. B. Price Company a wide knowledge of conditions in all parts of the country and a large acquaintance throughout the industry. He was closely associated with Mr. C. B. Price during his connection with the Mutual and V. L. S. E. companies.

WISE, UNITED CIGAR STORES PRESIDENT, ON GOLDWYN BOARD OF DIRECTORS

EDWARD WISE, president of the United Cigar Stores, was elected a member of the Board of Directors of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation on Tuesday, December 23. It is considered significant that another of America's leading business men has joined forces with the Goldwyn company.

As president of the United Cigar Stores, Mr. Wise has moulded the destiny of one of the largest corporations in the world—a company which has girdled the country with evidences of growth and big business from both retail and manufacturing standpoints.

In the fifteen years during which Mr. Wise has been associated with the United Cigar Stores, he has seen the company grow from one small store in Nassau Street, New York City, to an organization owning more than 1,000 stores from coast to coast and from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico.

Much of the development of this enterprise is due to Mr. Wise's activity and versatility. He thinks through every problem which presents itself. And now, in the prime of life, he is addressing his enthusiasm and trained business ability to the motion picture industry. His advent is looked upon as a force which will help the Goldwyn organization to realize its aims and ideals with the sureness and certainty that sound business methods and constructive foresight assure.

Morris Kohn at Realart Helm

Succeeds Arthur Kane Who Lately Resigned; Has Had A Successful Career

AN important announcement has just been made of the appointment of Mr. Morris Kohn to be president of Realart Pictures Corporation, succeeding Arthur S. Kane, who resigned some weeks ago. Mr. Kohn has been treasurer of Realart since the organization of that lively young company last June. In the interim since Mr. Kane's resignation, Mr. Kohn has devoted all his time and attention to Realart, in co-operation with General Manager John S. Woody and the company's affairs have moved along without a hitch.

"There will be no change in the general policies of Realart," said Mr. Kohn. "As I have stated several times lately our determination is to make pictures of unusual excellence from successful book or play titles. The releases already made offer a fair indication of the sort of pictures I have in mind. No effort or expense will be spared in giving our you stars adequate mediums for th varied talents.

"The Mayflower specials alrea released by our organization are al indicative of the high standard have set and there are announcemer of others to follow.

"It is well known," continued M Kohn, "that I have had an intima connection with Realart's policies sin the company was started. Along wi every other member of its lively wor ing staff, I have the good of the o ganization very much at heart. T this end there is bound to be t closest sort of co-operation from t highest official to the humblest offi boy."

Morris Kohn is no novice in the m tion picture business. Among tho who know, he is credited as being o of the most experienced and best pos ed men.

investors in their community. They also know that the real insurance for the continued success of their theatres is an assured supply of motion picture stories, expertly produced, widely exploited and timed to the public's desire. This is and has been the policy of Famous Players since its inception.

"During the past year more than 11,000 theatres exhibited Paramount Pictures. It is a record of which I am very proud. It is a tribute to the men and women of the studios and a mark of credit to our distributing organization. Our service during the present season will be even greater.

"Back of the present, however, are seven years of organization building, large capital outlay and experience. Owners of many of the best theatres in the United States are not lacking in an appreciation of these facts. More theatres have become substantial enterprises because they were founded and have grown with Paramount Pictures than the theatres that have played all other brands combined.

"There is going to be a great stimulus in theatre building in the next few years. One factor only may retard this wholly desirable movement, however, and that is a lack of belief by exhibitors and investors that t source and supply of good motion pictur will continue. I am speaking as a produc when I say that good pictures, in fact gre pictures, will continue to be made by us that the plans which this company h under way will warrant the most certa confidence. I have just had a series important conferences with Mr. Lasky an Mr. De Mille on this point.

"Our company for some months has bee working with a number of prominent exhib tors who have enlisted our co-operatio Thus they have assured to themselves for period of years a constant source of pictu supply for their screens and we have o tained a permanent outlet for our picture commensurate with their values.

"I am therefore very happy to invite e hibitors anywhere and everywhere to com municate with me in regard to the esta lishing of permanent relations between the selves and ourselves. However, I will b glad to furnish pictures as before to an exhibitor on our present contract basis. W are asking nothing from an exhibitor b the opportunity to perpetuate his own an our business and in return we are guarante ing to him the very best product that mone brains and experience can furnish.

"I regard our exhibitors' good will as on of our greatest assets. The extension of ou co-operative policy among the theatres th have supported us in the past and will su port us in the future, I believe, will be on of the greatest stabilizing influences eve developed in the industry."

Frohman Increases Capital a Million

William Sherrill Announces Increase From Half Million to $1,600,000; Big Plans Are On Foot for Production in Coming Year

OFFICIAL announcement was made this week by William L. Sherrill, President of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, that at a special meeting of the stockholders of the company it was voted to enlarge the operations of the corporation and to that end to increase the capital stock of the company from $500,000 to $1,600,000 and arrangements have been completed for the early utilization of this increased capital.

" After six years of consistent endeavors in the production of high class motion pictures," said Mr. Sherrill, " I feel that the industry has reached the stage where the public looks to the independent producer for consistent high art productions, and as the only independent organization that has never laid down its oars from the time of its initial production, it behooves The Frohman Amusement Corporation to keep in step with that march of progress.

Plans for the Year

"My study of conditions, which has given rise to a wonderful collection of data, convinces me that the year 1920 is the beginning of many years of substantial and rapid progress. Since it is a conceded fact that the production of motion pictures is a business requiring large capital, necessarily I could not proceed with my program of extended operations without the support of added capital.

"There is no longer the worrisome situation of being confronted with the opposition of program productions or of theatres contracting far in advance to fill open dates.

"The year 1920 will see produced by The Frohman Amusement Corporation four super-features with a real and not a near star and of stories from the pen of recognized literary lights of the world, and finally we will produce two extraordinary road show attractions, that is, photoplays built to play in legitimate theatrical theatres, and commanding legitimate theatrical admission prices. Added to this there will be twenty-six two-reel Western Dramas starring Myna Cunard. These will be produced along the lines of features as far as production, story, scenic investment ,photography and advertising and exploitation are concerned; in short, they will be Frohman Features in two-reel lengths befitting feature prices. In addition to this we will release twenty-six two-reel Comedies with a comedian of recognized popularity and these too will be feature attractions of themselves. When I say feature productions, I mean that the same care and attention as well as expenditure will be made as would be made if we started out to make these attractions of five, six or seven reels. I recognize that this is indeed an ambitious program for a single independent producing organization, but it is prompted, not alone, as I have stated, by the prosperous condition of the photoplay market, but as well by the demands

UPE NEGATIVES GOING OUT OF DENMARK TO GERMANY

A LETTER to American manufacturers that Denmark concerns are making dupe negatives and smuggling them into Germany is contained in a letter from Ben Blumenthal, President of Export and Import Film, to the home office. He writes:

In Copenhagen (Denmark) numerous concerns have been formed with the purpose of buying pictures for Holland in Denmark, making dupe negatives of same and trying to smuggle them into Germany.

A Mr. Gluckstadt, one of the partners in a Copenhagen concern, has formed three different companies: Continental Film Agency, Copenhagen; Continental Commercial Company, Copenhagen, and Det Nye Danske Film kompagni, Copenhagen. They have bought new copies of various American films, had them duped and smuggled them into Germany. I succeeded in having the police seize these films in Berlin and am taking standing measures in Denmark; I am trying to have the said Gluckstadt and his partners arrested.

I am going to considerable expense and trouble with regard to these illegal buyers. It is in the interest of the entire industry to put a stop to this illegal traffic, and I may say it was fortunate I was in Europe at the time.

Predicts Big Field Abroad

John C. Graham of F. P.-Lasky Asserts Industry is Due for Boom in England

"AFTER five years of repression and restriction, brought about by the war, the motion picture industry in Great Britain today stands on he threshold of the greatest period of expansion and prosperity in its history." This, in brief, is the opinion of John Cecil Graham, General Foreign Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who returned to New York Christmas day after an absence of two years.

Mr. Graham has issued a lengthy statement, from which the following pertinent paragraphs have been selected as representing conditions in the foreign fields:

"The reconstruction period will witness the building of the finest type of theatres throughout Great Britain. Before leaving London I was informed that a number of large theatre circuits in operation had obtained numerous sites for costly motion picture theatres, and the coming months will witness an even greater activity in this respect.

"Through the Danish-American Film Corporation, Ltd., a newly organized corporation, arrangements have been made for the opening of the great territory in Central Europe.

" Arrangements have been made for the opening of the Russian territory. Plans have been completed or are in the making for the wider exploitation of Paramount Artcraft productions in Italy.

"The signing of a commercial treaty between Great Britain and Persia is opening the way for the development of that wide territory included in Western Asia, which includes Asia Minor, Persia, Mesopotamia, South Caucasus and other countries in this virgin territory.

"The motion picture industry in France is making rapid recovery from the effects of the war. Paramount Artcraft productions are distributed throughout France, Belgium, Switzerland and Egypt by Societe des Etablissements Gaumont. We have just completed arrangements with this company for the distribution of Paramount-Artcraft productions in Holland, Turkey and Greece."

Seattle Mayor Strong for Sunday Openings

Declaring that he not only believes in Sunday motion pictures, but goes to them on Sundays, as well, Mayor C. B. Fitzgerald of Seattle told why he believes in keeping the theatres open on Sundays.

"I wanted to see the 'Miracle Man' as I heard it was such a clean, progressive picture. The only time I could see it would be on a Sunday, for during the day I am busy and in the evening if I am not busy, I want to rest. So the only time I had to see it was on a Sunday and I am glad I went with my family.

"I am not in favor of the unclean pictures and I am sure if there were more on the clean type, there would be no objections from a few in the ministry and 'goody-goodies,' who want to sit around all day and gossip about their neighbors. A good picture is a sermon to me. I go to church in the mornings on Sundays, but I do not see why this should hinder me from seeing an interesting or artistic picture.

"I have found that this is not only a recreation to me, but to thousands of others as well.

"I don't see how any one can be so narrow as to want to get rid of Sunday pictures, especially since there are so many educational features that go with them."

Inter-Ocean Film Holds Ball

Masque Ball on December 27th at the Hotel Astor Proves Decided Success

THE Inter-Ocean Film Corporation held its third annual masque ball on Saturday evening, December 27, at the Hotel Astor. The dancing was well under way at nine o'clock and continued until midnight. The entertainment committee under the chairmanship of Gus Schlesinger had provided an excellent orchestra which furnished number after number that kept the dancers, in gay costumes, tripping the light fantastic until midnight sounded the call for an elaborate supper.

Immediately preceding the supper, six prizes were awarded by a committee for the most original costumes. The committee, consisting of Miss Adams, Mr. Gradwell and Mr. Blaisdell conferred awards on the Misses Schulhof, Raines and Horne and Messrs. Horne, Salazar and Schlesinger, the latter of whom received the "booby prize" amid a general outburst of merriment.

After supper had been served, the assemblage was entertained by a program of professional performances. Professor Huber got the audience laughing with his comedy tricks of the magic art. Miss Emma Ainslee and Miss Ethel Whiteside also entertained, assisted by Miss Seevers. Among the other performers were Jim Dougherty, Burt Walton, Al Pianadosa, Wickie Bird and George Curtis. The entertainment concluded at 3:10 A. M. The program was favorably received by those present.

President Paul H. Cromelin was absent, being abroad at the present time, and George Newgass, vice-president, acted in the capacity of ranking officer of the Inter-Ocean Corporation. Among some of the other officials present were: Secretary and Treasurer, Frederick F. Neuman; Foreign-Sales-manager, Gus Schlesinger; E. H. Kaufman, manager accessories department, and Mrs. Kaufman; and Jacob L. Kempner, manager domestic distribution.

Among the guests of the company were Ricord Gradwell, of the Producers Security Corporation, accompanied by E. W. Donahue, general manager of the American Steel and Wire Company; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Garrett; Edward Godal, managing-director of British and Colonial Kinematograph Company, Ltd., of London; Evelyn Greeley; Major and Mrs. Herbert M. Dawley; Mr. and Mrs. Allan Lownes; Millard Ellison; M. S. Epstin; Mildred Adams; and Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. James.

Soldier-Director Sought to Keep War Promise

A post-war incident somewhat out of the ordinary has developed from the promise made a young English woman, wife of an officer who died in battle, by an American motion picture director who was in the U. S. army abroad.

The director promised this young woman, who had been variously motor driver for French generals, nurse in hospitals and aviatrix of real skill that he would give her a position in pictures if she would come to America. It was her desire to work in productions requiring skill and daring—not the love-making variety.

It develops she has lost the director's name and address and is making a public appeal to him to get in touch with her, feeling sure he remembers the promise.

If the soldier-director wishes to keep his promise he can find the young woman by addressing G. W., Care of E. S M. P., London, E. C.

Chicago and the Mid-West

By L. H. Mason

New York Office for Hyman Attractions

The rapid expansion in business of he Hyman Attractions has made it ecessary for this concern to open a New York office, and Mr. T. C. Braun eft Chicago last week for Broadway o take charge. He will look after Mr. Hyman's personal interests, as well as he buying of pictures, and some of is first work will be the selling of The Penny Philanthropist" throughut the Empire State.

The home office of Hyman Attracions is enthusiastic over the way exibitors are booking "The Penny Philanthropist" in the Middle West, nd H. R. Philips, who represents the Hyman interests in Chicago's southide, reports he has booked 35 theares for this feature, and Ed. L. Brichetto is running him a close race on the northside.

Mr. Hyman recently has acquired the Chester Single-Reel Screenics for Illinois, Indiana and Michigan.

Circuit Repeats Booking with American

C. A. Stimson, General Sales Manager of the American Film Co., reports the Northwest Exhibitors' circuit among the recent heavy bookings which continue to come in on the "Flying A" Super-Feature, "The Hellion." F. W. Normand secured the contract for the same 105 theatres which did great business with "Six-Feet Four."

Seven theatres in Seattle, and leading houses in Tacoma, Spokane, Olympia, Bellingham, Hoquiam, Pullman, Everett, Centralia, Aberdeen, and other Washington cities are included in the circuit; also Butte, Billings, Anaconda, Livingston, Miles City, Missoula, Harlowtown, Helena, Kalispell, and Havre in Montana; Boise, Pocatello, Moscow, and Lewiston in Idaho; Portland, Salem, Astor, Baker and Pendleton in Oregon.

Journal Acquired by Chicago Firm

Willis & Eckels & Mack of Chicago, has added another department to its rapidly growing service station by purchasing from Jacob Smith the Interstate Film Review, a paper devoted to the interests of the exhibitors and exchangemen of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

Beatrice Barrett, who through her activities in the trade paper field has attained a wide acquaintance and popularity in the motion picture circles of the middle west, and an ability to get the theatremen to tell all the latest news; and who has been editor of the Interstate Film Review since its inception, has been retained by Willis & Eckels & Mack as editor of the paper.

Newsy Items From Here and There

Milton Schonberger has resigned as Cleveland representative of the Industrial and Educational Department of Universal and it is reported he is considering several offers to take important positions in the exchange end of the industry. Mr. Schonberger is one of the most widely known men in the business and was service manager for Universal and filled other positions with that corporation before being called to military service. He spent 23 months with the colors, 11 of which were overseas and on his release from the army, organized the Cleveland Industrial and Educational Department for Universal. Recently he came to Chicago, following the resignation of Al Brandt.

The new Riviera Theatre, a 1200 seat house, the largest on the southside in Milwaukee, was opened about January 1st.

Another live wire has been added to the Beehive Exchange sales force, Frank Graham, well-known throughout Wisconsin, has started on the road for Mr. Cropper's Company.

A. L. Robarge, owner of the Lyric and the Majestic Theatres at Wausau, Wisconsin, and the Grand at Merrill, has taken over the Gem Theatre at Oconto, and is negotiating for other houses in the northern part of the state.

Chicago's newest moving picture theatre, the Panorama, which formerly was known as the Pine Grove, will be welcomed by Northsiders. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. End, managers of the new theatre, are experienced and able exhibitors and promise many innovations for their patrons. A splendid orchestra under the direction of A. Leon Blum, a well-known pianist, has been engaged.

The Luna Amusement Company, of which H. H. Johnson is general manager, owners of the Luna Theatre at LaFayette, Indiana and the Lyric Theatre, Fort Wayne, Indiana, have just purchased the lease of the Gaiety Theatre at Kankakee, Illinois, and will reopen this theatre on January 20th as a combination house, vaudeville and pictures. It was learned that Vitagraph's old Hoosier standby, J. A. Humphrey, was the intermediary in closing the deal and it is safe to say that Vitagraph productions will have a prominent place in the Gaiety program.

Oscar E. Wobrock, Fort Wayne, Indiana, former owner of the Lyric and Hippodrome and the Creighton, recently has made a long term lease on the Temple Theatre, Fort Wayne and now is redecorating and refitting this house which was scheduled to open on New Year's Day with vaudeville and pictures. The Temple is one of the old time legitimate theatres, seating 865, and is located in the Masonic Temple.

W. D. Martin has sold the Badger Theatre at Neilsville, Wisconsin to P. E. Smith.

Samuel Sax, Indianapolis manager for Select, was in Chicago this week for a conference with Mr. Selznick and reports that Selznick picture bookings in his territory have increased by 25 per cent over the old Select program.

Changes are coming rapidly in exploitation departments of various Chicago film exchanges these days and the latest publicity man to announce his resignation is Paul Gerard Smith of Select, who will cease to be connected with the Chicago office of Select on the 1st of the year. Mr. Smith, who is known as one of the best idea men in exploitation that Chicago has produced, has some big things in view and will make them known to the trade shortly after the new year.

F. C. Hensler has been appointed manager of the Milwaukee office of Hallmark. Mr. Hensler formerly was connected with the Pathe office in Omaha, Neb.

O. R. Hansen, Chicago district manager for Robertson-Cole, returned from a trip to Kansas City, Dallas, New Orleans, and other Southern and Western points, greatly pleased with the business outlook. He is in New York this week to attend a meeting of all Robertson-Cole district managers who are planning to do a big business with the "Beloved Cheaters," Lew Cody's new picture.

Harry Loper, owner of the Lyric theatre at Springfield, has bought a site for a new 1,800-seat house. Manager Watts, of the Vodet and Gaiety theatres, has purchased the Lyric from Kunz Brothers.

George West, of the Cropper Distributing Company, is back in Chicago after a five-weeks' trip to the West Coast, and reports a strong demand for Alice Howell comedies, of which the Cropper Company are distributors. The Consolidated Film Corporation has taken the series of 26 Alice Howell comedies for California, Arizona and Nevada.

Daniel Roach, who was recently appointed exploitation representative of Paramount-Artcraft, with headquarters in Chicago, has taken charge, and will have entire control of publicity matters in this district for that company.

Fourth Wholesome Film is "Humpty Dumpty"

"Humpty Dumpty" fourth of the Wholesome list of pictures will be completed within the next two weeks, it is reported. M. Feldstein, general manager of the Wholesome Film Corporation, expresses himself as being most agreeably surprised at the fine results evident in "Humpty Dumpty" as it nears its completion.

"Cinderella, Red Riding Hood and Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star have certainly taken hold of the state rights field since Wholesome put them on a state rights basis recently," said Mr. Feldstein. "But I believe "Humpty Dumpty" will not only eclipse their achievement, but will prove to be one of the most talked of pictures of the season.

"It is my contention that there is a little bit of 'kid stuff' in all of us, even up to the gray haired grand daddies."

Spanuth Sermonette Is Taken by F. P.-Lasky

The first Spanuth Sermonette, "The Christmas Message," will become a part of the program furnished by the non-theatrical department of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, according to the terms of an agreement made between that company and H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Spanuth recently returned from New York where he went to show the first of these novelty films to Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky, which furnishes programs for churches, schools and clubs.

Around the Exchanges

The Silee Film Exchange is planning to put out two big features each month and two new series of comedies besides the Sambo Comedies and the Jaxon Comedies, according to President Lee Herz. This Chicago exchange has expanded a great deal during the year just past, and expects to become even stronger during 1920. Branch offices have been opened in Springfield, Ill., and Indianapolis, Ind.

J. L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has been busy lately getting control of some new pictures, and announces that he has closed with Frank W. Thayer, of the Merit Film Corporation of Minneapolis, for a serial, "Million Dollars Reward." He also has taken over some Hank Man comedies and other subjects.

Bruse Godshaw has joined the staff of the Mickey Film Company, of Illinois, and will handle the exploitation of "Mickey."

Here he is, boys—Jack Dempsey powdering down his grease paint prior to beginning work on the Pathe serial production, "Daredevil Durant." The colored gentleman is "Big Bill Tate," Dempsey's former sparring partner, who now seems to have adopted the somewhat less precarious occupation of ladies' maid

BUFFALO

Buffalo exhibitors are planning an elaborate farewell banquet for Richard C. Fox, local manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, who has just been appointed sales manager for the United Kingdom for the Fox Film Company with headquarters in London. Mr. Fox, who is one of the most popular men in local film circles, will leave Buffalo for his new post late in January and the banquet in his honor will be given about January 15.

Clayton Sheehan, district manager of the Fox Film Company, has inaugurated an educational department in the local branch, where films of instructive nature are handled.

Thomas W. Lamb, New York architect who designed the Capitol theatre on Broadway, was in Buffalo recently looking over the site for Loew's Buffalo theatre and it is said to be his intention to draw plans for a fine theatre for the Queen City of the Lakes.

Fire, which was discovered in the basement of the Bijou theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., caused damage estimated at $10,000 on December 21.

The local Fox office aided Gerald K. Rudolph, managing editor of the Buffalo Enquirer, is staging a big Christmas party for Buffalo's poor children in Broadway auditorium by loaning several new films, including a batch of comedies to entertain the little folks.

Industrial Dispute Waxes Warm

men. He said in all his experience as a member of the committee he did not recollect a case which was presented more wretchedly and with less skill and ability than that of the motion picture exhibitors.

"So much for the tax hearing. As to the advertising question which Mr. Black said he discussed with us and in which according to his lying statements we were out for our personal gain as the sole object of all our thoughts, the true facts were as follows:

Mr. Black told us that he had made arrangements to have three sets of slides made with suitable quotations relating to the need of repealing the proposed taxation. These slides he said he proposed to have displayed on the screens throughout the country. On each of these slides was to appear the name of some national advertiser who in return for the advertising value would pay a substantial sum of money in order to defray the expenses of a anti-tax campaign. We told Mr. Black that we did not believe that such a plan would help the situation any in the State of New York because the political situation was satisfactory to us at the time. We took occasion after having declined his slide offer to call his attention to the copy of a contract which had been sent by him to a western exhibitor. The western exhibitor had sent it back to us with a request for information. The copy referred to was a copy of the contract which Mr. Black described as a "Book Lovers' Contest." We had examined the contract and had run across the name of H. A. Mintz, Esquire, of Boston. Mr. Mintz interested us because under the terms of the contract he seemed to be one of the chief beneficiaries. Mr. Black smiled in a somewhat embarrassed way and after a little hesitation told us that H. A. Mintz, Esquire, of Boston, was his personal attorney. We asked him whether his advertising committee had been consulted by him on this contract proposition and he replied that he had attended to the matter for them.. No other matters of any kind were discussed between us and Mr. Black either at this conference or before the conference or after the conference, any where or at any time. We cannot make it strong enough that we are not interested in any way in any producing or distributing companies.

Here are the plain, simple facts, contrasted with the willful and deliberate distortions of Alfred S. Black.

Sydney S. Cohen.
Samuel I. Berman.
Chas. L. O'Reilly.

Mr. H. H. Lustig, head of the Cleveland exhibitors' league in an interview last week stated that the exhibitors of America would almost to a man oppose an organization which bound itself to distribute films which were the product of one producer, as is the announced plan of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, through its president, Mr. Black.

He said further that, as a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League advertising committee, appointed by Mr. Black at the convention in St. Louis last year, he had not been consulted in regard to the plan announced by Mr. Black.

In wires to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League, and temporary chairman of the committee for the protection of the screen, Mr. Lustig congratulated Mr. Cohen for his efforts, and declared the members of his organization were behind the move unanimously.

New York's Opinion Not Weighty

any verification or denial of the choicest bits of gossip current in New York film circles. They did not appear at all interested in the personalities of the executive side of the producing and distributing branches. But they did ask innumerable questions about matters that are directly pertinent to their own immediate affairs.

"Everywhere there were voiced a genuine interest in the new Capitol theatre here. They wanted to know all about its appointments; what new architectural features it had; how its floor plan had been arranged; the decorations in the lobby and foyers; the type and kind of projection equipment; and the arrangement of the programs which Mr. Bowes creates. The reason for this interest was that the Capitol, as an unprecedented example of theatre construction, offered suggestions and ideas for exhibitor use in improving their own properties. And there was a great deal of pride in being able to recommend many of its unique features.

"Exhibitors did not ask for reports on the progress that producing companies were making on trips heralded by much trade paper space, but they did manifest a sincere interest in the exploitation that has been given by the big first-run houses to productions already released. They want ideas on showmanship; on advertising; on novel, but practical, publicity stunts that will help them to attract more patronage to their houses. They want to know what other exhibitors are doing to win the elusive 'occasionals' among theatre patrons.

"The New York viewpoint on the industry as a whole is at least ninety-two per cent short of being comprehensive on the majority of subjects it elects to envision. Here we have a purely local condition of affairs, sponsored largely by developments in the New York City exchange and executive offices. This is constantly bei stretched to unsupported national pr portions, because a certain number the individuals here operate on natio al lines. And being in daily touch wi the strictly local affairs of Manha tan, they more often than not transla them into terms of nation-wide cond tions.

"This is not strange or in any wa a result to be criticised. It is som thing that is typical of every film te ritory. In Michigan there is the sam general interest in film affairs in D troit, and happenings there are th gauge by which many exhibitors mea sure the industry. It is a conditio peculiarly local to every territory. B there is every reason and excuse fo it in the territorial headquarters ou side New York, because in the othe exchange centers there are no genera headquarters or home office executiv staffs directing a national business.

tors; large and small, for larger and mor luxurious theatres. The big, underlying rea son for this tendency to speed evolution i the many evidences that the great speci almost unanimous sentiment among exhib feature productions of last season gave o the prime need for more capacity. Exhib tors with theatres seating fifteen or eightee hundred are thinking now of houses that wi accommodate twenty-five hundred or thre thousand. The theatremen who have bee operating with from six hundred to thousand seats are convinced that houses ar needed that will accommodate twelve hun dred or fifteen hundred patrons.

"Many of the small town exhibitors, wit three hundred and four hundred seat thea tres, are thinking about remodeling, or o building entirely new structures, with from fifty to one hundred and fifty per cent in creases in capacity. Of course, this is goin to mean fewer theatres, in the end, becaus one large theatre, erected in a locality tha is now supporting three small houses, eventu ally will close at least one of the others But this should tend to intensify the publi demand for screen entertainment. Record for theatre patronage for the United State show, in their total, a considerable differenc against the Government's total of adult popu lation. New and more elaborate theatre will encourage the reluctant element to un bend and follow in the wake of popula fancy. With the new era of theatre enlarge ment there will be an ever increasing marke for bigger production effort.

"It was extremely interesting to check up some of the many rumors common tc New York about the elaborate theatre holdings being rapidly acquired by some of the producer-distributors and chain-theatre operators. On Broadway, it was daily gos sip that house after house and chain afte chain were being purchased. The rumors grew until, before I left on the trip, I was told in all confidence that the total for two or three concerns had reached close to four hundred theatres. The fact is that not more than three out of twenty reported transactions actually took place, or will take place, in the territories we visited.

"The greatest question in the mind of the average exhibitor is about the future changes in the releasing affiliations of stars and producers whose pictures are in demand. The rapidity with which these changes have occurred in the last year or two has been the source of great difficulty for theatre owners Moreover, it has added materially to their costs of operation without benefiting either the producers or exhibitors. They are hopeful of a better degree of order out of the recent chaos of changes and upheavals which in many instances, have deprived theatres of stars after the owners had gone to great expense in popularizing and identifying them with specific houses through several forms of advertising."

Stringent Theatre Ordinance Proposed

The matter of adopting a theatrical and motion picture ordinance in Grand Rapids, Mich., still is in the balance, with the probability that the teeth, so far as the theatre men are concerned, probably will be drawn from the law before its adoption by the city commission. The ordinance, as now before the commission, has a provision strongly forbidding exhibition of pictures showing scantily clad or nude figures.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

The High Lights of Broadway's Shows

FOR the inauguration of this page, we could not have chosen a more auspicious week. To begin with, there are four great features playing at the Broadway picture palaces. Also about he best balanced bills we have seen in a long time.

Speaking of features, we must tell you that without doubt Doug Fairbanks' latest is about the best hing he has ever released. Reminiscent of the amous "His Picture in the Papers" in style of construction although not in story, Fairbanks does all that he has ever done and then some. The picture has quite an idea back of it, too—the effect hat the planning of incidents which seem to prove hat the supernatural is an assured fact will have on the mind of a normal young man. At the end of the feature some great camera effects are achieved. Take it from us that "When the Clouds Roll By" is a winner from every angle.

The next show we saw after the Rivoli was that at the Strand. The feature here is Griffith's "The Greatest Question," which may not be this producer's greatest picture but will rank close to it.

With a plot of ancient vintage, had it not received the injection of the faith in God thought, Mr. Griffith has builded a drama that will grip the most hardened and sophisticated theatergoer. He is not always pleasant in the scenes he uses and some of his characters are vicious, cruel and brutal but he has real drama in his latest contribution to the silver sheet. As for the cast, it could not be surpassed.

Josephine Crowell, George Fawcett and Eugenie Besserer portray characters which rank with anything ever done for the screen. Miss Gish isn't given the opportunity which was presented in "Broken Blossoms," but has a role which fits her like a glove.

At the Rialto, Charlie Ray's "Red Hot Dollars" is getting rounds of applause after every screening. So far as story goes this is another time-honored plot without even a villain, but it is entertainment of the sort which most people thoroughly enjoy, and the star makes the most of his opportunities, which are plentiful. You can book this and promise your patrons the best Ray picture in a long time.

The feature at the Capitol, "Back to God's Country," drifts in to New York somewhat late and you will therefore know as much about it as we do. It strikes us as a real novelty and in this we have the concurrence of the exhibitors who have played it.

For other "highlights" we will have to choose Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld's two prologue numbers at the Rivoli.

The first to be given is an interpretive dance by five maidens, two costumed in white gowns cut in a sort of semi-riding habit style and three garbed in black in the same mode. A very pretty drop is used, showing a giant tree trunk covered with snow as its principal scenic object. In front of this the dancers give their number with two of the quintet holding a white net some ten feet long in a horizontal position above their heads into which stage snow sifts. From time to time the girls scoop the stage snow from the stage and dump it into the net. The lightings for the act are purple, dimmed with sunset effects on the lower portion of the drop as if the sun had just dropped beneath the horizon.

The other special is a vocal number, "Deep Down Within the Cellar," sung by Emanuel List, basso, in costume and in front of a drop which suggests the olden time wine cellar with its massive columns and stone ceiling.

A window high above the singer's head infers that the dim light of the set comes from this source, and to heighten this effect a stream of sunlight seems to be streaming into the cellar, probably obtained through the use of a fan-shaped net attached at the ends to the stage and the place on the drop where the window is painted, although it may be painted on the drop. The singer is attired in a "Dutch doublet" costume and sits before a beer keg on which rests a stein from which he takes an occasional sip. Near the close of his rendition the artist rises with stein in hand and completes his selection from a standing position.

Dr. Reisenfeld is also presenting another novelty this week at the Rialto in the addition to the orchestra personnel of Bela Nyary Czimbalom, soloist, who assists in the rendition of the overture, "First Hungarian Rhapsody." For those who do not know what sort of musical instrument a czimbalom is, and we confess that we didn't, we will state that same is a string contraption like a piano but is played with two hammers in the hands of the performers. In tone it somewhat resembles the piano but has a more mellow note which might be said to be somewhat "flat." Dr. Reisenfeld explains on the program that the chief musical instrument of the Hungarian gypsy is the czimbalom and that many of the strains of the First Rhapsody are imitations of this instrument. In the overture as arranged for the Rialto number the czimbalom is used for a solo during the rendition.

The paragraphs concerning the czimbalom which we have mentioned as appearing on the program, is an instance of a feature at Dr. Reisenfeld's theatres in which something explanatory concerning the overture is always printed following the listing of the selection and its author. It is customary to give a little history of the opera from which the overture number is taken with perhaps something about the composer. To exhibitors who would like to inaugurate this idea for their programs and do not have the required musical education to do so, we would say that sufficient information may be gathered from the Victor Talking Machine Company's catalogue and a more elaborate book published by the same company entitled "Book of the Opera."

Both these books may be obtained through any music store handling Victor goods, either records or machines. That it is an appreciated service has been proven by the fact that both the Rialto and Rivoli programs continue the use of these little stories after having made considerable effort to determine the public's interest in such information.

Another Rialto number which sticks its head up above the ordinary is the scenic "Chilkat Cubs," since it has all the virtues of the usual reel of its kind and in addition shows the antics of two half-grown bears at close range with a little story told in sub-titles furnishing good comedy.

Likewise at the Strand a scenic strip is shown as a part of the Review which gets some remarkable close-ups of the most wary of game birds, the wild duck. This is titled "Hunting Wild Ducks," and is released by Goldwyn.

Goldwyn comes in with another novelty strip on the Strand bill in a Bray cartoon which explains the existence and reason for the tides in a fashion that demonstrates the versatility of the motion picture as well as presents entertainment in educational form.

At both the Rialto and Strand an unusually interesting strip is found in the current events number. This is a Kinograms release showing scenes at Calcutta during a giant celebration with hundreds of gorgeously decorated elephants and thousands of India residents in a monster parade. The title is "They Do Say India Celebrates."

Timely Tips on Short Subjects

"Chilkat Cubs"

Educational—Robert C. Bruce Scenic

THIS single reel is a camera trip in the Chilkat Alaska district made famous in the gold rush days of the 90's, but now as primeval as if the adventurers from every known country had not flocked to its mountains and valleys. Scenically the offering is on a par with those which have proven so successful in the past and also shows two young bear cubs in varying antics from rough and tumble fights to eating a morning meal of white ants. The bleak and barrenness of scenes of mountains in high altitudes in cold regions is relieved by some pretty water shots and the cubs mentioned. This ranks as better than a "filler" containing much that will interest even those who do not get entertainment from the usual scenic subject. Shown at the Rialto for the week of Dec. 28th.

"Memory Lane"

Post—Paramount

A CONVENTIONAL scenic showing "rippling brooks and wooded nooks," the scenes being tied together with a descriptive poem. Pleasing especially when snow and ice abound in northern climes and a glimpse of the summer time even in celluloid form is a treat. Follows the overture on the Rivoli program.

"Children of the Netherlands"

Pathe

THIS is a hand colored reel of the travelogue variety in which glimpses of the people, costumes, habits and physical contour of the Netherlands is shown to good advantage. Like most of these subjects the colors given to trees, buildings, costumes, etc., are unnaturally vivid but the film has a distinct educational value and a certain charm in the contrast of colorings. Shown on the Strand bill.

How the Grand of Chester, Pa., Put Over "Male and Female" With Profitable Results

THE GRAND THEATRE in Chester, Pa., is the photoplay theatre of refinement in the City and Delaware County. The policy of the management is conservative in harmony with its established reputation and any ordinary or "highfalootin' press agent's stunts will not be tolerated. In fact, the two daily newspapers are controlled by one company and never have they participated in circus, teaser or publicity schemes, indirectly or directly, knowingly or unknowingly.

This explanation is made for the purpose of conveying a little conception of the barriers and obstacles in the press agent's path. And as the appropriation is limited also, it naturally necessitated some deep thinking, when the publicity man was told to beat the established record, made by "Mickey."

Every available, desirable location was plastered with "Male and Female" posters and a checking system proved that the bill poster did his duty. Fifteen of the biggest stores in the heart of the city displayed large lithograph cut-outs, manufactured with the aid of corrugated card board by the press agent. On each cut-out some article of merchandise was placed so as to make the display appropriate and harmonize with the other merchandise in the window. On a one sheet cut-out of Gloria Swanson, jewelry added to the beauty of the poster. A pearl necklace on her neck, a wrist watch on her arm, etc. In another window, her feet were in real slippers; in another window she wore a beautiful gown, etc. Accompanying each display was a beautifully painted card reading "From a scene in 'Male and Female' showing next week at the Grand theatre."

On Thursday, December 11, four days prior to the first showing of the picture the Chester Times announced three prizes of $25 for the best essays, of not more than one hundred and fifty words, entitled "My Impressions of 'Male and Female.'" As the prizes were given, presumably, by the paper, the article ran on the first page. Regularly each day, another story on the contest appeared on the first page of this paper, keeping up the excitement.

On Saturday, December 13, "Male and Female" practically dominated the newspaper. On the first page was a quarter of a column story about the contest, on page two ran a single inch ad teaser, and one on page three. On the fifth page, a single column box headed "To High School Students" again called attention to the essay, suggesting that contestants see the film at the Grand theatre. At the bottom of that column was another inch teaser. On the editorial page, a teaser was the topmost ad. On pages eight and nine were also inch teasers. On the tenth page, an inch teaser was the only ad on the page. On the twelfth page was another single inch.

The fourteenth page carries "The Next Week's local amusement houses Chat." The first write-up was that of "Male and Female." Another teaser at the top of most of all ads. On the fifteenth page another inch teaser.

The last page was all "Male and Female." A big heading read "Appropriate Gifts for Chester's "MALE and FEMALE." The other ads all dealt with "Male and Female." The Grand thus received the benefit of almost one hundred and eighty inches of space, while paying only for sixty-four inches. The four heaviest lines on the entire back page were "'Male and Female,' GRAND All Next Week."

The judges consisted of the superintendent of public schools, the Mayor of Chester and the head of the largest bank in the county.

The front of the theatre is very well arranged. A sign about one hundred and fifty wide was hung from the second story to the roof. On the dozen lobby doors leading to the box office and the interior of the theatre, a beautifully large still was pasted on cardboard with announcement of the production and date. It is needless to relate that "Male and Female" did business at the Grand, the biggest business in the history of the house, making good for the theatre's publicity man, E. M. Oro Witz, his stint of beating the "Mickey's" record.

Miller's Theatre Gives Free Sho and Souvenirs to Orphans

LOS ANGELES had never gone in for "fr shows," no matter what worthy purpose migh be the object, until recently, when the Mille Theatre, one of the first run houses, established precedent for the city by giving a special perfor mance where no admission was charged, the publi wasn't invited and where souvenirs were give away. Manager Roy Miller had as his guest about six hundred children from orphans' home in and about Los Angeles to see the Mary Mile Minter film, "Anne of Green Gables," which ha an orphans' home atmosphere. The children wer brought to the theatre at 10 o'clock in the morning and after viewing the picture were given larg apples by Miss Minter and Ellen Beach Yaw, th noted singer, who is sponsor for the Lark Elle Orphans' Home.

Just what this event meant to the homeless youngsters, viewed from the usual term "home,' may be imagined by a glance at the accompanying cut taken after the special performance. Miss Minter had the time of her life, being "big sister" to the little shavers, and Miss Yaw contributed to the pleasure she gets from charity work.

Incidentally Miller's theatre received quantities of front page stories from the Los Angeles newspapers, a "heart interest" feature being something that the editors never overlook, even if some showman does gain some free exploitation in its publishing.

Theatre Has a Basket Ball Team

IN a letter, which begins with "I receive your valuable magazine and do not believe that I could get along without it," Jack B. Jourdaine, manager of the Central City, Ky., Union Theatre, tells us that he not only guides the destinies of the above mentioned show shop but also has a basket ball team whose members are composed of theatre employees. He thinks he has the only quintet in the South, which may be figured two ways: one that he considers it the best one, and the other that it is the only five representing a theatre.

The Union is owned by the Miners of Central City. During the recent strike, when any one who was temporarily short of coin of the realm for the above mentioned reason, he was admitted with only payment of the war tax. He found the policy made a lot of friends for the house and for him as its manager.

The accumpanying cut shows you the Union Theatre basket ball club. The nice looking chap with the white sweater is Mr. Jourdaine.

"Everywoman" Sign Sixty-Four Feet Long

Park Theatre, Boston, Gets Billboard Service from Store Show Windows to Striking Results

"HE who runs may read" and Bostonians who walk or ride along Washington street (the main stem) in the vicinity of the Park Theatre, will not fail to learn that "Everywoman" is the current attraction. Directly across the street the sixteen big show windows of the old Siegel-Cooper store in the Bacon building fairly "shriek" "Everywoman" to the passer-by

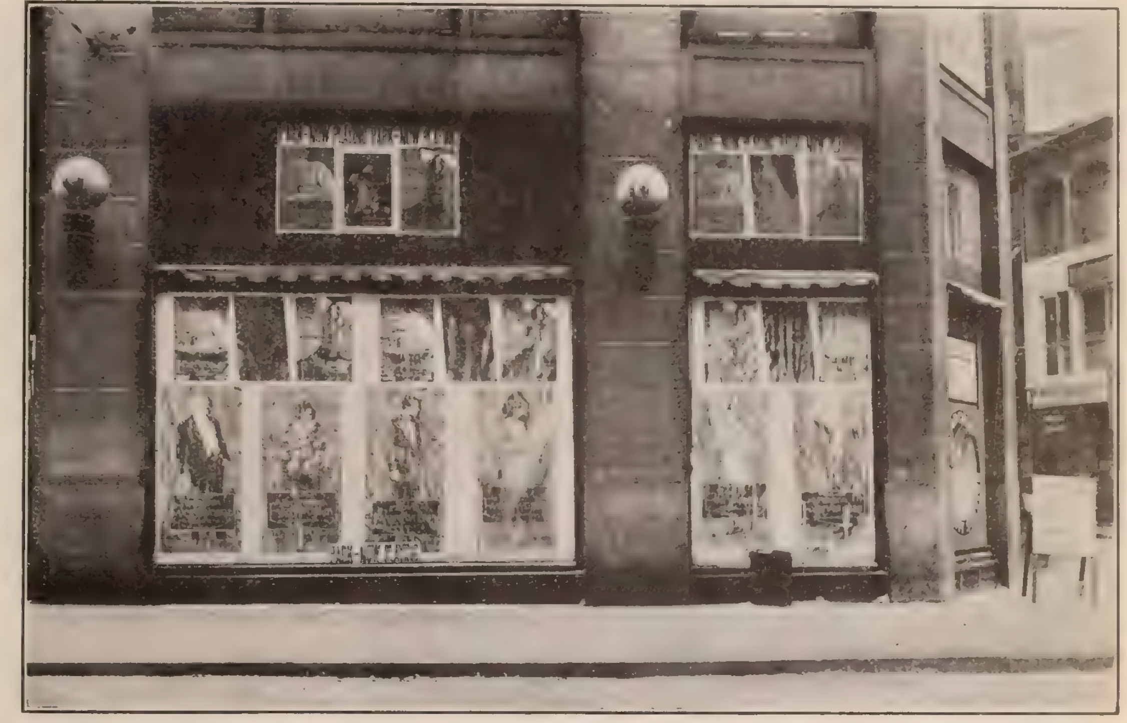
The Siegel-Cooper store has been vacant for some time and since last September the Park has held the windows under contract for advertising purposes. Several instances of the good use the Park management is making of them has been recorded in these columns. During the six weeks run of "Male and Female" the windows were utilized for an elaborate setting.

When "Everywoman" was booked at the Park, the exploitation department of the Park desired something different in the way of advertising and decided to use "paper" for this purpose.

In four of the biggest front windows, directly opposite the theatre entrance, is a painted banner, built in four sections. The word "Everywoman" in letters five feet high and three letters to a window, runs the length of all four windows, a total of 64 feet. The letters are a brilliant orange on a circus blue background and make one of the most effective combinations imaginable. Underneath, on each window, is a panel containing a catch line and below this are the words "Park Theatre—Now." The remaining windows are filled with 1, 3, and 6 sheets, the special series of ten-three sheets, showing the principal characters from the play, being used as the main display. In all, over 250 sheets of paper were hung.

Although the clock on the Siegel-Cooper building registers twelve as you may see by one of the accompanying cuts, we would call this publicity a "ten strike." Even those who do not favor the billboard method of advertising pictures cannot fail to admit the amount of attention which this "flash" is bound to receive. We have no idea what leasing the windows costs the Park, but feel sure that what ever the amount is the space acquired is worth it.

Samuel Pinaski, manager of the Modern and the Park theatres, also provided an innovation in Boston picture presentation by staging an elaborate prologue for the "Everywoman" showing, the success of which is best estimated by the news story which the Boston American of Saturday, December 18 gave the prologue presentation.



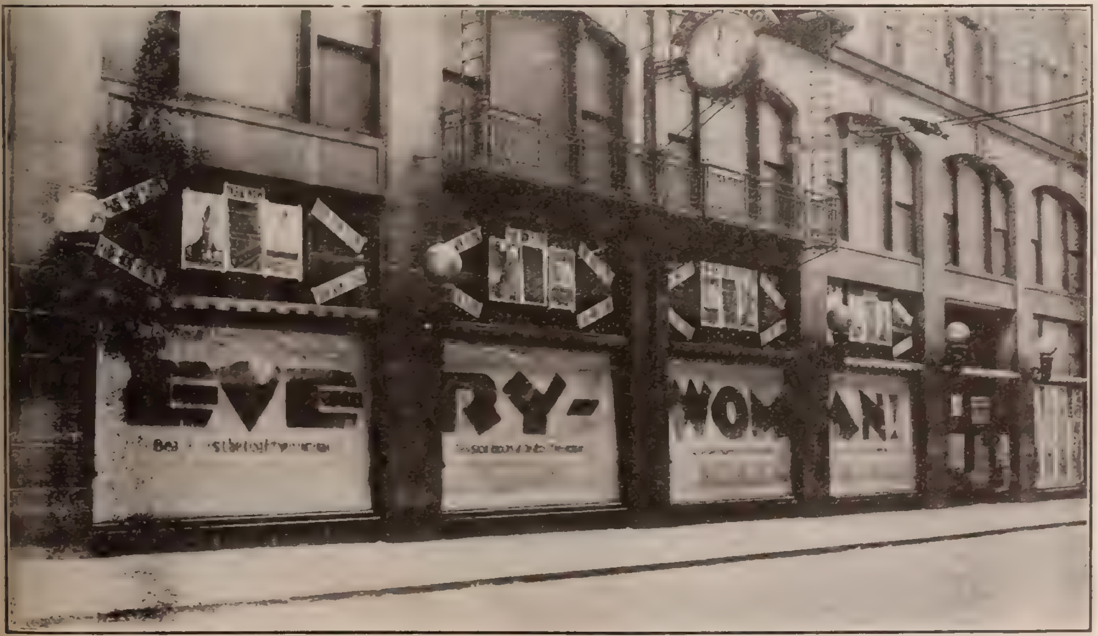
Another view of the Park's billing of "Everywoman" in the Siegel Cooper vacant store windows

The following is the American article, stripped of its introduction:

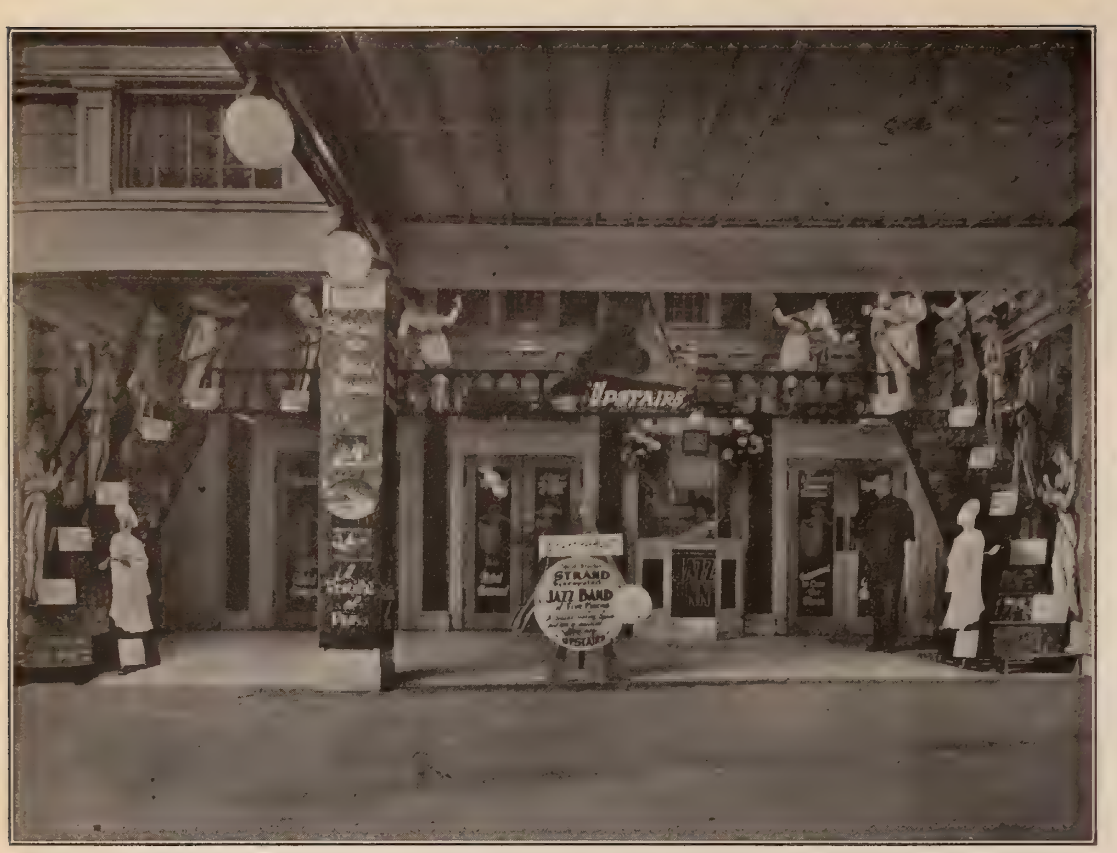
It has been customary to introduce special photoplay productions with a news comedy reel as well as with an overture by the house orchestra. But Mr. Pananski decided that in this instance some extra feature in harmony with the photo-drama itself would be more in line with the ideal bill. So the Park manager himself wrote and staged an attractive tableau scene, in which Thomas E. Clifford, the well-known Boston baritone, and Miss Emily A. Fuller, a pretty girl with an engaging personality, enact an episode that serves as a prelude to Jesse L. Lasky's screen version of the famous morality play. Mr. Clifford appears as Experience and Miss Fuller as Everywoman. First Experience sings a reminiscent song, "When I Was Twenty-one," and then he gives Everywoman some fatherly advice, in much the same spirit as Truth and Nobody give counsel to Everywoman in the photoplay.

Samuel Pinaski manager of the Park and Modern theatres Boston

The novel scene was received enthusiastically at all of last week's performances, and Manager Pinanski was warmly congratulated by theatrical men, who visited the Park to see "Everywoman."



How the Park is advertising "Everywoman" by utilizing the show windows of the old Siegel Cooper store



C. R. Roediger took the title of Mabel Normand's offering, "Upstairs and Down," in literal fashion, and evolved a lobby display that "stopped the passerby"

Roediger Says Lobby Display "Stopped 'em"

ACCORDING to C. R. Roediger, advertising manager of the Rialto and Strand Theatres, Tacoma, Washington, whom we have been importuning to dig us up some samples of exploitation stunts, the lobby display used for the engagement of Mabel Normand in "Up Stairs," "stopped 'em dead," and it is not hard to believe this when one takes a glance at the accompanying cut which illustrates better than words, how this lobby display was constructed.

The display was designed by H. Wellington Woodin, manager of the Strand, and the result of his efforts places him in the artist class. Along with the lobby display idea, Manager Woodin decided to engage a jazz band of five pieces and this novelty helped advertise for the Strand and "Up stairs," although, according to our good friend Roediger, it was the lobby display which is given credit for the phenomenal business the feature did.

While at first glance the display shown looks to be very complicated, it is really not so difficult of construction, nor yet so expensive. Get your scenic artist and stage carpenter on the job and give them the illustration, and in a few hours they will be able to reproduce a display identical with this one. Attention is directed to the use of cut-outs of the characters who appear with Miss Normand in the feature, and of the fact that Mr. Woodin costumed his ushers as "bell hops" for the showing. Also to the catch lines used in the special posters used.

Mahoney Plays "Eyes of Youth" Double Length Engagement

WHEN "Eyes of Youth" played the Rialto theatre, Providence, a two weeks' engagement, by the way the first picture in some time to receive so extensive a booking, Manager Mahoney having in mind that two weeks is quite a spell for one picture to play a city of the size of Providence mapped out a publicity campaign which would attract the extra business necessary to make the run profitable.

A special newspaper advertising campaign was inaugurated that was characterized by big displays and which heralded the star and the title of her new production above all other features being shown in Providence at the time.

The feature of most of the display advertising was its artistic appearance. The house employs a press agent who has all advertisements hand drawn and then a plate is made, which goes into the form. Different poses of Miss Young were used in these on different days, while there was just a few of the principal catchline material used to act as drawing power. The prices were then played heavily with especial attention being given to evening prices.

A great deal of paper such as six and three sheets were put out with window cards. A total of 800 pieces were displayed in various parts of the city and the outlying sections.

Manager Mahoney arranged his performances in such a way that the last evening show started at 8:30 p. m. This gave him a chance to get any overflow from other houses and at the same time permitted those who had gone to other picture houses late in the afternoon to get in on "Eyes of Youth" before they went home. This plan worked out admirably and much additional business seemed evident.

A special musical program on the big organ was given, this including the following: Hindu Song, "Dolores" waltz, "La Mandolinta," "Melodie" by Friml, "Variety," caprice, "Minuet" by Paderewiski, "Simple Aveu" by Thome and "Il Trovatore" selection.

A contest was introduced and on the first day Manager Mahoney reported that it justified itself. There were three contests in fact, one for the girl of Rhode Island having the prettiest eyes, one for the oldest man and one for the oldest woman in the State, who never wore glasses. To the winner of each $50 in gold was given.

Southern Exhibitor Originates Good Novelty Idea

THE first exploitation story for "Behind the Door," the latest Thos. H. Ince special production starring Hobart Bosworth, and incidentally the first production in which this favorite actor has appeared in some time, comes from the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Florida, managed by Phil Gersdorf, who is rapidly making himself a figure in the picture field in spite of the fact that he has not as yet reached his majority.

Besides his usual amount of newspaper display and other ordinary exploitation methods, Mr. Gersdorf put out a little novelty card which appeals to us as a very good idea.

The herald is folded and stapled together and has no printing on the back at all when fastened at its opening edges. On the front is the picture of a rough board door with the question, "What is behind this door?" printed over it. The space about the "door" is cut on three sides so that it opens, disclosing an announcement of the coming attraction at the arcade and describing the picture as "a screen version of Gouverneur Morris' sensational story in Collier's Weekly."

"Look and See" invites the person who picks up a card to open the "door" and view the announcement. This is a form of the "teaser" advertising which has a real point and should have been an excellent medium for arousing interest in the feature booking.

The "Bear" Facts of An Excellent Story

How Knapp and Murphy Advertised "Back to God's Country" in Their Strand Theatre, San Bernardino, Cal.

Back to God's Country
James Oliver Curwood

F you ever go to California over the Santa Fe railroad you will fall asleep some night after ding for seemingly endless hours over a flat esert country, which will lead you to believe that he whole territory of Arizona and New Mexico n't worth two dollars and a quarter. If you make he trip in the winter time you are liable to lose onsciousness in the midst of a howling blizzard. herefore in the morning when the train stops at an Bernardino, Cal., for breakfast and you step ut on the platform of the station into a warm ropical climate with palm trees waving and all he other evidences of what it means to live in unny California, about your surprise is going to e complete.

If you walk up the street a way, not far, since an Bernardino is only about 25,000 population, ou will see the Strand theatre, a pretty new house hich looks and is prosperous. The Strand is anaged by J. C. Knapp, who belies the theory hat living in a warm climate saps the energies nd dulls the imagination, for Mr. Knapp is a ve showman and believes in publicity and exploitation of his attractions enough so he is always doing the unusual to get the attention of San Bernardino's population, residential and tourist. When Manager Knapp played "Back to God's Country," he employed some of the novelty suggestions originated by the press sheet staff of the producers.

To use the expression of L. L. Tally of Tally's Kinema, of Los Angeles, to whom we are indebted or much of the data for this story; Knapp read he "sinned against" press sheet and then went to he bat. He used newspaper space as he had never used it before. Consequently he received more free publicity than he had ever received before. The morning of the opening day he and his staff stenciled the entire town with bear tracks. (the stencil idea from the press sheet). This bear rack stunt was preceded by a teaser campaign of "Follow the Tracks."

However, Knapp was not satisfied with doing just the conventional and that which had been suggested by the press sheet, but used the imagination we have previously spoken about.

The result of putting on his "thinking cap" was, that he secured the services of Charles Murphy, the famous animal trainer, who was responsible for the animal actors used in the filming of "Back to God's Country." Mr. Murphy, with his knowledge of animals staged a prologue of big proportions. In addition to this he led a big black bear through the streets as a bally-hoo. The accompanying cuts will show Mr. Murphy and his bear working for the "Back to God's Country" engagement.

Since all exhibitors are not located near enough to Los Angeles to make it possible to secure Mr. Murphy's services or any other of the "experts" who are to be found around the film center, this recital of what Mr. Murphy did is of little value. However, there does remain the moral of "exploitation pays" and there may be a real live bear with a trainer from the Emerald Isle or Sunny Italy somewhere in your neck of the woods who can be pressed into service when you play this animal actor feature. If so, do not fail to hire him. Your experience should be the same as that of the enterprising manager of the Strand, the biggest business in the history of the house, in spite of the fact that San Bernardino is a bad matinee town.

Attractive Lobby Display for "The Broken Butterfly"

ONE of the most attractive lobby displays which have come to our attention in some time is one designed by the Alhambra Theatre of Utica, N. Y., for the engagement of "The Broken Butterfly."

Artificial vines and flowers were twined about the lobby fixtures and tastefully arranged on the side walls and on the balustraed side of the balcony stairway which leads directly from the lobby to the second floor of the theatre. One sheet boards advertising the feature were placed along the side walls leading to the door of the auditorium. At the street entrance other good advertising mediums were utilized, including larger stands of paper and scene stills from the production.

The Alhambra advertising campaign was not confined to the theatre, other mediums being used. Among these was some very good display advertising in the Utica papers. The "Broken Butterfly" showing was satisfactory from every angle.

Co-operative Advertising with Merchants Again Wins

THE engagement of "Jinx" at the Lyric Theatre, Belleville, Ill., was also marked by a display of live exploitation methods. The outstanding feature of the campaign put over by the Lyric was the fact that although it included a large street parade, co-operative advertising with a number of local merchants, an attractive stage setting, and a variety of other mediums, its cost was represented mainly by a few free tickets to the show and the use of the screen for advertisements of the merchants whose co-operation was enlisted.

One week prior to the opening of "Jinx" at the Lyric, the management distributed one thousand black cat heads prepared as a novelty herald. This was followed by a co-operative drive with the local music stores, which resulted in two windows of the store being devoted to a display of the "Jinx" song appropriately tied-up with the picture by announcement cards and scene stills. In addition, each window had the name "J-I-N-X" in letters five feet high and made up of the black cat cutouts.

A notable feature of the Lyric's campaign was a circus contest open to the children of the town in which tickets of admission were given to the youngsters who presented themselves at the box-office arrayed in circus costumes and bringing with them wagon floats decorated in circus style. The contest was heavily publicized and the number of youngsters that responded was far beyond the most sanguine expectations of the manager.

The children and their floats were assembled in front of the theatre at noon of the opening day. Then led by a small band, the parade which was abundantly equipped with "Jinx" banners and large black cats' heads bearing the title of the picture, was sent through the business thoroughfares where it blockaded traffic, caused a lot of excitement and generally succeeded in magnetizing no small amount of attention and interest.

The parade wound up in front of the theatre followed by a large crowd, just in time for the initial performance. Backed by this whirlwind publicity which was supplemented by lavish newspaper space, "Jinx" opened to capacity business at the Lyric and concluded a three-day run by shattering the theatre's previous attendance record.

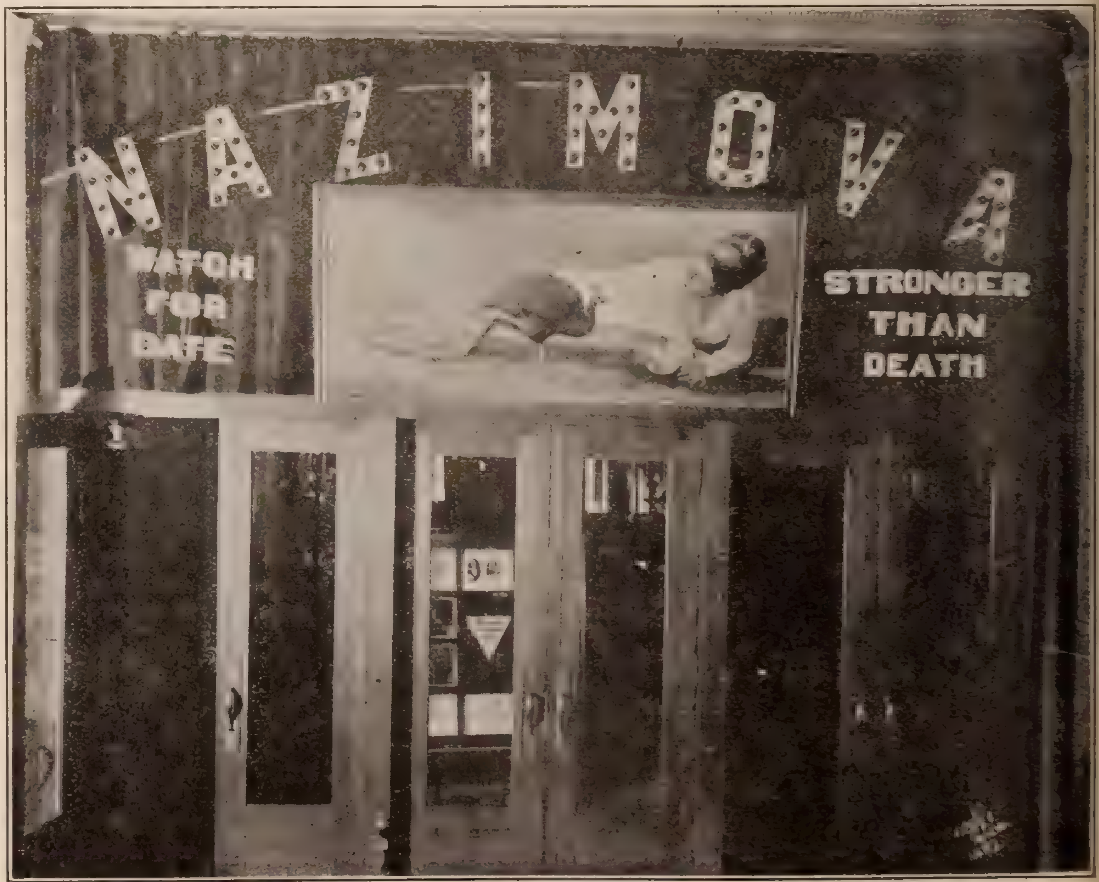
Advance Exploitation Is Worth While, Says Merrill

THE tendency to give the unusual box office attraction advance advertising even to the extent of placing the current bill in second place is shown by the publicity the Merrill Theatre of Milwaukee, Wis., is according Nazimova's latest picture "Stronger Than Death."

It is not so long since it was rather the custom of managers to expend their best efforts on the picture which did not possess any special box office value, on the theory that the big attraction would advertise itself and that the weaker feature had to be "put over."

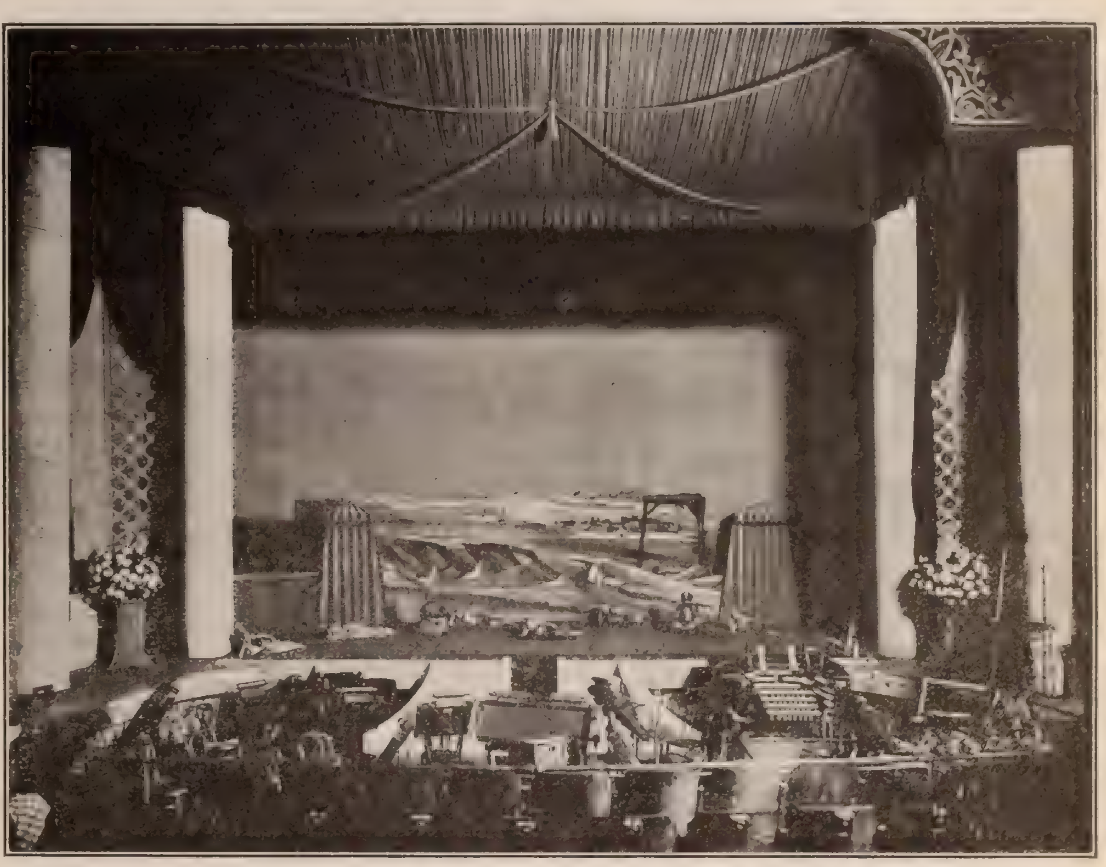
Now wise managers are beginning to realize that it is the big feature which is worthy of the exploitation and the one where extensive exploitation gets the greatest results when the box office statement is finally compiled.

In this case of the Merrill's, the management might have utilized the electric's to advertise the current bill to advantage. Possibly the feature needed all the exploitation it could get to bolster its waning run. Probably use of the blazing letters across the theatre for the attraction would have sold some seats for the attraction. The point is that the Merrill decided that Nazimova's name on the sign would sell more seats for the coming attraction than some other star's name would for the one playing when the photograph from which this cut was made was taken.



Sets Pace for California Exhibitors

Tivoli Theatre of San Francisco Experiments in Exploitation and Invites Others to Witness the Result



Stage setting designed for the presentation of "Auction of Souls" at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco

EVIDENCE that California exhibitors will adopt a new style of exploitation in the form of a prologue that carries out the theme of a given attraction, is clearly apparent following a tryout of this plan by the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, which brought the personal attendance of exhibitors throughout the state.

This new thought as carried out by the Tivoli is a progressive step along the thought that it is the word-to-mouth advertising that best promotes the interests of any production and the proper development of this idea can mean promotion that not only brings patrons to the theatre but which at the same time sends them away pleased.

The Tivoli tested their idea that exploitation can be a stimulant for word-to-mouth advertising with "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian.

Exhibitors throughout the state were notified by means of newspaper exploitation and a number of personal letters that something extremely new in promotion was to be tried. It is an interesting fact that the Tivoli risked the chances for a big opening attendance by playing mainly to the title, star and the fact element of the attraction. Outside of the facts that Aurora Mardiganian was termed, "the beautiful Armenian refugee who witnessed the sale of Christian girls for eighty-five cents apiece" there was no effort made on the part of the Tivoli to extract from the picture the sensational advertising possibilities afforded.

The exploitation was the prologue. By an arrangement with a local California school for fancy dancing, the Tivoli was provided with a bevy of eight attractive girls who were trained specially for interpretive dancing. The advertising given the school more than compensated the institution for creating an original dance that typified the fortitude and sacrifice of the Armenians. A lead dancer who conceived a dance that represented the dawn of a new era and the triumph of the Christians.

The curtain rose on a desert scene just without the walls of a typical Turkish city. A drop curtain transparent in place gave an effect that the city had been sacked and burned. The dancing girls in Armenian costumes were guarded by two large Turks on either side of the stage.

After depicting by a dance the sorrow caused by the capture the lights were gradually dimmed, the girls fall in supplication to the Master and out of a dense blackness there arises the indomitable white cross.

To see what effect this novel exploitation would have on the public of San Francisco, many California exhibitors stayed about the theatre for several days, interested to learn what the new scheme would bring forth.

And without exception the exhibitors journeyed home resolved to adopt the prologue as an exploitation medium in cases where the bigness of the feature will warrant it.

It's a Good Story Even If Not True

SINCE this story is from a press agent, in fact originating with Joe Reddy, might lead the skeptical to believe that said story is something conceived in the imaginative mind of said press agent, naturally to be expected the morning after the time for making New Year's resolutions and entitled to be viewed with the proverbial grain of salt, like we will say a tale concerning champagne baths which movie actresses are sometimes said by publicists who have more nerve than good sense, to use in lieu of the more commonplace HO^2 dip. On the other hand we have always found said Joe Reddy to be a most dependable specimen of his species, subject to only such suspicion as naturally accrued to one who has adopted a profession which contains so many artists, a correct term, who cannot resist the temptation to make a story sound interesting even if it is necessary to distort facts.

Therefore we publish Mr. Reddy's tale of what an exhibiting life is in some of the smaller communities. You can believe it or not just as you like. Anyway it's a good story.

"Algona, a village of several hundred inhabitants, including the police department, is located in the hills of the State of Washington, somewhere between Seattle and Tacoma and probably came into being after a landslide. Yet, in spite of the fact that even the interurban trains refuse to recognize its existence, and make no stop at Algona, the hamlet has its own motion picture theatre, and twice weekly shows are staged with Pathe features heading the programs.

"It is nothing unusual on the face of it, for Algona to have its film palace—almost every town in the country has one—but it is the difficulties encountered and overcome by H. M. Leonard, owner of the theatre, that make it one of the seven wonders of filmdom.

"In order to get electric current for the exhibition of his pictures, Mr. Leonard connects his wires with the third rail of the interurban line which carries 500 volts. Having no transformer, he uses a barrel of water for a theostat, in which he has suspended a tire, taken from an old wagon wheel. Even with the high voltage he thus gains, the lights occasionally get rather dim, and, in order to increase the power, he chases out and drops a handful of rock salt in the barrel.

"This is not his only difficulty with the light, however. When the interurban train passes the theatre, regardless of whether the villain in 'The Thirteenth Chair' is about to strike down his victims, or the hero is about to rescue the pretty heroine from the Zulus in 'A Woman of Pleasure,' out go the lights entirely. After the train has passed, the connection is resumed.

"Despite all these difficulties, Mr. Leonard manages to satisfy his audiences. He has almost succeeded in beating the railroad people, by arranging his shows between trains."

Suelke to Make the Town Come Up to Their Theatre

WE have recently received an interesting letter from Karl A. Suelke, who with his dad, owns and operates the new Liberty Theatre of Cape May, N. J. As Mr Suelke says in his letter Cape May is more or less a dot on the map to most people, its greatest claim to National fame being in the submarine scare during war times for it was at this point that the German subs were reported.

Before telling us something about the new theatre, the Liberty, which as yet isn't quite complete although open and doing a good business he takes a little crack at some of our stories which have started out by saying small towns, when we were speaking of cities of some ten thousand and reminds us that he is doing business in one so small that he is figuring that for every person in the town he and his father have invested twenty dollars a head, since the theatre with its two stores and three flats added cost $50,000. At least that is the way Mr. Suelke figures the situation which will allow you a chance to air your mental arithmetic and figure out how many people dwell within the village limits of Cape May.

Speaking further on the subject of the problems of the small town exhibitor as we have been wont to call the ten thousand city man, Mr. Suelke goes on to say, and in saying it, he is a real optimist not at all dismayed that he has so large an investment in so small a town, that "Cool Cape May" is going to run the big new fifty thousand dollar theatre in a fifty thousand dollar way, and he goes further than that, he proves that he is doing it.

For instance, he was playing "Broken Blossoms" at the time of writing us his letter. He describes the amount of paper he is putting out for the attraction, and as near as we could figure it without using something more than mental arithmetic, fifty dollars would about cover the cost. This is about twice what the average theatre in a town the size of Cape May would pay for a picture, let alone spend for advertising.

And that is not all. The Liberty staged a prologue for the offering which would have done credit to a city. A painted drop, orange blossoms and all the effects just as the Griffith press book described as the proper way to put over a prologue was included in the Liberty's creation, the first venture in the art, so Mr. Suelke tells us.

The Liberty showman sent us some programs, also city style and well framed and nicely printed. The Suelkes call their theatre "The Bright Spot in Cape May." Then came a paragraph in the Suelke letter which had us guessing since it stated in telling of the advertising the house does, that "You can see our one sheet boards as far as thirty miles."

Spends Money on "Broken Blossoms," But the Result Justified It

WHEN "Broken Blossoms" played the Virginian theatre of Charleston, West Va., some few weeks ago, George Kyrros, the Virginian's enterprising manager, was fully alive to the exploitation pissibilities the feature possesses and went the limit in his advertising campaign. As he says in a letter which among other things states that the NEWS is a great help to him in advertising his programs; "I admit we spent some money advertising 'Broken Blossoms,' as we are doing on all good productions nowadays, but we have found out that exploitation pays."

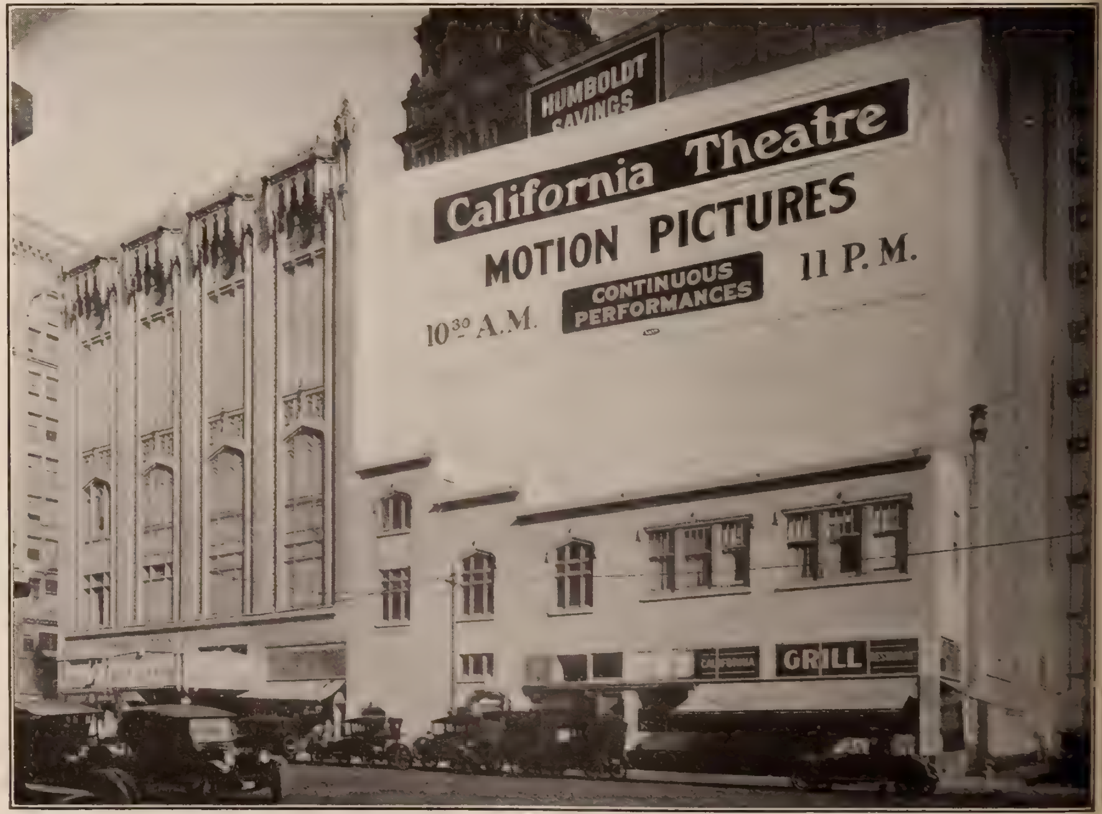
Mr. Kyrros' campaign in some respects was of course orthodox, but in other ways it was extraordinary.

Before the picture opened he engaged an aeroplane and distributed a hundred thousand small "dodgers" all over the city by means of the plane. Besides an enormous number of posters, he also placed many hand-painted window cards about the city. The theatre was decorated all the way through to present a Chinese atmosphere and all lights were covered with Chinese lanterns. Chinese dolls and dragons were placed about the auditorium and lobby and all employees were costumed in the style of the Orient.

The lobby was a model of artistic construction as will be noted from the accompanying cut.

Mr. Kyrros wanted to give his presentation a proper musical setting so he imported a famous orchestra from Pittsburgh, Pa., for the engagement and made much of this fact in his advertising. The musicians were worthy of all the claims Mr. Kyrros made for them and alone were the means of attracting much extra business. The feature held up for a full week which is an unusual run for Charleston and Mr. Kyrros is satisfied that his advertising campaign had a great deal to do with this fact. He is fully convinced that intensive exploitation is the only way to put over a really big picture, but laments that so few releases come under this head, according to his idea.

He says: "Most of the good pictures are in the film man's head."



This huge sign on the side of the California theatre, San Francisco, can be seen for miles when the view is unobstructed by buildings. It is illuminated at night by scintillators located on the roof of a low building across the street from the theatre

Grauman Methods Viewed at Close Range

How Los Angeles' Most Famous Exhibitor Puts on the Show with Many Illustrations

From "A Night in a Forest" as staged by the Grauman theatre Los Angeles. One of Syd. Grauman's recent specialty hits

SID GRAUMAN, premier showman, has been doing things again at Grauman's "Million Dollar Theatre," in spite of the fact that much of his time and attention has been taken with getting the second Grauman house in Los Angeles, the Rialto, open to the public.

The week of December 15th found Wallace Reid programmed to project his screen likeness on the Grauman silver sheet in a picturization of "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.", and upon due examination, Sid Grauman concluded that the picture did not contain any elements that would provide a basis for a prologue. So Sid hit upon the idea of a 100 per cent. program, with unusual lighting and color and musical effects with every number. This may seem a daring idea, that of taking each separate unit, enhancing it to the utmost after discovering its opportunities, and then merging the whole into a synchronized program. But that is just what the youthful manager with the Paderewski pompadour achieved.

The overture decided upon was selections from Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller," arranged by Arthur Kay, conductor of Grauman's Symphony Orchestra. Here the fine artistic hand of Grauman was evidenced in an entirely new scheme of lighting effects, by which huge shafts of green, orange, blue, purple, amber, red and composite colors, played upon the orchestra with each change in the mood and tempo of the music. As the last selection was being played and the music swelled to a crescendo, reverberating to every corner of the auditorium, the lights changed much faster, giving a beautifully dramatic value to the general effect. Then as the number came to a close, while Kay's baton was poised high in air, and the brass section was pealing a grand finale, the house was suddenly almost completely lighted. The effect upon the audience was marvelous, and the overture received a rousing cheer.

Then came the weekly, splendidly arranged, which Sid Grauman caused to close with a scene showing an aviator climbing out to the end of an aeroplane and precipitating himself into space on a parachute. As the parachute opened a pistol shot smote the atmosphere ,and as the aeronaut was swept by a strong wind over several miles of open country, his body swaying in all directions, the music became stormily dramatic, and again lighting effects representing lightning flashes zig-zagged swiftly over the theatre.

A Paramount-Burlingame Travelogue, showing scenes at Waikiki Beach, Hawaii, closed with a beautiful night scene on the ocean, and hidden voices singing "Aloha Oe." Vivid blues, reds and ambers played on the screen alternately, and the number concluded to big applause.

Two different acts graced this unusually strong program. One of them disclosed, as the velvet curtains parted, a tropical forest, with the moon above, and various whirring of wings and sounds of pattering feet indicated the presence of bird and animal life. Perched on a few limbs of trees were weird looking stuffed Birds of Night. Soon a few bird calls trilled forth from somewhere among the trees, and was answered by a love not from another bird. Gradually many birds seemed wakened and from a few intermitting trills and their echoes, the chattering screaming and singing of birds grew to considerable volume. By that time the audience was thoroughly puzzled, and then a pretty young girl, clad, with some modifications, like Mother Eve, made her appearance through the jungle growth, whistling a bird call. Then, one by one, were revealed four different girls, who from whistling bird notes, softly and gradually began to whistle in harmony some of the pretty melodies of Cadman, Carrie Jacobs Bond and Teresa del Riego. So gradual was the transition from the bird notes to the melodies that the audience was raptly unconscious of the change. The act closed to strong applause, with the girls retiring into the forest depths and the whistling gradually subsiding. When all was quiet, and the moonbeams playing through the trees became more beautiful to the undistracted view, the curtains closed.

Using the same set, but adding a tent and completely adjusting the lighting scheme, so that the scene depicted looked quite foreign to the original forest, Sid Grauman presented the Dupuy Harmonists, unusually sweet singers, in the costumes of backwoodsmen, with axes. This quartette sang two classical selections, after which they began to make ready to go back to their log-splitting. Just as they began to swing their axes, the lights went out, and the title, Jesse L. Lasky presents Wallace Rein in "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.", appeared.

There were other short film features on the program, and through it all there constantly recurred a melody from "The Fortune Teller," which bound up the broken threads, and gave a unity that brought forth to many the impression, most subtly, of having seen the entire performance in twenty minutes, instead of two hours.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

Exploitation Idea for "The Greatest Question," Which Should Go Big

"WOULD you sleep all night alone in a graveyard?"

"Do you believe in ghosts?"

Prompting these two interrogations is an exhibitor exploitation plan for the small city or town with particularly novel and inexpensive features, and with which it is proposed to make the simplest of psychic tests with colored men, colored women, white men or white women as pre-showing publicity for D. W. Griffith's personally directed production of "The Greatest Question" for First National, to determine whether or not there are such things as ghosts.

In his story Mr. Griffith has touched on spiritism, which is now sweeping the world with a wave of curiosity-invoking interest. And it is to capitalize the latent superstition in the average person, that C. L. Yearsley, director of publicity and advertising for the Circuit, has planned the exploitation idea which is offered to exhibitors, in complete detail, in a special two-page section of the press sheet.

The stunt was first announced in a trade journal teaser two weeks ago. That it is to be a remarkably popular form of mystery advertising is shown in the results from the announcement, which made no mention of "The Greatest Question." Scores of inquires have been received, and from many unexpected sources. While exhibitors have asked for further information, a great number of theatre employees and girls and men who hold positions with other film concerns have written, telephoned or called to apply for the opportunity to sleep all night alone in a graveyard, for a cash consideration, to prove or to disprove that ghosts exist.

As the exploitation is set forth in the special section of the press sheet for "The Greatest Question," it will be an unusually inexpensive form of advertising for any exhibitor. It requires a first announcement ad in one or more local newspapers in any town, wherein the exhibitor offers a series of cash awards—which in amount are left to the decision of the theatre owner—to any colored woman, any colored man, any white girl or woman, or any white man, who will sleep all night alone in a local cemetery, under conditions which provide all necessary physical comfort. The only requirement is that whoever accepts the offer must remain alone, securely fastened to the sleeping cot so that there can be no doubt in the public's mind that the test was actually made for the full period of time stated, from ten or eleven o'clock in the evening until six o'clock in the morning.

The stunt is of a nature that will elicit a great amount of newspaper comment in any locality, and this, in turn, reduces the necessity for a costly ad campaign to keep it prominently in public view.

The press sheet contains specimens of the ads, in addition to a complete complement of publicity stories. The stories cover the text of the ad announcement, the receipt of application, a statement by the exhibitor that whichever applicant is selected will be accompanied to the scene of the test by torch bearers, in automobiles, and by a committee of newspapermen, who will supervise the arrangements for the vigil, and securely fasten the applicant for the night.

Front page newspaper publicity is certain to result from the experiment according to the descriptive matter in the press sheet. The explanation of the stunt also recommends to exhibitors that they arrange to give one newspaper the exclusive right to publish, on the day after the test, the story of the applicant's experience during the seven or eight hours alone with the dead.

"EXPLOITATION MEN'S MINUTE BOOK—"

GIVING Credit Where Credit Is Due. The text of the pages under this heading is devoted exclusively to the achievements of the Exchange Exploitation Men.

It places at the disposal of the exhibitor all the exploitation ideas these experts originate, renders their services practically universal and gives credit where credit is due.

It is further suggested, as a means of capitalizing to the utmost the publicity value in the stunt, that the exhibitor arrange with the applicant who undertakes the test, to make personal appearances at the theatre during the presentation of "The Greatest Question," and make a short talk to each audience, describing what he or she saw, the sensations and thought.

The only individuals who are barred from applying are returned soldiers and professional mediums.

The teaser ads used in the trade papers two weeks ago were intended by Mr. Yearsley to test the efficacy of the stunt within the industry as a gauge to the interest it could be counted upon to arouse with the public.

One of the first inquisitors was a stenographer employed by another film concern, who offered to sleep all night alone in a graveyard for the amount advertised, providing that she could do it before Christmas. She said that she would not need the money that badly after the holidays.

Another applicant, a young chap, called personally at First National headquarters, also anxious to earn money in this unique way. But he had a time limit in which he wanted to camp in a cemetery for a night. He wanted to do it before Wednesday of this week, because his room rent was due on that day, he had no regular position, and his landlady had given notice that he would be ejected if he did not settle in full on the due date.

Most surprising of the applications was one made in person by a young, extremely well dressed girl, who admitted that her family name was prominent socially.

Prize Contest in Montreal Arouses Public Interest

THE Montreal Herald, one of the most progressive of Canada's newspapers and one which has recognized the interest the public takes in all things connected with the "movies" is conducting a contest in which the basic idea is to build subscription for the Herald.

Besides automobiles, pianos and a host of other prizes, this newspaper is offering two young women, who prove themselves, by the number of votes their friends cast for them, the most likely, lovely and popular Canada's fairest, the chance to become moving-picture stars with the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

The Herald is daily publishing pictures of Universal favorites, together with announcement of which moving-picture houses are showing their feature pictures each day. Full page advertisements of this sort are arousing intense interest in the contest.

Several large show windows in the busy shopping district are being utilized in displaying the prizes offered. The walls of these windows are completely covered with pictures of Universal screen artists, as are the outer edges of the plate glass windows. Huge signs ask "Do you want to be a movie star?" and others bid you "See Universal's Specially Selected Holiday Pictures at the local theatres."

In this contest the Montreal Herald has hit upon a splendid way to increase their circulation and at the same time possibly discover several flowers who would otherwise have been born to blush unseen instead of spreading their sweetness on the silver screen.

Soriero Obtains Lowell Mayor's Official Aid

Determined to Get Alice Brady for Personal Appearance, the Strand Manager Resorts to Strategy with Perfect Success

WANTED—A plan for bolstering up pre-holiday business.

Such might have been, but wasn't, the advertisement of Thomas Soriero, Manager of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass. Mr. Soriero's policy is to develop ideas himself—to fight his own way out of tight corners.

And this is the story of how he did it.

The first decision he reached was that the situation demanded the presence in Lowell of a really important motion picture star. But who could he get?

He recalled that Alice Brady was in Boston, appearing at the Plymouth Theatre in "Forever After." It was easy; he would get her. True, he would not be playing an Alice Brady picture for some time, but he had booked Realart production and could utilize that as an argument.

However, the argument did not prove as strong as he thought it would. Everybody was quite willing to co-operate with him, but there were serious obstacles to be overcome. Miss Brady, he learned from outside sources, was not in the habit of making personal appearances, and she was engaged at the time in rehearsing a new play as well as appearing in "Forever After."

But Mr. Soriero had set his heart on carrying through his plan and he was certain a means of doing it could be found. All that would be necessary, he argued to himself, would be to make so strong an appeal that it could not be refused. He would induce the Mayor of Lowell to issue an invitation on behalf of the city!

There are difficulties, however, in the way of tying up the administration of a city of 150,000 population with a private business enterprise. A good reason would have to be offered to the Mayor, and as Mr. Soriero did not have a strong political argument to advance, something else had to be devised.

This was found in the inauguration of plans for the Christmas Basket Fund for the Poor. Mayor Thompson was much interested in this enterprise—an active worker in its behalf. Mr. Soriero would suggest to the Mayor that the presence of Miss Brady in Lowell would help the basket fund.

ALICE BRADY IN PERSON TO DAY

Rain did not keep Lowell fans from coming out to see Alice Brady in person at the Strand theatre

Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., and a good showman

The Mayor, of course, agreed. And the result of his argument was a cordial letter of invitation—an official invitation from the City Hall—to the motion picture actress. Typed on embossed stationery, the message was as follows:

"My dear Miss Brady: May I invite you, in behalf of the people of Lowell, to visit the Strand Theatre, this city, on Friday, December 12, 1919? I can assure you of an enthusiastic reception if your reply is favorable. Kindly wire me, in order that arrangements may be made to receive you. Respectfully, Perry D. Thompson, Mayor City of Lowell."

And Miss Brady accepted! Strategy had won!

Of course, there were other troubles—there always are in an affair of this sort—but Mr. Soriero and his Big Idea survived them all. The day dawned drearily and developed a discouraging rainstorm. And there was a mishap to the motor car in which Miss Brady made the trip from Boston to Lowell. These conditions, however, did not prevent the Realart star's arrival, her reception by the Mayor and a committee of prominent citizens, and, most important of all, from Mr. Soriero's point of view, a visit to the Strand Theatre where several thousand admirers of Miss Brady were assembled to greet her.

The Strand seats 1,800 persons. Not only was every chair filled, but every inch of available standing room was occupied, and hundreds who were unable to get into the lobby stood outside in the rain. When the star entered the big house she was enthusiastically cheered.

Following the Mayor's introduction, Miss Brady made an address. She declared that in spite of her program of work she had been glad not only to meet her admirers personally, but to help them in their worthy charity. After obtaining pledges and helping to raise individual contributions for the fund, Miss Brady left the theatre, and visited the local telephone exchanges where the operators had prepared tea for her.

Of course, Manager Soriero took excellent advantage of the appearance of Miss Brady to advertise his theatre. The city's newspapers gave the affair considerable attention because of Mayor Thompson's connection with it, and in all news stories mention of Miss Brady linked up with her coming photoplay, "The Fear Market," which is to be shown at the Strand Theatre in the near future. Mr. Soriero also flashed slides on the screen announcing the proposed showing of "The Fear Market" at his theatre.

“More Than One Way of Doing Business

James Q. Clemmer, Owner and Manager of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, Expresses His Views on Successful Exhibiting Policies

ONE of the pioneers of the industry of the West Coast is James Q. Clemmer, owner of Clemmer theatre, Seattle, and recognized as one of the "thinkers" among exhibitors. Therefore a recital of some of the ideals and principles which Mr. Clemmer has made a part of his exhibiting career will be of interest. This is what Mr. Clemmer said to our Seattle correspondent when the latter interviewed him for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"There is more than one way of advertising and doing business," Mr. Clemmer stated by way of answering some queries our interviewer had put to him.

"Some motion picture managers and owners believe that the one and only way to bring the crowds is through the daily newspapers. Now regarding the papers, I am sure they are useful. I believe in advertising in them, but that will not bring the regular customer every week, unless you treat him right by giving him a good show or unless you give him good music to interpret the pictures. Besides this I believe in feature advertising. That is, to use novel ways for advertising a picture.

"I do not believe any house in the country, small town, or city, even New York, that wishes to build up a good name can do so, unless it shows good, clean pictures. I do not speak of the transient houses, by which I mean those theatres that are located in a district that is passed daily by strangers or those looking for any old kind of an entertainment.

"There are a number of men in every city who at one time made money from some kind of unclean proposition and who think the only way to make money is in this manner. Some are managers of picture houses or connected with a film house. They still look for and to the rotten side of life. They show and help produce unclean pictures and they are the ones who are detrimental to the motion picture industry. Some of this type make money, but we can see from the better class of pictures that have been on sale this last year, that those wishing the cleaner type seem to be winning out. For no producer would spend his money producing a picture if he did not think it would pay for both him and the exhibitor. For if the clean sort of picture does not pay the exhibitor, why he will not purchase that kind again.

"Most exhibitors do not know the value of music. I consider this both an artistic and advertising feature. The average exhibitor is afraid to pay a few dollars more for a good orchestra, while he will readily spend thousands for more newspaper advertising. As before remarked, the paper is valuable but what is the good of your advertisement if after the people attend your theatre, even see a good picture, but go away with the feeling that something is lacking?

"That something lacking with the picture, undoubtedly is the orchestra, if the house has none. Some houses have no orchestra. They believe an organ or a piano is enough to interpret pictures. Of course this is foolishness, as no one instrument can do what an orchestra can to interpret a picture that is full of action or one that shows repose. Any orchestra cannot interpret a picture. Only a good one can do this and it takes men who are real musicians to pick out the compositions that will fit the picture and know how to play it.

James O. Clemmer, owner and manager of the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, and one of the best known men of the West Coast

"People do not care for cheap music. They want something inspiring and if the music is not up to snap, no matter how good the picture is they will go away disappointed. On the other hand, good music will bring the same person to your theatre twice in the same week and will make a regular customer of him or her. For this reason I believe in obtaining the best orchestra possible and one that will play the best music. Since people really appreciate good music, they also appreciate special solos. When one goes in a motion picture house and hears as well as sees people applaud continuously after they have heard a so-called heavy selection played by an orchestra, they will know that a really good orchestra pays.

"For instance, in my theatre Mr. Guterson's famous Russian Orchestra is employed. The men in it have graduated fom the best schools in the world. Some in Russia, some in Vienna, and all under big masters. When Nazimova was playing here in 'The Brat,' which ran for two weeks, Mr. Hauptmann, the pianist, who is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music in Vienna and has played with some of the greatest musicians in the country, played Listz' Hungarian Rapsody after each showing with such fervor that oftentimes he received two encores. As this was hard work for Mr. Hauptmann, we tried to start the picture so he could rest, but the audience would not allow the rest. This shows people do understand and want good selections, not the trashy music. Every week Mr. Guterson has some one play a special selection or the entire orchestra gives one. Never a week has passed but encore after encore meets the selection. You bet it pays to have your house known as the 'musical motion picture theatre.'

Book store tie-up for "The Westerners" arranged by "Jim" Clemmer during the Clemmer theatre showing

"A special advertising feat always helps to swell the receipts. There is no manager in the country but who can think up some special advertising stunt. Maybe it will be an odd front, maybe a display on a machine that travels through the streets or anything that will attract attention or make the people inquisitive. For instance, when the 'Westerners' played at the 'Clemmer,' the front was appropriately decorated with a log cabin, etc. I also made arrangements with a book store to feature Stewart Edward White's book, 'The Westerners,' as a window display during the week the play was shown. The book store manager thought this a good idea, which helped us both.

"Before 'The Thirteenth Chair' was shown in my theatre, cards were distributed on the street and in offices, with the letters 'Why, "The Thirteenth Chair"' and a few other words written on it, in order to cause a mystery. The first day 'The Thirteenth Chair' was shown I employed a fortune teller to sit in the window of a well known store, which has a phonograph department. Anyone could go in the window and have his or her fortune told. In this window was an announcement of where the picture was being played and that they had the 'Record' of the selection the orchestra was playing.

"There are many features that can be copied from some good motion picture periodical that has a real good exhibitors' service department like the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, for you can get ideas from all parts of the country. Ideas that should be impressed on all motion picture managers and owners, are the ideas of clean pictures and good music."

It's a genuine novelty. We have come to expect great things from Doug Fairbanks; we sometimes wonder where he can possibly get any more new ideas from. Yet he comes along with a picture like this and simply carries us off our feet. "When the Clouds Roll By" is so new and original in story and action, so far away from anything that has been attempted before, that we go on record now with the prediction that every laugh-loving, thrill-loving man, woman and child in town will be talking about Fairbanks and his picture before the week is half over.

Live Items From Correspondents

SEATTLE

Ray R. Kelsall, manager for the Johnson Company, has resigned his position and will probably go into business for himself as he is considered one of the best motion picture accessory men in the West. Mr. Kelsall has been with the Johnson Company for about four years.

Mr. William W. Lewis, traveling representative for the Nicholas Power Company, was a recent visitor in Seattle and other Northwest cities.

Mike Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, has taken a trip to New York and other Eastern centers.

John D. Howard has been appointed exploitation representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the entire Northwest. Mr. Howard is working out of the New York office with headquarters in Seattle.

Lou Rosenberg, formerly connected with the De Luxe Feature Film Company, has severed his connections with this concern and is now one of the salesmen for the Universal Film Exchange.

There is an unconfirmed rumor that Sol Lesser of San Francisco, has purchased The Rex, in Seattle, from John Hamrick, and that John Hamrick has sold his interest in the Strand, which it is said he was to manage.

SPOKANE

Wellington Playter of the Playter Studios, Spokane, who has the heavy role with Nell Shipman in "Back to God's Country," a James Oliver Curwood production, appeared in person on the Clemmer theatre stage, where the picture was shown in Spokane.

A group of Mack Sennett Bathing Beauties, here with Bob Finley, comedian, assisted local society women in the "tag day" drive for the Social Service Bureau here, last week.

Paramount features are to be booked in conjunction with the vaudeville bills at the Hippodrome theatre here, as the result of a contract entered into between the Paramount Film Company and the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association.

PORTLAND

Negotiations which resulted in the sale of the Strand theatre, second largest cinema house in Portland, for a cash consideration of $125,000 were closed on December 15 by a Seattle syndicate composed of J. Aronson, capitalist; Mischa Guterson, musician; W. H. Butchart, merchant, and Frank Bayley and Carl Crowson, attorneys. The name of the house will be changed to the Rivoli and pretentious plans on foot will make it second to no picture theatre on the Coast.

L. E. Partridge manager of the Gem theatre, Tillamook, Oregon, was a visitor on film row in Portland early this week.

The Gresham theatre, which was closed about a year ago, has been reopened by Walter Adrian, of Portland, and the old Loyalty theatre, on East 28th and Burnside, has been reopened as the National by S. Bernstein, former manager of the Elite.

W. W. Von Metre has sold the victory theatre, in Redmond, Oregon, to C. H. Kelly, and W. J. White of the Arcade theatre, Cottage Grove, has leased the Bell, which he controlled in Springfield, to J. B. Peabody, formerly partner in the firm of Dickinson & Peabody, which manages the Rainbow, in McMinnville.

George Caldwell, who managed the Bijou in Grants Pass a year ago, has returned to the theatre business and is in charge of the Peoples in Clatskanie.

DETROIT

Sid Lawrence has resigned as manager of the Alhambra theatre, being succeeded by Charles H. Darrell, former manager and recently with Ascher Bros., Adelphi theatre in Chicago. Mr. Lawrence will manage the New Grand Cirfus theatre.

Stockholders of the Miles theatre are to vote on leasing the property to a large department store for a period of 69 years. The rental will enable the company to pay larger dividends and will give the company possession of the property for 15 years before its own lease runs out.

The Kleist Amusement Co. of Pontiac, controlling virtually all the theatres there, has incorporated for $350,000.

The Iris theatre, St. Johns, opened on New Year's Day with "The Birth of a Race."

The Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has established temporary offices in the Flm Building.

M. A. Slepski, owner of the White Star and Free Poland theatres, has announced a new 2,200 seat house within a block of the Riveria on which construction work is beginning.

INDIANAPOLIS

Four new motion picture theatres are in prospect for South Bend, the rapidly growing metropolis of Northern Indiana. A vaudeville house and a new legitimate theatre also are planned.

A stock company is erecting the Blackstone theatre, a photoplay house of 2,600 seating capacity. C. J. Henry and H. Allardt, owners of the Orpheum, plan to turn the house into a movie palace and erect a new vaudeville home.

Jones, Linick & Co., of Chicago and Ezra Rhodes of South Bend expect to put up motion picture houses.

Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago is preparing a three-reel educational film on the limestone industry of Indiana for the Indiana Limestone Quarrymen's Association.

The Crescent Theatre Company of Terre Haute and the Pastime Theatre Company of Hammond, both photoplay concerns, have filed preliminary certificates of dissolution with the secretary of state.

Theatres at Logansport, Ind., suffered because of the failure of the city electric power plant. The city was without light or heat from the plant for two weeks.

Gregory, of Scandinavia, Here on Visit

A. G. Gregory, General Manager of the Scandinavian Film Agency, Ltd., of Copenhagen, arrived in New York on December 30th. Mr. Gregory is making his headquarters at the office of Chester Beecroft, 501 Fifth avenue.

The Scandinavian Film Agency, Ltd., owns the European rights with the exception of England, for nearly all of the Roberston-Cole productions, some of the W. W. Hodkinson productions, Billy West and Billy Parsons Comedies, Helen Holmes and Masked Rider Serials, Post Travels and about one hundred selected independent productions.

The purpose of Mr. Gregory's visit to America is to close to his 1920 contracts with producers here, but as there is still considerable territory open on many of his most desirable 1919 subjects, he is putting in the first few days of his sojourn in New York negotiating sales with foreign buyers. The list of films which the Scandinavian Film Agency, Ltd., controls is in such keen demand in Europe that Mr. Gregory has already been besieged by interested buyers, and will probably have his list closed out very shortly. He purposes returning to Copenhagen about the middle of January.

which we have been receiving from Exchangemen and Exhibitors to give them more 'Frohman Productions.'

"I am not prepared to name the stars or the stories that will form a part of our features and road show attractions that we are to make, excepting that deposited in my safe are options upon the services of two of the greatest stars whose names ever adorned a twenty-four sheet, and I have already acquired the rights to three popular novels, the names of which will be revealed at the appropriate time.

"I am not given to boastings or exaggerated predictions, but my conservative promise and statement to the motion picture industry, as well as the motion picture loving public, is that The Frohman Amusement Corporation, having reason to be a factor, will meet in fair competition with the biggest things the world can expect by way of the moving picture."

Live News from the Producers

United Artists' Initial Pickford

"Pollyanna" Announced for Release on January 18

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION announced this week that its first Mary Pickford production, the first Mary Pickford has produced independently since the inception of the "Big Four," would be "Pollyanna," the "glad" story from Eleanor H. Porter's novel, which has the reputation of being one of the country's real "best sellers," published by the Page Company, and which has been unusually successful on the stage, having been made into a four-act comedy by Catherine Chisholm Cushing.

Release date for the film is January 18th.

Mary Pickford's entrance into the independent field with Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith was one of the sensations in the motion picture industry in Nineteen Nineteen. The reason for the organization then of the "Big Four" was to give the leading artists of the screen their full freedom in matters of production and to enable them to deal direct with the theatres of the country. Only through their own organization was it possible for them to enter the independent field and rent their productions to exhibitors solely and singly upon their individual merits.

"Pollyanna" has proven to Miss Pickford that this change has given her the greater opportunities she sought. Miss Pickford has taken an unusually long time to finish "Pollyanna," but she has accomplished wonders, according to those who have seen the finished product. Under her new arrangement, from script to screen, she has had at her disposal every resource and aid available, absolute freedom for the full expression of her own inimitable personality, and unlimited financial means, and all have brought about a production of supreme quality.

In making the announcement of the first Pickford production Hiram Abrams of United Artists said: "There is no doubt in my mind, but that 'Pollyanna' should be a gold mine for the country's exhibitors. The philosophy upon which the story is based constitutes a theme which at the present time has an unusually wide appeal.

"There is a great craving at the present time on the part of the public, according to best informed showmen, for something more than mere entertainment. Of course, diversion is always the principal thing whenever amusement is considered, but at the same time people want something big and compelling—something that will drive home a few truths without preaching a sermon or spoiling the flavor of a show which is meant for entertainment. Such a story is 'Pollyanna' with its cheerful philosophy of gladness. Moreover, this production comes at a time when the country is upset by a period of readjustment. 'Pollyanna' points out that even when things are bad they might be worse. This thought, planted in the minds of people who are dissatisfied with wage conditions, or who think they are not getting a fair price for their goods, may tend to stimulate a line of mental activity which may possibly help a little in stabilizing conditions.

"In all my experience, I have never known a production that lends itself to such wonderful possibilities for the exhibitors of the country as this picture. Its exploitation possibilities are unlimited and there is looked for on this production unprecedented business everywhere."

In the titles Frances Marion, author of the script, is said to have done some of her cleverest work. Her adaptation of the story deserves the highest praise. She has kept all the quaint essence of the novel, with its unique philosophy of gladness, and at the same time has given due emphasis to the conflict and plot. Her intimate knowledge of Miss Pickford's art has enabled her to suggest situations which have been developed to the utmost.

Paul Powell directed the production and Charles Rosher, photographer, known as "The Van Dyke of the Screen," has registered effects with his lens which rival etchings of the masters. His work adds the final touch needed to stamp "Pollyanna" as one of the screen classics.

Metro Negotiates A Big Deal

Will Distribute Five Pictures Produced by S-L in 1920

IN a statement just issued Metro Pictures Corporation announces the completion of arrangements with Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, whereby Metro will distribute five motion picture productions to be made by S-L during the coming year. The arrangement provides that the S-L organization will make these pictures in the Metro studios. The Metro report is reproduced in full in the following:

"The details of the negotiations for Metro to distribute the S-L productions have been quietly worked out for several weeks. It is now made public that work on the first of the S-L subjects to be released and distributed by Metro, will be started shortly after the first of the year.

"The five S-L productions will be picturized only from the biggest Broadway play successes or from novels having worldwide circulation and written by authors of international reputation. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin state that the market will be scoured for the finest available material of this character.

"In order to afford exhibitors further assurance as to the box-office value of these productions, only all-star casts will be used in each vehicle, and all of them will be produced by directors of established reputation in the handling of super productions.

"The distribution of these productions will be made by the Metro exchanges in this country and, through their established distribution facilities, in Great Britain and on the Continent. This arrangement will insure the widest possible circulation in the leading photoplay houses in the world for the S-L Specials.

"A most elaborate and comprehensive publicity campaign will be worked out between the executives of S-L Pictures and the publicity and exploitation department of Metro, whereby such of the five special films will be accorded advertising particularly designed to not only attract the attention of the theatre-going public prior to release, but also to furnish the exhibitor with the proper material to publicize each picture so that the greatest box-office benefit possible will be derived therefrom.

"An unusual exploitation-sales scheme is planned whereby the salesmen of the Metro exchange will be furnished with information during the course of each production, and also after they have been completed, which will keep the exhibitor interested and enable the salesmen to show exact reasons why these S-L Specials will be first-run productions in the real sense of the word.

"For the initial picture in the series of five, great care is now being exercised in the selection of story, director, star and cast."

W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation

William E. Atkinson of Metro Will Go West

William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation will start during the coming week on another trip to the Pacific Coast. As in the flying jaunt he made several weeks ago, Mr. Atkinson will, it is expected, cover considerable territory in connection with the business of Metro exchanges between New York and San Francisco, and will spend perhaps a fortnight at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Mr. Atkinson plans to drop off, en route to California, at Chicago and possibly Salt Lake City, and in the Golden State will visit the San Francisco and Los Angeles exchanges, to give a word of advice and look over current activities.

"Why Women Sin" Almost Completed

The initial feature production "Why Women Sin," which will inaugurate the new policy of the Wistaria Company of screen versions of famous plays and books, is nearing completion. Burton King, vice-president and director-general of the Wistaria Company, after securing this play by Will C. Murphey, assembled a cast which includes Miss Anne Luther, Claire Whitney, Charles Gerard, Al. Har, Baby Ivy Ward, J. W. Johnston and E. J. Radcliffe.

Florence Reed Will Be Seen in "The Alibi"

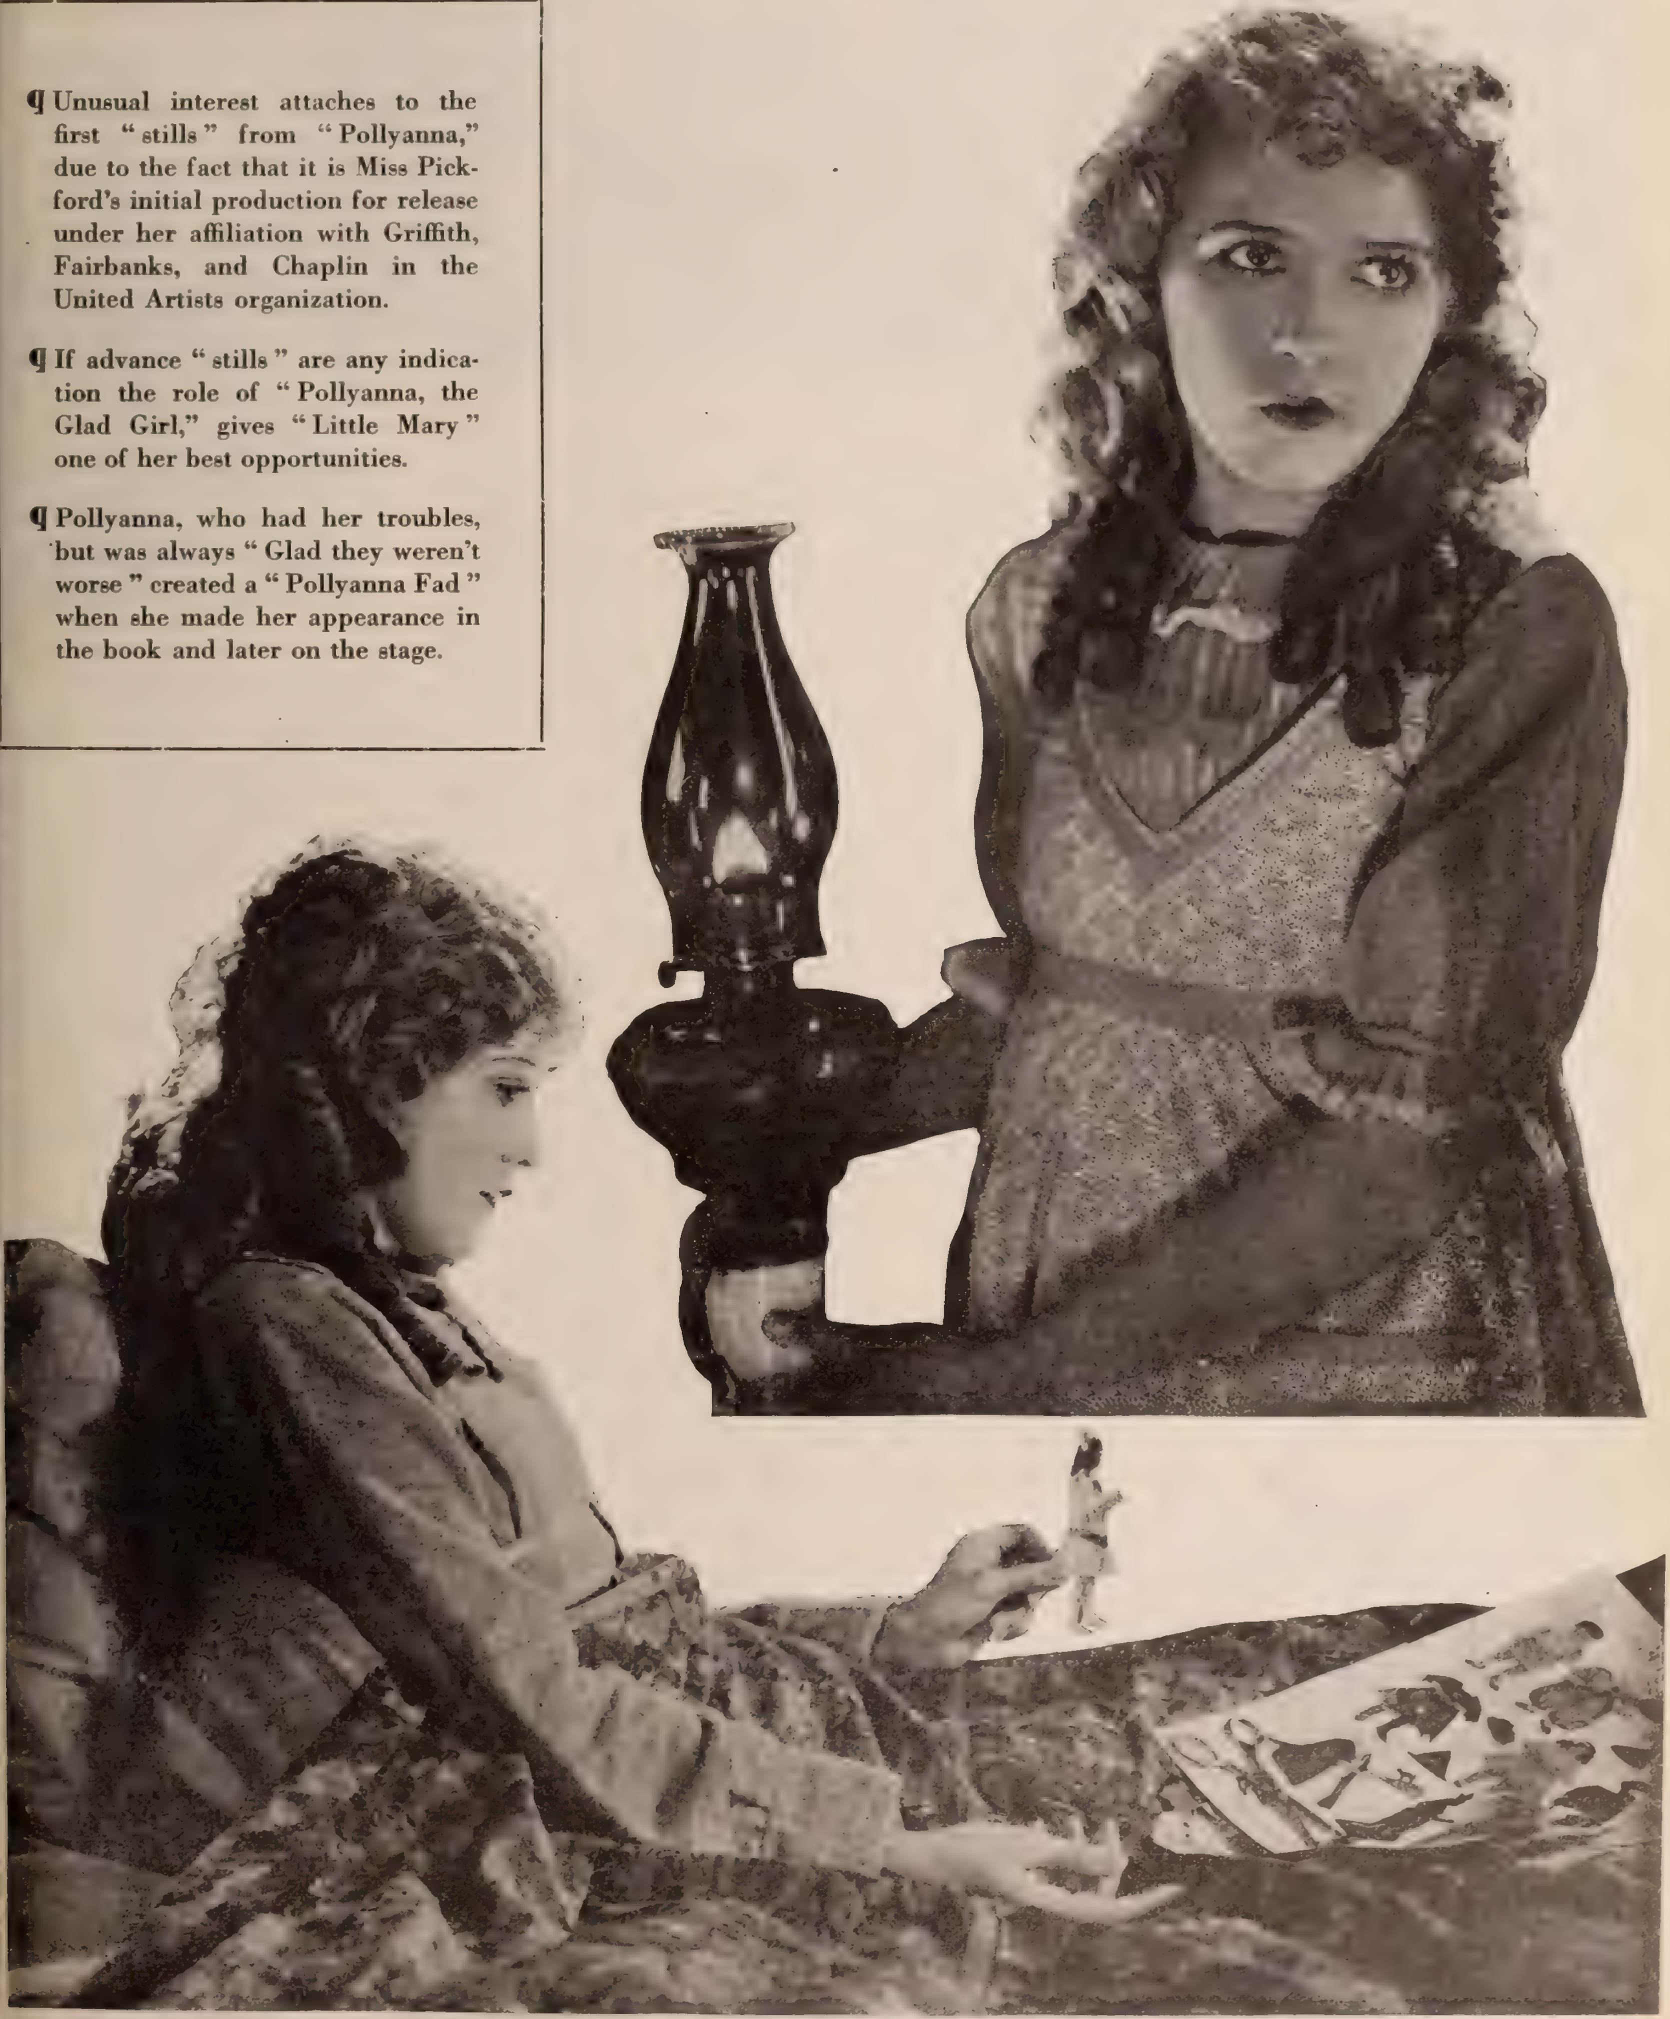
Following the release of "The Eternal Mother," Florence Reed, the United Picture Theatres of America star, will be presented in a modern story, which bears the working title of "The Alibi," written by Florence Dean. Several scenes for "The Alibi" have already been taken, and Miss Reed will begin work in the studio next week to film interiors.

First Scenes Published Showing Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna"

¶ Unusual interest attaches to the first "stills" from "Pollyanna," due to the fact that it is Miss Pickford's initial production for release under her affiliation with Griffith, Fairbanks, and Chaplin in the United Artists organization.

¶ If advance "stills" are any indication the role of "Pollyanna, the Glad Girl," gives "Little Mary" one of her best opportunities.

¶ Pollyanna, who had her troubles, but was always "Glad they weren't worse" created a "Pollyanna Fad" when she made her appearance in the book and later on the stage.



You will get an idea of what Thomas Mott Osborne's "The Gray Brother" is going to be like from this panel of scene stills from the production. Edward McManus, produce of "The Lost Battalion," is filming the story

Special Writer for Fox Star, Gladys Brockwell

From the Pacific Coast comes the announcement that William Fox has placed Barbara La Marr Deely under contract with Fox Film Corporation to write screen vehicles for Gladys Brockwell for the coming year. According to the terms of this contract Mrs. Deely is to equip Miss Brockwell with six original stories, the first one to be started in production at the Hollywood studios in January.

It is further understood in connection with the signing of this contract between the author and William Fox, that this first picture will mark a distinct change in the type of role essayed by the star, yet fitting her peculiar dramatic talents.

The first of the six stories has already been completed by the author. It is now known by the title "The Mother of His Children," and is based on an Oriental theme, furnishing Miss Brockwell with a dramatic role in which she will find suitable outlet for emotional force. This play will go into production shortly, and according to the present understanding, Edward J. LeSaint, who is directing the star in the Charles Reade story, "White Lies," will wield the megaphone for "The Mother of His Children."

Mrs. Deely, who will spend much of her time in Hollywood and vicinity during the term of her contract with the Fox company, is said to have studied the star's strongest points.

Title Given to Dempsey Film

Permanent Name for Pathe Release Is "Daredevil Durant"; Work Progressing

"DAREDEVIL DURANT" has been decided upon as the permanent title for the fifteen episode serial in which Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion of the world, will appear as a Pathe star. The serial, under the working title of "Dead or Alive," is being produced at the Brunton studio at Los Angeles under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton.

As the athletic hero of "Daredevil Durant," the champion is going through as active a daily routine as any that preceded his bout with Willard in Toledo last July.

Among the early scenes in "Daredevil Durant" are a number taken on the football field of the college through which the hero is working his way. Dempsey is the star player of the eleven. As usual, the champion's work on the gridiron was watched by a group of celebrities that follow him about on location. Among them were "Big Bill" Tate, Dempsey's sparring partner during his tour with the Sells-Floto Circus; "Slim" Cole and Ivor McFadden, Spike Robinson, former British lightweight champion, and more recently trainer for Douglas Fairbanks.

This week the Dempsey company is working at Balboa Beach, where a number of dock and water scenes are being made. "Durant" is overpowered by a dozen or more of his enemies and shanghaied. He is taken aboard a ship, but manages to free himself and then proceeds to "clean house" for the entire crew. In previous fights his opponents were surprised to find themselves sound in wind and limb after their battles with the champion, but he explained last week that it took him many days of practicing before he was able to pull his powerful blows sufficiently to keep from knocking everybody out of the set. Now he has mastered the art, and there are no casualties.

"Going Some," Beach Next for Goldwyn

Samuel Goldwyn announces t the next release for Rex Beach w be "Going Some." This is a co edy of the Southwest written by R Beach from the stage success of same name and reproduced before camera under the direction of Ha Beaumont.

Four young women play equally go parts in "Going Some," and th comedians have a regular picnic through the picture. Cullen Lan who won fame for his acting in "T Girl from Outside," plays J. "Sacred Flame" State-Righted

Schlomer-Ross Production Will Score in Independent Market Says Manheimer

WORD has just been received from E. S. Manheimer, general manager Schomer-Ross Productions Ins., that the latest Schomer-Ross Production "The Sacred Flame," starring Emily Stevens, will be State Righted. "We have many inquiries from concerns desiring to purchase "The Sacred Flame" outright, but we have proven to ourselves and State Rights men that "The Sacred Flame" can secure far wider distribution with better returns to State Rights men by the state rights plan," said Mr. Manheimer. "This should prove interesting news to buyers of independent productions of this type as this 6-reel special is from the pen of the gifted author and producer, Abraham S. Schomer, to whom is credited a string of stage and photo dramatic successes of which any producer in the industry may well be proud. Among Mr. Schomer's biggest winners are, "Today," "The Yellow Passport," "The Inner Man," "Ruling Passions," and many others.

"In no picture of recent release, does Miss Stevens do such splendid character work as she does in "The Sacred Flame" as Rosalie the School teacher. Judging from advance reports of this special, the story value and production features are distinctly unusual and promise big box office returns to theatres where intelligent exploitation cooperation is given.

"In this connection," Mr. Manheimer says, "that a complete and decidedly unique exploitation, advertising and publicity campaign book has been prepared containing every conceivable type of exhibitor's help with ready prepared newspaper ads of unusual distinction, publicity stories, press helps, stunt ideas, alluring posters and other accessories.

Associated Exhibitors' Report

Seventeen Franchises Are Already Issued Says Quimby

In a lengthy statement just issued by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., the results of Fred Quimby's extended trip throughout the country are set forth in detail. The Pathe statement, containing Mr. Quimby's report, is submitted in greater part in the following lines:

"The Associated Exhibitors, Inc. is now more than a mere name or an idea; it is an established fact. Thus Director of Exchanges, Fred C. Quimby of Pathe, sums up the results of his extended trip throughout the United States from which he has returned.

"Of the thirty-two franchises, seventeen have been definitely awarded. The calibre of the membership is shown by the mere mention of their names: Lubliner & Trinz of Chicago; Harry Crandall of Washington; Mike Shea of Buffalo; Paul Gustanovic of Cleveland; the Merrill Theatre Company of Milwaukee; Ruben & Finkelstein of Minneapolis; Harding & Coen of Omaha; America Theatre of Denver; Harris & Ackerman of Salt Lake, San Francisco and Los Angeles; Clemmer & Lambach of Spokane and Portland; the Clemmer Theatre of Seattle; Sam Harding of Kansas City; Olsen & Sourbier of Indianapolis; and J. H. Cooper of Oklahoma City.

"'The Association,'" says Mr. Quimby, "'is being formed for the purpose of buying big independent productions, contracting with stars and producers for their productions, etc. in order to fortify franchise holders' theatres with the best class of product and as a protection against possible pernicious combines,' added Mr. Quimby in discussing the new organization. 'The Association will have its general manager and the home office will be in New York. At this office will be conducted the business affairs of the organization. First meeting will be held in January, at which will be elected a president, a board of directors, and a purchasing committee. The purchasing committee will negotiate and contract with producers, stars and independent productions.

"'The Associated Exhibitors is a one hundred per cent. exhibitors' organization, controlled, owned, operated and with a policy fully outlined by its exhibitors. In each territory the franchise holder for that territory will sell franchises for that territory. These franchises will give to their holders exclusive right to show all productions released by the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. This means that eventually there will be eight or ten thousand franchise holders in the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

"'The sole purpose of the Association is to eliminate the middle man by bringing the producer, star, director and independent seller of big States Rights features into direct contact with the exhibitor. And supplementary to this its object is to prevent, fight and overthrow any attempt at monopoly. Domination in this field seems to be the ambition of certain individuals. Such domination would mean that eventually the exhibitor would be compelled to turn over his theatre to the dominating element. It is obvious that with one concern in control of all the stars, producers and a large percentage of the theatres in the United States it would have those outside of the combination absolutely at its mercy.

"The Associated Exhibitors plan is to give the exhibitor, the star, the director or the producer with whom they contract, financial returns, commensurate with the drawing power of their productions. It is well known that often those who have shared the credit for wonderful productions have benefitted but little from the profits. It is the idea of the Associated Exhibitors that if a director, producer or star creates a master production, he or she is entitled to a fair share in the profits of that production. Therefore the launching of the new organization cannot but mean a new day for those responsible for quality productions.

"'Furthermore, under the Associated Exhibitors plan, exhibitors will have real money-making attractions at fair prices, these prices being based on a sane valuation of the negative. It is obvious that as a franchise in the Associated Exhibitors renders the holder independent of pernicious competition, ruinous bidding for big attractions will be eliminated to the benefit of the franchise holder. As rentals will be based upon a fixed and fair percentage basis, the big theatre and the little theatre will each have justice.

"'Where does Pathe come in on the organization? The Associated Exhibitors have selected us to handle the distribution of their product throughout the world, and this selection was made after a careful analysis of the methods of distribution of other concerns. Pathe has more branch offices throughout the United States than any other distributing concern in the business, operating on sound business principles such as obtained in the most successful businesses in other lines and financially powerful. Furthermore Pathe's broad-minded policies and fair dealing with exhibitors have come in for due recognition'."

Realart Releases R. Walsh Films

Contract with Mayflower to Become Effective Early in 1920

Realart is to release R. A. Walsh productions. The deal was concluded with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation last week by Morris Kohn, Realart treasurer. Mr. Walsh is now finishing his last picture for William Fox, it is said, and will enter upon his contract with Mayflower early in 1920. Realart, within a short time, will announce the name of its first R. A. Walsh Production and the probable date of release. The plan, as outlined in an official statement, is to provide the director with successful stories or stage plays and leave him unhampered in working them out.

Mayflower's contract with Mr. Walsh is said to have been signed several weeks ago, and to make provision for production along lines which insure the director complete freedom in his work. It was on this basis, it is pointed out, that "The Miracle Man" was made, and Mayflower believes the plan will result in the production of other exceptional pictures.

Credit for securing the release of Walsh productions is given to Mr. Kohn, who began conducting negotiations with Mayflower almost before the ink was dry on the Walsh signature to the new contract.

"Realart feels," says Mr. Kohn, "that a study of Mr. Walsh's work justifies implicit confidence in him. He is a young man, thoroughly abreast of the times, and yet a veteran in the motion picture business. He combines enthusiasm, imagination and a keen sense of dramatic values with an experience as broad as that of any director in the industry.

"He has just entered upon his career, and yet he has made many notable productions—pictures that give promise of a remarkable and highly profitable future. In no other business would we be likely to discover a person who could be classed at once as an old compaigner and a young man. Motion pictures have been of such rapid development that the pioneer still has to wear a wig when he wishes to appear gray-haired.

"Mr. Walsh is thirty-three, and yet he was with the old Biograph in that very ancient motion picture period when the 'close-up,' the 'dissolve' and the 'cut-back' were unknown. He traveled with the first Griffith caravan across the Continent. He has been part and parcel of the development of the industry—quick to take advantage of every new development and among the foremost contributors to that development. He has run the gamut of production—author, actor, scenario writer and director."

One among the many well-known pictures which Mr. Walsh has made is "The Honor System," released three or four years ago, but still reported to be in demand both here and abroad. "Regeneration" is cited as another of Mr. Walsh's pictures which has been reported as a consistent box-office producer. In a statement issued by Realart, citing a few of the Walsh productions, are included: "Carmen," "Blue Blood and Red" and "Evangeline."

According to Isaac Wolper, Mayflower's president, these, however, afford only a hint of what may be expected from Mr. Walsh in the future. "And there is good reason for making such an assertion," the Mayflower executive explains. "We intend to give Mr. Walsh the opportunity of his life. We will provide him with big stories, worthy of his best endeavor, and will back him to the limit on production. We will not undertake to do his casting, scenario writing or thinking; he is to have a free hand to produce the sort of pictures which his judgment and experience tell him the exhibitors of the country and the public want."

Woolworth Stores Exploit Cody

EVERY Woolworth Five and Ten Cent store in the United States is co-operating in boosting "The Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole Special starring Lew Cody. This announcement was made following a conference with E. Z. Nutting, purchasing agent of the great chain of stores with exploitation experts employed by Robertson-Cole. Following the announcement, Mr. Nutting sent orders broadcast to every Woolworth manager to get in touch wth the various Robertson-Cole exchanges and arrange for a window display.

Officials of the Woolworth chain of stores were said to have been impressed with the song hit "The Beloved Cheater of Mine," written by L. Wolfe Gilbert and Edna Williams and inspired by the Robertson-Cole picture of the same name. Special editions have been printed and Mr. Nutting has assured Robertson-Cole executives that the popular song will be sold in every Woolworth store in the United States within the next ten days.

In addition to an elaborate window display consisting of lobby photographs and advertising specialties sent out on "The Beloved Cheater," Mr. Nutting has promised to have special men sing the song in the crowded stores. Three days prior to the showing of the love spectacle in a place, Woolworth will advertise the song hit in conjunction with the film.

"The Beloved Cheater" to Get Benefit of Song Publicity

Robertson-Cole exploitation men believe that the linking of the great chain of stores for the sale of the song hit and the mutual co-operation with the exhibitor and the Woolworth stores, is one of the biggest publicity stunts of the year.

Gilbert and Friedland, publishers of "That Beloved Cheater of Mine," have arranged with Mr. Nutting to allow the Woolworth stores exclusive selling rights to the song. In return, it will be nationally exploited.

So that the window displays will be as elaborate as possible, Robertson-Cole has sent to its exchanges a bountiful supply of poster material and special photographs of the star, Lew Cody.

Newspaper cuts and scene cuts taken from the twenty-four page campaign booklet will be used in advertising the melody in connection with the showing of the first special for the new year.

"The Beloved Cheater" already has been booked by many of the first run houses in the country and large film circuits are bidding for extended runs of the picture.

"We shall do everything possible to put the song over in keeping with the elaborate way in which Robertson-Cole has booked "The Beloved Cheater," said Mr. Nutting. "Of course, Woolworth will not tackle anything but a distinct hit and when we do accept a melody there is only one way out and that is an avalanche of sales. I have notified every store manager to co-operate to the fullest extent with the various Robertson-Cole branch managers in displaying advertising and publicity aids which will have a twofold purpose. No time will be lost in getting the songs to our stores."

"The Beloved Cheater" is heralded as the best advertised picture of the times. In connection with exploitation, prizes aggregating $500 are being offered for the best love letters sent to Lew Cody. To date more than 3,500 missives have been secured.

Goldwyn States Plans for 1920

"AS a result of carefully laid plans which have matured during the past six months," Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that it "is able to announce definitely what exhibitors will get during 1920. The element of chance is removed from the Goldwyn forecast, as most of the productions for the first half of the year have been completed and many of those to fill out the remaining weeks are underway.

"With the Eminent Authors Pictures, the Rex Beach productions, the contributions of Goldwyn's list of stars, the Booth Tarkington 'Edgar' comedies, and the high-class short subjects distributed by Goldwyn, including the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, the Ford Educational Weekly and the Capitol Comedies, the coming months will offer the biggest opportunity that exhibitors have ever known.

"The Eminent Authors, whose works will form an important part of Goldwyn's 1920 program, are Rupert Hughes, Gouverneur Morris, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Basil King, Gertrude Atherton and Leroy Scott. That the picturized versions of the novels may be in every way true to the original, the authors are spending much of their time at the Culver City studios.

"Rupert Hughes' first contribution is 'The Cup of Fury,' an intensely vivid and dramatic story directed by T. Hayes Hunter. Mr. Hughes went to California to assist in the presentation of his novel. The stirring narrative that proved such a sensation when published serially and in book form, comes through on the screen without loss of power.

"'The Street Called Straight' and 'Earthbound' will be Basil King's initial offerings for the coming season. Production of 'The Street Called Straight' has been finished under the direction of Wallace Worsley. 'Earthbound,' directed by T. Hayes Hunter, is now underway. Two penetrating studies of life in phases, seldom treated in photoplays, are contributed by Mary Roberts Rinehart in 'Dangerous Days' and 'The Amazing Interlude,' the first of the two productions scheduled having been completed recently by William Parke.

Earlier Releases Are Announced; Year Holds Big Opportunities

"Equally significant in their treatment of big themes are the two great novels by Gertrude Atherton, 'The Tower of Ivory' and 'Perch of the Devil.' The first of these unfolds the life story of a girl of the dance halls, who becomes a famous prima donna; the second goes to the western mining country for its scenes and presents a mountain girl as its heroine.

"'Partners of the Night,' recently completed in the East by Paul Scardon, is Leroy Scott's initial photoplay, taken from a novel which the editors of the Metropolitan Magazine pronounced the most successful serial published by them for four years. Included in the cast are Emmett Corrigan, Pinna Nesbit and William B. Davidson. Another story that proved a success when published serially is Gouverneur Morris' 'The Penalty.'

"Mr. Beach has followed 'The Girl from Outside' with another powerful daram of the great out-of-doors. It is called 'The Silver Horde.' 'Going Some,' a comedy, is to follow."

The Goldwyn report announces that its stars "never have had such an attractive list of pictures as that compiled for 1920. Following are given the names of the stars and the pictures which are selected to be their initial vehicles for the year just commencing: Geraldine Farrar, "The Woman,"; Pauline Frederick, "The Loves of Letty"; Mabel Normand, "Pinto"; Madge Kennedy, "The Blooming Angel"; Will Rogers, "Water, Water Everywhere"; and Jack Pickford, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

"The Key to Power" Is Due for Release

E. W. Hammons announces that the five-reel feature production, "The Key to Power," is scheduled for immediate release in the United States and Canada. The trade will recall that the picture was nearly completed when the armistice was signed last November and that the sudden end of hostilities made it necessary to withhold it from the American market until the "war" atmosphere could be eliminated.

Hugh Thompson and Claire Adams are the leading members of the cast and the direction was in charge of WIlliam Parke. The story was written by Mr. Sheldon and Caroline Gentry. It was the first feature picture to be staged in the coal-mining districts of West Virginia, and no expense was spared to make the most of the rugged beauty of the region.

New Year's Eve Shows at Broadway Picture Houses

Hugo Riesenfeld gave a special midnight, New Year's Eve performance at both the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, commencing at 11:20 P. M. Wednesday. The complete bill was presented at both houses, with special music features. Douglas Fairbanks in his latest picture "When the Clouds Roll By," was the feature at the Rivoli. At the Rialto, Charles Ray in "Red Hot Dollars," was shown.

New Laboratory Concern in Philadelphia

The growing demand for an expert film laboratory in Philadelphia capable of coping with every phase of the motion picture industry, has resulted in the formation of a concern under the trade name of the W. S. D. Pictures, with offices at 1305 Arch Street.

"Eyes of Youth" Billed for New Year's Show

Chicago, it is stated by the Equity Pictures Corporation, will celebrate the rrival of the year 1920 by midnight erformances at six of its theatres. Among the attractions staged for this ccasion is "Eyes of Youth," now ooked at the Woodlawn theatre. Its un at the Playhouse theatre and later t the Castle theatre is said to have roved very successful.

Following the engagement at the Woodlawn theatre, "Eyes of Youth" will be seen at the Peoples' theatre and Halfield theatre, and will play all theatres in the Ascher Brothers Circuit, he Trinz & Lubliner theatres, and the Balaban & Katz Circuits, it is stated.

"Topics of the Day" to Be Typed for Blind

Arrangements have been made whereby the weekly programs of The Literary Digest "Topics of the Day" will be printed in raised type in the Matilda Zeigler Magazine for the Blind, which is sent free to thousands of blind readers in all parts of the world.

This circulation of the popular screen paragraphs appearing in "Topics of the Day" follows the discovery that the witticisms had become a regular feature of the daily educaional program at the Red Cross Institute for the Blind at Baltimore.

Christie Girls Disport in Surf on Christmas

Bathing girls and Christmas trees!

The winter tourist in California were reated to another strange sight at Venice Sunday noon, when the entire studio forces of the Christie Film Company frolicked in the ocean and on the sands around a huge Christmas tree, California sunshine and ocean breezes being the substitute for the old-fashioned Eastern Christmas with sleigh bells and flakes of snow.

While the Yuletide season is being celebrated in the East around roaring fires, with Santa Claus doing the honors down an old-fashioned chimney, the film players from the Christie Comedies disport themselves in the surf and receive Christmas presents from the big tree.

Simplex Deal Arouses Interest

Million Dollar Contract with Madame Scheupbach Stirs Equipment World

THE wave of interest aroused in the equipment world by the announcement from the Precision Company that E. M. Porter, general manager of that firm, had signed a million dollar foreign contract, has not died down. Mme. Scheupbach, of the Mundusfi'm Company of Paris was the representative who came to this country to sign the contract with Mr. Porter.

While in other branches of the motion picture industry contracts involving equal sums have been entered into with both parties thereto posing before battle lines of cameras, yet this one by which the Mundusfilm Company contracted to purchase thousands of Simplex was carried through with no blare of trumpets. Instead, the modest and quiet General Manager of the Precision Machine Company considered it merely from the business end and with the young attractive representative from Europe carried on the negotiations without recourse to publicity.

E. M. Porter whose activities in the film world are well-known to the captains of the industry has worked unceasingly for the establishment of an ideal machine distributing system since he came to his present desk over three years ago. He brought to the Simplex Company a wealth of knowledge gained in film field surveys and fresh from a pioneering survey of the South American Market for the Famous Players-Lasky Company, set about to devise a method of distribution of Simplex machines that would enable the distributor to maintain a high grade establishment and also assure the manufacturer of a yearly number of machine sales to justify the constant improving of the machine itself.

Mme. Schuepback of Mundus Film Co., Paris

The sole distributor of the Simplex Projector in Continental Europe for the past several years has been the Mundusfilm Company of Paris while J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., has handled Simplexes in England and in the Scandinavian countries, J. L. Nerlien, Akt., handled the same machine.

Mme. Scheupbach arrived in New York several weeks ago making her headquarters with Sydney Garrett, her American representative, in the Godfrey Building. Mme. Scheupbach brought with her glowing reports of Simplex performance in Europe and was highly optimistic over the future machine business in that section of the world. She took steps at once, therefore, to renew the Simplex contract for Continental Europe.

It can well be said that the Mundusfilm Co., numbers among its officials the biggest film and financial men of France. The president is Edwarde Meunier, the chocolate king of Europe. Charles Scheupbach is general manager and Mme. Scheupbach takes care of all details pertaining to foreign business.

Mme. Scheupbach reports that at the present time the Mundusfilm Company has offices located in six cities in France. The main office is located at 12 Chaussee d'Antin, Paris. Other European offices are located and established as follows: In Italy, at Geneva and Rome; at Amsterdam, Holland, and at Barcelona, Spain.

The various conferences engaged in between Mme. Scheupbach and Mr. Porter finally resulted in the signing up with Simplex for the million dollars worth of equipment for distribution in Europe. Mme. Scheupbach expressed herself as highly gratified with the arrangements made and an active campaign was planned by which trade papers will be used to carry the name of Simplex throughout Europe.

Mme. Scheupbach was banqueted by the leading film men of New York and before sailing a feast was given in her honor by Richard Rowland of Metro. Mme. Scheupbach left for France knowing that the impression she had created here by her business sagacity and knowledge of foreign fields would aid the further exploitation of American products in European countries.

International Cast in Fox Film

Statement Is Issued on Filming of Story by Clemenceau

ACCORDING to a Fox report, recently received, "Internationally famous artists have been selected by Georges Clemenceau to interpret the chief characters in his only photodrama, 'The Strongest,' now being filmed under the direction of R. A. Walsh at one of the Eastern studios of Fox Film Corporation. From this country, from France, from Spain, from the West Indies has the cast of 'The Strongest' been chosen. Carlo Liten, the Sir Henry Irving of Belgium, who is now giving special performances of the works of Maeterlinck and other famous authors in New York, makes his screen debut as the marquis in the Clemenceau picture.

"It is not considered strange by those who know him that Harrison Hunter should have been selected to portray the part of the steel king of France. It will be the first appearance of that well-known actor on the silver sheet, but wherever the spoken drama has been given Harrison Hunter is known. At present he is the outstanding figure of the very successful Broadway drama, 'The Crimson Alibi.' It was because of his great success as leading man for Sarah Bernhardt that Mr. Hunter—who, but for the greatness of the production, would not have left the speaking stage for the screen—consented to appear in 'The Strongest.'

"Direct from the Follies Bergere, the Alhambra and the Casino in Paris comes Renee Adoree, who as the young and attractive heroine of the Clemenceau story will make an auspicious debut on the American screen. Mlle. Adoree is of a distinctive type of beauty for which the Parisian theatres are famous. She has the emotional ability of the French artist, and with this combines the bloom of youthfulness. Her screen career, according to R. A. Walsh, the director, is certain to be most successful.

"Jean de Trigny Gautier and his charming wife—an international union, for Jean Gautier is a Frenchman, born in Rheims, while his charming wife first saw the light of day in Brussels—are cast as the villain and the villainess. Gautier, after serving his country in the infantry, artillery and cavalry for twenty-two months, was thrice wounded and invalided out of the service. He came to the United States, and when this country declared war on Germany he served as aviation instructor in Mineola. He was educated at the Conservatoire de Paris, and made his last appearance in France at the Theatre Athenee in Paris, as leading man in 'I Am True to My Wife.' His wife was the star of the first motion picture actually made in South America. Her work on the French screen for Gaumont and Pathe in France has made her well known in the republic across the ocean.

"For the ingenue role R. A. Walsh has selected Miss Teddy Piper. She is making her screen debut in this picture, but has had a successful career on the stage. C. A. de Lima, a native of the West Indies and of Spanish descent, who appeared in the Theatre Antoine in Paris for more than ten years, has been entrusted with one of the main characters in the story. He is well known in Madrid as well as in the Capital of France, and is no stranger in the United States, where he has appeared in support of several well-known motion picture stars.

"The other characters of the great Clemenceau story have been chosen by R. A. Walsh, the director, and his assistant, James Marcus. The production by Fox Film Corporation will be in keeping with the story."

State Rights Open on Feature

M. Garsson Offers "The Blindness of Youth" with Genuine Alpine Scenery

ACCORDING to reports received inquiries from territorial buyers in all parts of the country are being received daily by Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation, who soon will place at the disposal of state right buyers the first of a series of productions, "The Blindness of Youth." The picture is virtually complete. It is stated that an announcement of the initial trade showing will be made within the next few days.

That independent distributors favor society plays, particularly a story of a modern society life, is said to be indicated by the demand created for "The Blindness of Youth." "This also proves that the form of advertising directed exclusively toward the exhibitor, which Mr. Garsson has inaugurated, is earning the favor of the territorial buyers," announces the report from the Garsson office.

The publicity and advertising work, which is being conducted for the purpose of paving the way for both the state rights buyers and the exhibitor, will be continued throughout the time the various independent buyers are carrying on their sales campaign, it is stated.

A press book, containing advertising and publicity helps for the exhibitor is in the process of manufacture and will be ready for distribution in the very near future. Various other kinds of exploitation aids will be at the call of exhibitors, including post cards, stickers, booklets, unique lobby displays and an excellent assortment of posters of all sizes, it is announced.

The "Blindness of Youth," is a distinct novelty as far as both story and photographic quality is concerned, Mr. Garsson says, and he verifies his statement with an assortment of "stills" that are said to be unusual. It is asserted that all the exteriors were photographed in the heart of the Alps, and all the splendor of the mountains is said to be portrayed faithfully.

The story is based on the love of two men, one an American of the girl's own social standing, the other a romantic youth of the mountains, the son of a hermit, for a young and pretty American society girl, who is spending her summer vacation in the mountains.

"An interesting and thrilling story is based on the adventures of true love and fate fighting the hypnotic powers of a man determined to avenge the death of his son, who had neither the power of will to face life's disappointments nor the power of resistance to resist the magnetic influence of a mysterious magic pool high up in the mountains," concludes the Garsson statement.

"Heads Win" Seen in Chicago

Industrial-Educational Film Shown on Basis of Direct-Payment Plan

WITHIN the last two weeks Chicago has seen "Heads Win," the industrial educational picture made by Harry Levey of the Universal for the International Correspondence Schools and distributed to the exhibitors as a special feature on the basis of the contract recently entered into between the company and the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America. Under this contract, or agreement, the exhibitors who run the picture receive direct payments, through the organization, and the organization itself receives a substantial percentage of the gross percentage.

It is stated that "Heads Win" has been played, or is being played, in almost every important theatre in the Chicago District from the Loop to the Prairie. The patrons of the theatres are said to have voiced their approval, and according to reports many of the theatres are arranging for additional bookings. This six-reel photoplay points a moral for every man, no matter what his station, who feels that he is about to enter the world of failures. Its story is intended to turn him from the rut into the path which leads to success.

According to the Universal report, many other star pictures showing the industrial life and progress of America will be ready for distribution early in the New Year. In every case distribution will be made on the direct payment basis arranged with the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., but the arrangement includes all exhibitors who show the pictures no matter whether they are members or non-members of this organization, Universal states.

JANS PICTURES, INC., announce as their first super-feature, "Love Without Question," in which Olive Tell will be starred under the direction of B. A. Rolfe. "Love Without Question" is a filmization of C. Wadsworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room," which was published by Doubleday, Page & Co. Work on this feature has already begun, Jans Pictures, Inc., having taken over the Peerless studios at Fort Lee, N. J. The supporting cast has been engaged, and the filming of the scenes is going ahead rapidly, it is stated.

It is said that "Love Without Question" will provide Miss Tell with a role that is well suited to her talents. The story is reported to be a romance containing plenty of thrills and suspense. The locale is Long Islan N. Y., and New York City, with man cabaret and handsome estate scene that will make pleasing pictures.

Ivo Dawson has been engaged t play an important role in support o Olive Tell in "Love Without Question." Mr. Dawson recently played prominent part in the Paramount release, "The Miracle of Love," and i said to be a talented and experience young actor.

Jans Pictures, Inc., plan to giv "Love Without Question" an elaborate production. The scenario is b Violet Taggart Clark, while the production will be under the direction o B. A. Rolfe.

"The Inferior Sex" Is Delaye

Wash-Out Damages Negative—"Polly of the Storm Country" Made First Issue

ANNOUNCEMENT has come from the Louis B. Mayer offices that the initial release of "The Inferior Sex," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, has been changed on account of an accident damaging the negative of "The Inferior Sex." The following telegram was received from the Louis B. Mayer Studios in Los Angeles at the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co., New York:

"Unfortunate experience at studio. Heavy winter rain washed out wall of temporary cutting room, badly damaging almost half of Inferior Sex negative, necessitating retakes, therefore cannot release early part of January as planned. First release will be 'Polly of the Storm Country.' Polly is a wonderful picture from every standpoint. Start your advertising accordingly."

It is reported that prior to the accident, "The Inferior Sex," in its completed form, was viewed by Mr. Mayer and all the members of his coast sta in addition to several outsiders considered competent to pass judgmen According to the report, the consens of opinion was that it was a remarkable production and should prove ideal vehicle in which to launch Mr Chaplin under the Louis B. Mey banner.

"Polly of the Storm Country which was intended as the second release of the Mildred Harris Chap series, was completed and in proce of cutting and titling. Mr. Mayer, is said, immediately wired Litt Brown & Co., of Boston, who a publishing the book by Grace Mill White, and finding that it would be sale all over the country the latt part of January, he determined make "Polly" the first release of t Mildred Harris Chaplin series.

"Polly" is being directed by Arth H. Rosson, from the scenario Frank M. Dazey.

Prizma Contest Brings Results

Five Hundred Percent Increase in Business Is the Answer

A FIVE hundred per cent increase in business in sixty days was announced last week by Prizma Incorporated through Republic Distributing Corporation. This jump in bookings, it is made known, has been accomplished by the sales force of Republic, backed by Prizma, Incorporated, who produce nature's own colors on the screen.

As an added incentive to the sales force of Republic, prizes were awarded to various branches securing the highest percentage in bookings. The winners of these were announced this week.

Prizma and Republic were determined to do something to wind up 1919 with a bang and make Leap Year a truly leap year in business as well. So they inaugurated a unique contest for the various branches, which had for its object the building up of Prizma sales. Several thousand dollars in cash prizes were offered, with gold watches as a side inducement. The conditions were as follows:

A reasonable introductory quota was set for each branch office.

All offices reaching their quotas by December 15 were eligible to compete.

All business on the books and still in force on December 15 was credited toward the quota.

All the new business on which an advance deposit was received by December 15 and on which the first paying date was within thirty days thereafter, was credited.

Weekly revenue was credited in full on fifty-two weeks' service contracts or pro rata on shorter contracts, according to the length of contracts.

The contest was divided into four classes and there were three cash prizes or watches for each class. Class A was for the highest percentage business above the quota allotted. Class B for the highest average price per day in branches reaching quotas. Class C for branch managers reaching quota on or before midnight of December 15 and Class D a letter writing contest for salesmen.

J. F. Kimberly, Buffalo, winner of the Tiffany watch given as a prize for increasing Prizma bookings

The object of the letter writing contest was to get views from salesmen as to what constituted the best selling points of Prizma. Despite the fact that World and Republic were in a process of reorganization at the time, the men on the road took time to send in their ideas, which will prove helpful to their colleagues.

With the cards all set, the various managers and their force started in. And they put it over.

The winners of the contest have just been announced. Four Republic managers won Tiffany watches offered by Prizma for reaching their quotas assigned by midnight of December 15. They were J. F. Kimberley, Buffalo; W. B. Priest, Philadelphia; R. E. Flagler, Cincinnati, and C. A. Thompson, Cleveland.

In addition to the watches, $3,000 in cash prizes were awarded to the branches. The Class A prizes, totaling $15,000 were awarded to the three branches having the highest percentage of business above the quota assigned. The first prize of $750 was won by the Buffalo branch; the second prize of $500 was won by Philadelphia and the third prize of $250 went to Cincinnati.

The Class B prizes, totalling $1,500, were awarded to the three branches that secured the highest average per day. The first prize of $750 was won by Cincinnati, the second of $500 by Philadelphia, and the third of $250 by Cleveland.

In the letter writing contest, $100 was distributed. Ralph E. Peckham of Cleveland won the $50 first prize; George E. Jackson, Seattle, the second, $30.00, and H. D. Baumeister, Minneapolis, the third, $20.00.

Two offices won $1,000 each. The Cincinnati office not only won the $750 in Class B for the highest average per day but also carried away the third prize for the third highest average above the quota set. The Philadelphia office won both second prizes of $500 each, totalling $1,000. In recognition of their co-operation with Republic, Prizma also awarded Tiffany watches to the Select managers in Buffalo and Cleveland.

Triangle's Early 1920 Releases

Says Recreated Version of Former Hit Meets Public's Demand

THE Triangle Distributing Corporation has issued a detailed statement announcing the release dates of some of its big recreated features and asserting that the success of the Triangle reissues up to date is due to the fact that its brand of output best meets the widespread demand for better pictures, which is especially prevalent among the first-run houses. The statement is submitted below in full:

"In practically every important city, there are at least four or five first-run houses that must be supplied with a picture at least once each week," says Triangle. "At the present time, the production of features up to the necessary high standard has not kept pace with the growth of first-run theatres. It is this condition, the Triangle statement says, that is responsible for the large number of first-run bookings in the recreated plays. In practically every instance the theatres that played 'The Flame of the Yukon', Triangle's first release under the new plan, have signed up for the entire series. Triangle salesmen have found a strong selling argument in the fact that these pictures have already stood the acid test of the box-office and that, in their new form, they are better today than at the time of their original release.

"Every picture on the next Triangle program was supervised either by D. W. Griffith or Thomas H. Ince. The stars of the pictures already released or announced for release in the near future are Dorothy Dalton, Dorothy Gish, William Desmond, Louise Glaum and Roszika Dolly. A Constance Talmadge production along the lines of her latest plays is in course of preparation and will probably be released in the near future. Work is also under way on the best of the pictures made for Triangle by William S. Hart, Norma Talmadge, Douglas Fairbanks and Frank Keenan. These pictures will be released one every third week beginning early in the spring.

"Triangle's first release for 1920 will be 'The Clodhopper,' Monte M. Katterjohn's masterful story of rural life, featuring Charles Ray. This production, made under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, will be available on Jan. 4th. Triangle's second release for the new year will be 'A Gamble in Souls,' also an Ince production featuring Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond.

"Press books on 'The Clodhopper' and 'A Gamble in Souls,' showing how the exhibitor can readily cash in on these two Triangle productions with practically no expense, have been issued by the Company."

The Triangle statement concludes with the assertion that "the close of the year 1919 has seen Triangle strongly entrenched in the confidence of the exhibitor through its release of 'The Flame of the Yukon' and 'Betty of Greystone,' the Dorothy Gish feature directed by Allan Dwan under the supervision of David W. Griffith. These have proven money makers to many first run houses, and Triangle has set a fast pace for itself for 1920 with 'The Flame of the Yukon' and 'A Gamble in Souls.'"

Clara K. Young Starts on " Soul of Rafael "

Clara Kimball Young, having completed work on "The Forbidden Woman," her second Equity production, which will be released early in January, has started work on her next production "The Soul of Rafael," by the American author, Marah Ellis Ryan. Together with Miss Young, Mrs. Ryan will supervise all costuming and research work connected with the production, according to arrangements entered into between the author, and Harry Garson, producer, it is stated.

Mrs. Ryan is said to be engaged at present in an investigation of the locations in California where the exterior scenes of the picture will be taken.

Tyrad Plans Campaign for Johnny Dooley

The Tyrad Pictures, Inc., are making preparations for the distribution of the Johnny Dooley Comedies, of which they have secured the world's rights. The comedies are two reels in length and will be released each month on the state rights basis, commencing with "Some Mind Reader," scheduled for release January 15, 1920.

"We will release the Johnny Dooley Comedies as specials, for they are specials in every sense of the word," said Matthias Radin, president of the Tyrad Pictures, Inc., in an interview. "An extensive advertising campaign, an attractive lobby display and exhibitors' aids are being arranged."

Doris Kenyon Spends Very Busy Week

Doris Kenyon spent an extremely busy week immediately preceding Christmas. To begin with, there were the inevitable Christmas shopping tours to be taken care of. Next, Miss Kenyon was appearing nightly in the A. H. Wood's play, "The Girl in the Limousine." In addition, she made daily trips to Dutchess County with her director, J. Searle Dawley, to take part in a number of skating scenes which were filmed for the next Deitrich-Beck production, "The Harvest Moon."

Vitagraph Film No Sex Story

" The Sins of the Mothers " Has to Do with Gambling—Its Origin and Effect

VITAGRAPH makes the following announcement about its picture, "The Sins of the Mothers":

"Although the title of the Anita Stewart feature, 'The Sins of the Mothers,' which is being released by Vitagraph, would suggest a sex play, such an element does not enter into the story. There is no 'triangle,' no erring women so far as her morals are concerned. There is nothing in the picture which the youngest child allowed in a picture house should not see and which she could not understand. On the contrary, the picture should be welcomed by mothers as an object lesson to their daughters, and they can well take the moral home to themselves.

"'The Sins of the Mothers' deals with the evils of gambling, particularly as it relates to the initial step of cards for money at home and social gatherings. Beginning as a harmless amusement, the habit grows until it reaches out to roulette, horse betting and other get-rich-quick forms of diversion and becomes a vice. And it is the danger of this vice being inherited by the children of the victim that forms the basis of Miss Stewart's next feature and provides it with its name.

"As Trixie Graham, the daughter of a mother who had become such a slave to her passion for gambling that the husband and father killed himself, Miss Stewart has a powerful role."

The play was edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester and directed by Ralph Ince. Vitagraph has staged the picture in a lavish manner, it is said. Lucille Lee Stewart, sister of Anita Stewart, is also in the cast.

"Other Men's Shoes" to Have a Strong Cast

In "Other Men's Shoes," the first of the series of photoplays produced by Edgar Lewis for Pathe, will be seen "one of the strongest casts ever assembled for a motion picture," claims the Pathe Exchange. Crauford Kent will play a dual role. His leading woman is announced as Irene Boyle. Harold Forshay and Bobby Connelly are also cast for important parts. Others in the large cast are: Edna May Spurl, Phil Sanford, Jean Armour, Stephen Radmun and Jack Shankey. Besides there is more than 1,000 extras were employed for the filming, it is stated.

"Soldiers of Fortune" Is Still Scoring

Opening at the Bijou theatre, Fall River, Mass., to "the biggest receipts the house has ever known," according to the telegram of L. M. Boas, manager, "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, continued to pile up gratifying reports of its box-office activities last week, it is said.

The Realart feature is also reported to have set up a new house record at the Cabrillo theatre, San Diego, Cal., where, according to the confirming letter of R. E. Hicks, proprietor, the week's receipts put "Soldiers of Fortune" in the first place for normal times.

Warner Brothers Sell Serial for Canada

Word comes from the Warner Brother's office, where the distribution rights of Selig's big animal serial, "The Lost City" are for sale, that Charles L. Stephenson, of Toronto, Canada, bought the Canadian distribution rights. What is claimed to be a record price is said to have been paid for this territory.

Mr. Stephenson is one of Canada's pioneer picture men, and has acquired a reputation of putting things over in a big way. He formed the exhibitors Distribution Corporation, which is similar to the First National Exhibitors Circuit of this country.

"The Corsican Brothers" Scores

Critics Render Verdict of Favorable Tone on Elaborate Feature

ELATED over the favorable reports said to have been written by the various reviewers in connection with its feature, "The Corsican Brothers," the United Picture Theatres of America have issued a statement in which are summarized the verdicts of the critics on this new production. The statement is reproduced below in full:

"The motion picture critics were very complimentary in their opinions on 'The Corsican Brothers,' the United Picture Theatres of America feature in which Dustin Farnum plays the famous dual role of the twin brothers.

"The six-reel feature was shown for review last week and met with the undivided approval of all the reviewers. As one reviewer puts it: 'It is indeed a pleasure to see a company with the welfare of motion pictures so much at heart that they are willing to spend a fortune to film a masterpiece like 'The Corsican Brothers.' I cannot commend it too highly.' That is what the critic of one of the largest circulating popular magazines said after she had seen the Dustin Farnum feature.

"In the Exhibitor's Trade Review, Miss Helen Rockwell has this to say about United's latest photodrama: 'A praiseworthy photoplay has been made from Alexander Duma's well known novel. It was produced with infinite care and a special regard to detail. The settings are unusually attractive and quaint. It is an intelligent and satisfying production which will please theatre-goers. The acting leaves nothing to be desired. Dustin Farnum is splendid as the two brothers. The photography is excellent giving the final artistic touch to a well balanced production.'

"In the Motion Picture News, Laurence Reid writes as follows: 'Famous story and play makes a screen success. Alexander Duma's stirring story of Corsican love and vengeance, which served as dramatic fare for Robert Mantell upon the Speaking stage for many years, has found its way to the screen. 'The Corsican Brothers' contains enough ingredients to while away an interesting hour for any exhibitor's audience. It is not a misstatement when we declare it is one of the few costume plays that have proved worth while presenting. And the reason may be found in its assortment of dramatic elements, which embellish a vivid and vital story. It does not have to rely upon its atmosphere—rich as that factor is—nor upon the value of the author's name. Director Campbell has seemingly caught the proper perspective throughout. The double exposure work is commendable.'

"Peter Milne, one of filmdom's best known critics, has this to say in Wid's Daily: 'This is a carefully made and elaborate production of Alexander Duma's famous work and because of the peculiarity of the story and the picturesque costumes (which, however, don't put the curse of a costume drama on the production) it should appeal to many. * * * * As regards atmosphere of settings and costumes the director has in these respects scored excellently. The big exterior street scenes, the pretty garden shots and the interiors are all lavish and maintain a fine illusion. This should draw well, if handled properly. There are plenty of spectacular scenes to feature, such as the masque ball, the banquet scene and the two duels.'"

Pathe Prize Winners Announced

Branch Managers at Milwaukee, Buffalo and Indianapolis Win

IN a competition among Branch Managers which is reported to have brought the business of Pathe in every department to the highest totals ever recorded in its history, the following winners of the three big prizes offered during "Quimby Tribute Month," were announced this week by Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe:

W. A. Aschmann, Milwaukee, winner of first prize, a $1,000.00 platinum diamond ring, which under the conditions of the contest, went to "the wife of the Manager who secured during November the greatest amount of new business in proportion to the rating of his office, and the greatest increase in collections over the average collections for his office for the months of July, August and September."

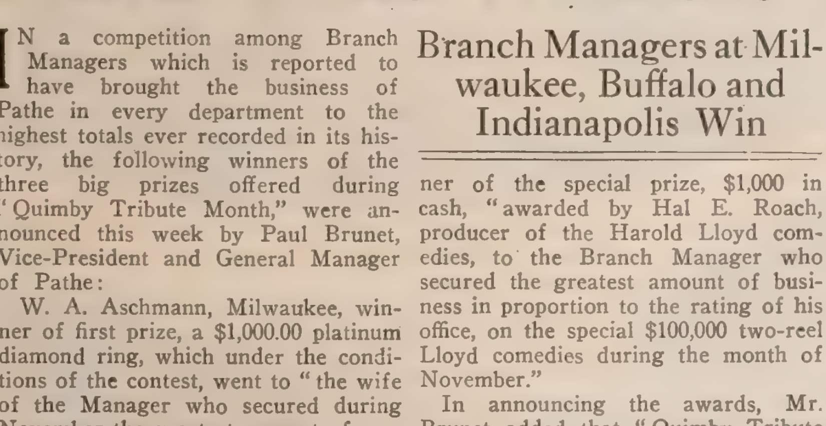
C. A. Taylor, of Buffalo, winner of second prize, a $500.00 platinum diamond ring "awarded the wife of the Manager whose showing was second best to the winner of the first prize."

R. S. Shrader, of Indianapolis, winner of the special prize, $1,000 in cash, "awarded by Hal E. Roach, producer of the Harold Lloyd comedies, to the Branch Manager who secured the greatest amount of business in proportion to the rating of his office, on the special $100,000 two-reel Lloyd comedies during the month of November."

In announcing the awards, Mr. Brunet added that "Quimby Tribute Month" was a success beyond comprehension. The November collections were by far the greatest in the history of Pathe, it is said, and they topped a figure the organization had long been striving to attain. Thirty-two Branch Managers participated in the competition and there was not a single office which did not surpass its best previous month, according to reports.

The prizes reached the winners in time to make Christmas Day brighter in their household than it might have been except for "Quimby Tribute Month." Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges of Pathe, in honor of whose second anniversary the tribute month was arranged, joined Mr. Brunet in sending his compliments to each of the winners.

Manager Shrader of Indianapolis went so far over his quota on the new Lloyd special $100,000 comedies, that he outstripped his field, it is said. His first big booking was from S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theatre, indianapolis. When "Bumping into Broadway" started a riot of laughter at the Circle, Mr. Shrader's task was made comparatively easy, for every exhibitor in his territory is reported to have eagerly sought bookings on the first series of six Lloyds.



Here are some Pathe prize winners in the Harold Lloyd big business contest recently closed. The man with the smile is M. A. Ashman, manager of the Milwaukee exchange. Centre is R. S. Shrader, manager of the Indianapolis office, and right is C. A. (Buck) Taylor, of Buffalo. Mr. Shrader won a thousand in cold cash, while Ashman and Taylor each got a platinum ring

Actors and actresses have taken chances before—occasionally, the cameraman—almost never, the director. But in filming "THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY" the four people shown here deliberately accepted the greatest risks that players in pictures have ever taken since the gorgeous game began.

"Breathless" is the only word. One thrill—one only—but that one lasts from beginning to end! It begins with the U. S. Mailman's first hop into the air—mounts higher when the pirates soar—grows agonizing with the brave Sheriff's terrific parachute jump—drives you frantic when Locklear, only fifty feet from you, grabs the frail rope, leaps from his plane and sweeps on at a hundred miles an hour, a daredevil kicking against the mighty vault of the sky.

See it and marvel at this man's ice-cold nerve. See it and be glad you're safe on earth. Book it and thank your stars you read this advertisement!

Universal Jewel

BETWEEN a Lyons-Moran Star Comedy and the common or garden farce there's just the same tremendous difference as between dress clothes and a suit of overalls—or vintage wine and a keg of 2.75—or between real fun and mechanical idiocies.

WITH that difference in mind, exhibitors have found, too, that Lyons-Moran Comedies are always clean—and that they attract a class of patronage that every shrewd showman wants more of every day. Book any one of them—all of them—they're all up-to-the-minute—all perfectly dressed. Start now with "SWEET PATOOTIE."

First-Run Call on Third of Lloyd's Series Grows

Coincident with the announcement that "From Hand to Mouth," third of Harold Lloyd's series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, will play the Strand and Rivoli theatres in New York the week of January 4, comes a statement from Pathe that first-run bookings on the comedies are still on the increase. Jensen and Von Herberg's Liberty theatre in Portland had been added to the Lloyd first-run list.

Gladys Leslie Plays in New Emotional Role

Gladys Leslie has an emotional role in "The Midnight Bride," her final Vitagraph feature, which will be an early January release. It was during the middle of last summer that Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, decided that Miss Leslie had displayed a decided ability for serious roles, and that she should no longer devote her talents entirely to the lighter comedy roles.

Miss Leslie has the assistance of a good supporting company, which includes James Morrison, Gladden James, Nellie Spaulding, Roy Applegate, Denton Vane and Virginia Valli. William J. Humphrey directed the picture.

Print of Hough Story Arrives East

The Emerson Hough story, "The Sagebrusher," which has been put into film form by Benjamin B. Hampton, has reached the East, and the Hodkinson offices report it shows evidences of the months of pains given it in production.

Roy Stewart, Marguerite De La Motte and Noah Beery have leading roles.

Progress on New Fox Star's First Film

Rapid progress is being made on the screen production of "Her Elephant Man", in which William Fox will present Miss Shirley Mason for the first time as a star under his direction. Scott Dunlap, who is directing the picture, is said to be giving it a fine circus atmosphere and moulding a story of charm and distinction.

Strong Cast in "Whirlwind"

Allgood Serial has Two Daring Leads and Strong Support Cast Says Author

JOSEPH A. GOLDEN, author and producer of the latest Allgood Serial, "The Whirlwind," also author and producer of "The Great Gamble," announces one of the strongest cast of players for a serial he believes ever assembled. "I picked my players with three points in mind. First, for their ability to faithfully portray the story; second, for their fearlessness and daring in the performance of stunts and exploits, and lastly for their knowledge of what the public tastes are in chapter photoplays," he says.

"That I have been fortunate in securing that peculiar type of talent for 'The Whirlwind' can be plainly seen on the screen, the only place that exhibitors are interested in.

"In Charles Hutchison, we are giving the public not alone a popular and widely known star, but a player whose recklessness and daring has never yet been equalled by any serial star in the industry.

"Hutchison scorns a double, doing every hazardous stunt himself, taking risks that no star would even dream of taking.

"In scenes where he risked his life, such as crawling under a rapidly moving train, jumping off a cliff at Ausable Chasm, crawling up the side of a building precisely as the celebrated human fly performs, Hutchison has injected super-thrills into 'The Whirlwind' that makes this serial a super-thriller.

"In scores of scenes where absolute fearlessness was demanded, Hutchison has gone through the action with as much suavity as if he were eating his evening dinner. Likewise beautiful Edith Thornton, playing opposite Hutchison, runs through the thrill scenes as if the dangerous feats were nothing more than child's play.

"Every member of the cast has done his work in such a manner that would make any serial director feel as though he had chosen the star cast of all time. With such a cast plus a powerful story, 'The Whirlwind' brings to the screens of the world something bigger in serials than what has gone before. State rights are now being allotted for the United States through the Allgood Pictures Corporation, 815 Longacre Bldg., while the foreign territorial rights are being handled by Mr. E. S. Manheimer, 126 West 46th Street."

Moore Books Glaum's Picture

Washington Exhibitor Takes on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" for Two Weeks

TOM MOORE, the Washington exhibitor and First National franchise-holder, has booked for a two weeks' showing at his Washington Strand Theatre J. Parker Read Jr.'s second Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" by Louis Joseph Vance. Mr. Moore in closing his contract with the Hodkinson organization, the distributors, also announced his intention of holding open a third week at his Garden Theatre to give this production twenty-one consecutive days' presentation in the national capital.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" opens its Washington engagement on January 4, and Mr. Moore it is reported, cleared out other bookings to be the first eastern exhibitor to offer "The Lone Wolf's Daughter".

The heaviest bookings ever given a picture in the first three weeks of its sale in the Chicago territory is stated to have been given to this second of a group of productions, starring Louise Glaum under the auspices of J. Parker Read Jr. Every key city was booked in Illinois within ten days after the receipt of the prints by the Chicago office it is reported, and only one other picture in the past year has rivalled it for prices paid by exhibitors or for the number of days per contract, according to W. W. Hodkinson.

Expect Much of Carey Film

Universal Predicts that Harry Carey Will Surpass All His Previous Hits

UNIVERSAL announces that "Marked Men" shows Harry Carey in a leading role which will afford the admirers of the Universal star their fill of thrills. Jack Ford, who directed the production, also comes in for a round of praise, for his accredited success in the producing of this feature. Universal further points out that critics who have reviewed this picture have pronounced it as Mr. Carey's best effort and one which is due to put his work into the leading houses of the country.

In the picture Harry Carey appears as an outlaw who achieves freedom and happiness through a three-day-old baby. He is supported by a good cast, including, Winifred Westover, J. Farrell McDonald, Joe Harris, Ted Brook and Charles LeMoyne The night photography is said to add to the effectiveness of the big picture. The streets of the mining town, the exterior of the dance hall, the outer walls of the grim prison and the moonlit desert are offered as excellent examples of the newest developments in the cameraman's art.

Fox's Paris Agent Puts Over Quick Work

The Fox Film Corporation gives its Paris representative credit for a good bit of news enterprise. He took motion pictures of the American peace delegates leaving France, and dispatched his film on the same ship on which the delegates sailed. The peace commissioners, Frank L. Polk, Assistant Secretary of State; General Tasker H. Bliss and Henry White, formerly Ambassador to France, left Paris on December 10, and sailed from Brest on the transport America the following day.

In its release No. 23, shown December 24, Fox News gave not only views of the departure of the diplomats, but also pictures of their arrival in New York on December 20.

Universal News Reel has Interesting Scenes

In Universal Current Events news reel No. 52, several views of the newly arrived polar bears are shown, in their "apartment" at the New York Zoo. Slipping to the faraway Philippines, the camera man then shows us how Manila and its environs looked when heavy floods recently imperilled the lives of many of its inhabitants. Maurice Maeterlinck, the famous Belgian poet and Mme. Maeterlinck are seen arriving on the S.S. LaFrance. Admiral Sims also submits to be caught on the same film.

Tobogganing pictures at Bear Lake, California, show that the northern states are not the only ones to enjoy winter sports. The desperate measures employed to free the grounded steamer North Wind at Martha's Vinyard, Mass., are vividly portrayed.

Metro Reports All-Star Cast for "The Hope"

Jack Mulhall, Marguerite de la Motte, and Ruth Stonehouse have been engaged for principal roles in "The Hope," the melodrama of England, India and Italy that is to be made a Metro-Screen Classic production. With Frank Elliott, last week chosen to play the "heavy," these talented screen players will head what is reported to be an all-star cast that will picturize Cecil Raleigh's and Henry Hamilton's Drury Lane production.

"The Return of Zahzi" for Madge Kennedy

Lawrence McCloskey is announced as the latest contributor to the list of coming productions to be made and distributed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. It was announced this week that Mr. McCloskey's "The Return of Zahzi," an original story, has been purchased by Goldwyn and will be used as a starring vehicle for Madge Kennedy, who has just completed "The Blooming Angel" at the Culver City Studios. Within the next week the script will be turned over to a continuity writer.

The locale of the story is New York of the present day, and while the predominant tone is farce-comedy, there are touches of serious feeling in the presentation of the character to be interpreted by Miss Kennedy. "The Return of Zahzi" has won the emphatic endorsement of everyone in the Goldwyn organization who has seen the script, according to reports. Miss Kennedy wired her approval from the Coast before the contract was closed, it is stated.

"Captain Courageous" Has Storm at Sea

Universal announces that "Captain Courageous" is the temporary title given the screen version of "The Beach Comber," a story by J. G. Hawks. It is directed by Rex Ingram, and stars Elmo Lincoln.

One scene called for a storm at sea. A three-masted schooner was chartered and put to sea, and, after three weeks, it is said, a tempest was encountered with the result that "Captain Courageous" is reported to have some thrilling scenes of the "heavy seas" variety.

Elmo Lincoln support includes Mabel Ballin, Harry Van Meter, Frank Brownlee, Paul Weigel, Dick La Reno and Ethelyn Irving.

Frank Lloyd to Direct Pauline Frederick

Under the direction of Frank Lloyd, Pauline Frederick will begin work this week on her next Goldwyn picture, "Roads of Destiny," based on the stage success written by Channing Pollock from the story by O. Henry. The cast includes John Bowers, Richard Tucker, Grace Darmond, Hardee Kirkland, Maude George and Willard Louis.

Selznick's Advertising Volume

Five Page Display in Saturday Evening Post Is Cited

IN a statement recently issued, Lewis J. Selznick declares his belief in the practical value of advertising and points to the extensive advertising carried on by the Selznick organization in a number of leading periodicals as the concrete expression of his opinions on that subject. The Selznick report calls special attention to the advertising done in the December 27th issue of the Saturday Evening Post, in which five pages are devoted to the exploitation of a Selznick production and the organization's stars. The most salient points of the Selznick report are given in the following:

"Page 91, the first of the five pages was devoted to Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien, Elsie Janis, Owen Moore and Elaine Hammerstein, Selznick's five popular stars. And the ad. said, 'These Are Your Stars—not Ours.' The 'your' referred to the public, and to the exhibitor. The exhibitor books a picture, starring one of these five persons; advertises it; exploits it; and sells the admission tickets to the public. The public comes and demands more such pictures. Therefore, they are the stars of the public and the exhibitor. No producer can make a star but the public can.

"Perhaps the most remarkable part of this remarkable advertising is that four pages of the total of five are devoted to advertising a one-reel feature of the Selznick productions. This is the 'Herbert Kaufman's Weekly.' This new feature brings to the screen and to the public, in picture form, the work of the world's greatest editorial writer. It is a big step toward the classic in pictures. Four complete pages to advertise this new release. Written in a clean-cut convincing style, this ad. will reach twice the number of subscribers of the popular weekly, and it is a known fact its circulation is the greatest of any weekly publication.

Betty Hilburn, appearing in the first Herbert Kaufman weekly released by L. J. Selznick

"Attention is called to the fact that this immense ad. was run prior to the release of the first of this series and thereby paves the way to a demand by the public. The 'Herbert Kaufman's Weekly' will not be unfamiliar to the public, when it is given its initial release. Meanwhile the public interest will have been aroused and the exhibitor obtaining the first release of this series will have given to his patrons a real service.

"The policy of national advertising in such periodicals as the Saturday Evening Post, Pictorial Review, The Ladies Home Journal, The Country Gentleman, the Red Book and Motion Picture Magazines, is only one of the many steps the head of the Selznick Enterprises is taking to co-operate with the exhibitor. Whether in New York or Oshkosh, the advertising of Selznick productions and Selznick stars, brings old and new patrons to the box office of the exhibitor."

Lewis J. Selznick further declares that the more you advertise a star, the more the public will want to see that star, provided the actor or actress has ability and is given the opportunity to demonstrate his or her talents in the course of a well-constructed and interesting story. Selznick believes the stars and stories offered by the organization have the necessary qualifications; and hence the next step, to back up its products by vigorous advertising, is entered upon with all possible energy and efficiency to attract the public and bring the exhibitor increasing receipts, concludes the report.

Karger Tells of Metro's Policy

New Year Will See Fulfilling of Fewer and Better Pictures

IN a lengthy statement just issued, Maxwell Karger, Director-General of the Metro Pictures, discusses Metro's policies for fewer and better pictures during the coming year, and declares that such a policy faithfully carried out must certainly lead to a higher standard of production, a more cultivated type of audience and eventually to greater receipts for the coffers of the exhibitor. The statement is herewith reproduced in full:

"Within the past two years there has probably been no greater progress in any sphere of industrial or artistic activity than that of the motion picture public. The progress shown has been educational—a steady upward trend toward a higher standard of artistic appreciation. This fact in itself is of vital importance to the business of motion pictures, inasmuch as no industry, no profession, and certainly no art can rise higher than the mental calibre of those who support it.

"This progress, so evident to the men in touch with the economic phase of the industry, means just one significant thing; and that is that a new clientele has been attracted to the theatres. The audiences that formerly were contented to sit through endless reels of mediocre trash, are now vastly augmented by a more exacting body of spectators, who demand that the pictures which they view shall be faithful, and not false, pictures of life as it actually exists.

"But the pictures, however, are the cause rather than the effect of this condition. In other words, the audiences commenced getting better when pictures got better, for the latter proved to be the guide leading the way to an improved condition of things. Toward this end a decided improvement in stories was registered, stories that were presented more humanly, and to achieve this it was finally recognized that only through the co-operation of producers, stars, writers and directors could any real and lasting success be obtained.

"Metro has proceeded upon the basis that this analysis of the present condition of things is correct. And to attain results that would meet with the changed standards of screen requirements as they exist today, Metro has pursued but one course of action. That course is its policy of fewer and better pictures.

"Metro knows that it is utterly impossible for any firm to produce annually a hundred pictures of real box-office value, or a hundred pictures a year of even average merit. It goes without saying that in any hundred productions probably not fewer than forty will be below par—be it story par, direction par, acting par, or, worst of all, entertainment par. Therefore, Metro has committed itself to making fewer pictures and making them the best.

"This is Metro's solution of how to retain for the exhibitor his old clientele, and incidentally, to attract new patronage to the motion picture theatre. The problem of the exhibitor has always been the problem of Metro, and it is in solving this mutual problem that Metro has gone to such great lengths in studying the picture business from the exhibitor's angle.

"Metro believes that the exhibitor can hold old and bring new patrons to his house only when, and if, he has stories of good advertising value to talk about; also, when those stories are humanly and entertainingly produced; and when the exhibitor can present those productions under conditions which give him not only a decent profit for himself in money, but, what is just as important, in the accrued good-will of his public, which he can alone secure by proving himself a faithful and dependable showman."

Winter Garden Girls in Film Cabaret Scene

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that Harley Knoles has used a number from the Winter Garden to advantage in a cabaret scene of "The Cost," Violet Heming's newest picture for Famous Players-Lasky.

Pathe Releases "Fighting Cressy" January 11

Pathe announces the Jesse D. Hampton production "Fighting Cressy," starring Blanche Sweet, as its principal release on January 11. Robert Thornby, who directed the production, has selected the following to support the star: Pell Trenton, Russell Simpson, Antrim Short, Edward Peil, and Walter Perry. Others prominent in the large cast are Billie Bennett, Eunice Moore, and Georgie Stone, the child-actor.

For exploitation aids for the exhibitor's benefit Pathe issues the following advertising material: two styles three-sheet; six-sheet; twenty-four sheet; set of colored lobby photos; 1 col., 2 col., and three col. line ad cuts and mats; 22x28 colored scene from play; 22x28 star portrait; one and two col. newspaper cuts and mats; set of black and white star and scenes; two col. scene newspaper cut; especial two color window cards, and campaign book.

Ernest Shipman's Son Not Forgotten

Ernest Shipman is in receipt of a wire from Santa Monica, Cal., reading as follows:

"Am sending a roll of your kiddie and his schoolmates as a New Year's gift with a Scotchman's compliments. (Signed) Stuart Paton."

The kiddie referred to is Ernest and Nell Shipman's son Barry who, though but seven years of age, is the sergeant of the drill brigade at the Westlake Military Academy, Santa Monica.

"Ernie" Shipman is the recipient of many gifts this Yuletide season. His "Back to God's Country" after covering over $200,000 of its prescribed $600,000 journey under First National auspices, opens its New York engagement at the Capitol Theater, New Year's week, and has besides one hundred prints working to capacity audiences in all parts of the country.

The Dominion Film Company, Inc, has elected him on its board of directors, and he will act in an advisory capacity in connection with new productions to be undertaken by that company.

The Curwood-Carver productions are busy on the second Curwood production, entitled "The Yellowback."

Ever Hear of Greybull?

C. A. Stimson, general sales manager of the American Film Company, Inc., who is engineering a unique booking campaign on the "Flying A Specials," was brought to a halt in the midst of strenuous business by a demand from E. P. Briggs, that Greybull, Wyoming, be marked for the next sales conference. Greybull looked good to Briggs. Enclosing a photo of a gay exhibitors' banquet at "the" hotel of the town he gives the strong points in favor of his choice: "Greybull is one of the wild and woolly towns in Wyoming with the real Western atmosphere, where the boys wear high-heeled boots, and broad-brimmed hats. Crap games are numerous with these native six feet fours. The food is great, and we have plenty of elk and venison."

Paul Brunet Goes to Coast

His Mission Is Not Explained; Pathe Producing Forces Are Hard at Work

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left Saturday night for Los Angeles, on a mission which, it is said will have an important bearing on Pathe's future activities. For some days it has been rumored that Mr. Brunet would make the trip, but until now no definite confirmation of the report was forthcoming from Pathe. Mr. Brunet had no statement to issue before leaving.

At this time the activities of producing organizations affiliated with Pathe are reported to be at their height in California. Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, is in the midst of making a serial which, from all reports, will be a smashing success. Word from California indicates that Dempsey has readily adapted himself to his studio career, and is making a success as an actor.

Frank Keenan is working on his own productions, the latest of which is temporarily titled, "Enter—A Vagabond." Ruth Roland, heading her own serial producing company, is completing "The Adventures of Ruth," considered one of the biggest continued story films ever issued by Pathe.

According to a Pathe report, it is probable that Mr. Brunet's trip will be partly devoted to the interests of the recently launched Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the organization of which is now virtually complete.

"The Boys" to Make Comedy Dramas

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, familiarly known in the west coast film colony as "the boys", have returned from New York with a new contract with Universal which provides they shall, in the future, make five reel comedy dramas instead of short comedies. Other details of the contract have not been made known, but it is understood a big series are to be made by these popular comedians.

Lyons and Moran have been with the Universal longer than any of this big company's present professional people, and during all of that period have played together continuously. Their first engagement was in 1913, and since that date they have appeared continuously in Universal released films. For the past two years they have been independent producers, filming comedies at Universal City which were sold to Universal for release.

"Flying A" Has Ad Aids for the Exhibitor

"Flying A" press sheets are reported to offer the local exhibitor "a big choice of advertising, all prepared for easy consumption." Even the mats are ready on order. In connection with "Eve in Exile," the exhibitor may select a "165 on 3," picturing Eve shrinking into the covering shade of a primeval forest, or he may prefer an "80 on 4," which adapted that clever cartoon, "The First Monday," which appeared in Life some years ago.

The local Pathe Exchanges, distributors for the American Film Company, Inc., handle these matrices, as well as line cuts or zinc etchings, which are specially adapted for use in the newspapers.

Arthur Kane is Feted on West Coast

Arthur S. Kane former President of Realart Pictures Corporation who is spending a short time in Los Angeles while on a tour of the country investigating conditions, has been a guest of honor at two dinners given in the past week. The first of these was by Harry H. Hicks, manager of the local Vitagraph exchange which was given to a number of local film exchange men who had formerly been identified with companies under the management of Mr. Kane. The second dinner was that given by Orin F. Woody, manager of Los Angeles Realart Exchange, where guests numbered more than thirty. At this dinner were theatre owners and managers, film exchange managers, representatives of motion picture periodicals and members of the Realart exchange staff, Miss Mary Miles Minter, star, her director, William D. Taylor, mother, Mrs. Margaret Selby and sister. Mayor Meredith E. Snyder and wife, of Los Angeles, were particular guests at the Woody dinner.

Edmund Breeze in a character pose in the Transatlantic production "The Empty Triumph"

Player of Tarkington's Boy Role Described

Judging from the number of letters received at the Goldwyn offices from exhibitors, who want to know what sort of a boy Booth Tarkington has created for his two-reel Edgar Comedies, now in production at the Culver City Studios, this screen character is destined to become a figure of some renown. A fair idea of Edgar may be gained from a detailed description of Johnny Jones, the youth selected by E. Mason Hopper from over two hundred applicants, it is said, to fill the role.

Johnny is the son of Edward J. Piel, an actor, and Etta Raynor, an actress. He was born November 18, 1908, in Beloit, Wis., and at the present time, with a height of 4 feet 10 inches, tips the scales at 79 pounds. His hair is brown and his eyes blue.

Metro Actress Badly Hurt in Accident

Marguerite de la Motte, now playing lead for Metro in the Drury Lane Melodrama "The Hope", was dangerously, if not fatally, injured late Tuesday, December 23rd, when an automobile in which she was riding to the Metro studios was struck by a Pacific Electric traction car at the Cahuenga street intersection of Santa Monica Boulevard The traction car was coming at thirty miles an hour when Miss de la Motte's father drove onto the tracks, not seeing the approaching car. At the present writing it is feared the actress is internally injured in addition to having a number of cuts and bruises, the most serious of which is on her left side. The father and mother, who were in the car, were also injured but not seriously.

Colored Photography in Goldwyn Pictograph

It is announced that colored photography will be introduced for the first time in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph in issue No. 7021, to be distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges, January 18. A considerable part of the leading subject, "Behind the Signs on Broadway," is done in colors, the remainder being in black and white and introducing Bray's animated drawings to explain the technical points of the subject.

Hodkinson Sums Up Producers

Reviews Successes Made By Various Producing Associates to Date

In the opinion of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Benjamin B. Hampton's career as a producer of a group of author-supervised pictures from novels that have scored successes has, in addition, built for him the record of "the producer without a failure." "When one remembers," says the Hodkinson report, "how many failures there are among pictures that can also boast notable authors and how many half-way successes there are, it is a most unusual achievement for a producer to produce four such pictures as Stewart Edward White's The Westerners; Zane Grey's Desert Gold, Emerson Hough's The Sagebrusher, now ready for pre-release in the larger cities and Zane Grey's Desert of Wheat, now completed but held for later release by the Hodkinson organization because of the success of "Desert Gold" in all parts of the United States."

"The Sagebrusher" is from Mr. Hough's most recent novel. There is a slight and unintentional element of deception in the title "The Sagebrusher," prompting a surmise that it is a western picture, whereas but for the name, which is of course retained from the popularity the novel attained, the story might just as easily be laid in Vermont or up-state New York.

Mr. Hough, in building the story and in aiding Mr. Hampton in producing it to the point where he autographs the main title as a sign of his complete satisfaction with it, is said to have written a story that is independent of all environment. "The Sagebrusher" is the story of a poor girl in an Eastern town whose girl chum answers a matrimonial advertisement in her name and sends her West to marry the man who had advertised. The man was an uncouth, rough "no-account", needing the attention of a woman. On her way West the overworked girl loses her sight, never seeing the man she later married. The effect of this blind girl's presence upon the life of a big brute of a man long out of touch with civilization results in a most interesting drama of faith and love, it is said.

There undoubtedly will be both exhibitors and screen fans who will remark upon the development of another great story of love and faith such as was embedded in "The Miracle Man," but the theme and the treatment of the story by author, producer and director is reported to be along entirely different lines.

Roy Stewart, who was the hit of "The Westerners", is the Doctor Barnes of both the novel and its picturization of "The Sagebrusher", and Marguerite De La Motte is the pathetic Mary Warren. Noah Beery is the Sim Gage of the story. Other well known players in "The Sagebrusher" are Arthur Morrison, Betty Brice, Gordon Russell, Aggie Herring and Edwin Wallock.

"The Sagebrusher" is said to have been six months in the making in California. In its report on this picture, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation says that "The Sagebrusher" "gives the Hodkinson organization an unbroken row of successes from its various producers such as Sahara, starring Louise Glaum from J. Parker Read, Jr., The Westerners and Desert Gold from Mr. Hampton; and now The Sagebrusher from the same source; The Lone Wolf's Daughter from Mr. Read; The Lord Loves the Irish, the most successful of all J. Warren Kerrigan pictures from Robert Brunton; The Bandbox, starring Doris Kenyon from Deitrich-Beck, Inc.; and As A Man Thinks, starring Leah Baird, from Artco Productions; with Cynthia-of-the-Minute now in production with Miss Baird as the star and The Harvest Moon, starring Miss Kenyon.

The Hodkinson sales policy of booking pictures singly on their merits has not been departed from in any instance it is said. "The Hodkinson selective system of picking productions for distribution with the same care that exhibitors select pictures for their theatres has within the brief period of half a year brought the Hodkinson organization very close to the top among the powerful first rank distributors of the industry," concludes the Hodkinson report.

A pretty girl, a nice location and Roy Stewart contribute in making this an interesting scene from "The Sage Brusher," produced by Benj. B. Hampton for distribution by Hodkinson

"The Helion" Makes Hit in Chicago House

The "Helion" proved a big attraction for a solid week at Chicago's Band Box during the bitter cold weather the early part of December, it is said. "In spite of the inclement weather," writes John Keane, manager of this popular downtown theatre, "'The Hellion' did a fine business. It's the best picture in which Margarita Fisher ever starred.

"There is a lot in the power of suggestion," adds Mr. Keane, "and 'The Helion' is just full of suggestion—the kind of suggestion that draws the crowds. I never had a picture that I could play up so well before the public. Why, those Madison street pedestrians blocked the sidewalk looking at the lobby display, when it went up, and when we opened the show they were standing in line."

Manager Keane instituted an extensive advertising campaign prior to, and during, the run of the picture. The circus exploitation and sensational posters he displaed were well adapted to the picture.

Hayakawa-Haworth Camera Man Is Inventor

It is announced that Frank D. Williams, cameraman, for the Sessue Hayakawa-Haworth Company, is the inventor of a method for undersea photography, which, according to the report, has been found to be highly successful. His equipment is said to be in constant demand by companies making this class of scenes. The undersea photographic outfit was completed by Cameraman Williams more than two years ago, and was first used in the making of "Queen of the Sea," which featured Annette Kellerman.

Nazimova Exploited One Month in Advance

The Merrill theatre in Milwaukee more than a month in advance of showing Nazimova's latest production, "Stronger Than Death," displayed in its lobby an electric sign with "Nazimova" in large letters, it is said.

E. C. Bostick, who manages the Merrill theatre, had a photograph of this display taken and a print of it has been received by Metro Pictures Corporation, which distributes all the Nazimova Productions.

New Humorous Theme for Hall-Room Boys Film

The surgical world has furnished a new idea to Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the Hall Room Boys Comedies, to provide fun for a forthcoming release of the famous ballroomers. Percy and Ferdie Hall Room, suddenly decide they will take advantage of the kind offer, published by the warden of a western prison, to have new interstitial glands placed in their necks. That the glands were to be taken from the anatomies of prisoners, one a murderer and the other a burglar, dismayed them not one bit.

After the operation, Percy immediately becomes possessed of murderous tendencies, while Ferdie enjoys nothing so much as "lifting" silverware at his favorite restaurant. The real fun comes when the boys, posing as millionaires, are invited to a wonderful reception. Ferdie can't keep his fingers out of people's pockets and breaks up the party; Percy is refrained from killing him only by the interference of other guests.

Pathe Says Its Booking Policy Is Approved

Pathe has just issued a statement, submitted in part below, which is presented as evidence that Pathe's policy of booking on the open market is receiving the indorsement of the exhibitors:

"Eight weeks ago Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., stated that an increase of four hundred per cent. had been noted in feature collections for the months of July, August and September, over the best previous month in Pathe's annals. Topping this record, there followed an increase of twenty-five per cent. in October over September, and a further increase of twenty per cent. in November over October.

"Figures for December have not been tallied yet, but it is a certainty that in spite of the holiday season there will be a marked increase over November."

Melville Brown Engaged on Vitagraph Staff

Melville Brown, who has written and directed a number of comedies, has been engaged by Vitagraph to direct Montgomery and Rock in their future comedies. Before joining Vitagraph as a director, Mr. Brown was associated with Charlie Chaplin. He was co-director for Mabel Normand, and wrote the script for "The Pest," in which she starred.

"The Corsican Brothers" has 5600 not 6500 ft.

In a recent review of "The Corsican Brothers," appearing in the News, the length of the picture was reported to be 6,500 feet. The length should have been stated as 5,600 feet. The correction, therefore, is herein called to the attention of the News readers in accordance with a request from the United Picture Theatres of America.

Paul Mooney Completes Tour

Mayer's Sales Manager Sounds Exhibitors About Percentage-Booking Plan

Anita Stewart is featured in the First National release "In Old Kentucky"

PAUL C. MOONEY, general sales manager for the Louis B. Mayer Productions, starring Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, arrived in New York this week after a tour of the principal cities from New York to the Coast and back, arranging the special percentage presentations of "In Old Kentucky" and establishing the Mildred Harris Chaplin series which will soon be initiated as the new Mayer release through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Asked regarding trade conditions, Mr. Mooney said:

"In addition to arranging the extended run presentations of Anita Stewart's big melodrama, 'In Old Kentucky,' and the initial showing of Mildred Harris Chaplin in Mayer-made First National releases, my object was to feel the pulse of the public regarding motion pictures in general and the making of big specials in particular.

"Mr. Mayer has expressed himself as believing in the policy of making bigger pictures—pictures that warrant putting behind them real showmanship, and capable of being played on a percentage basis in the larger cities. I had expected considerable opposition to the percentage idea, but was agreeably surprised by the opinion of a majority of leading first-run exhibitors, to the effect that they would welcome a percentage policy backed up with pictures big enough to warrant it. They feel that pictures sufficiently big to play percentage—such pictures, for instance, as 'In Old Kentucky'—can be handled much more advantageously on percentage, even from the theatre standpoint, because of the additional help put behind a local presentation by the presence of a good publicity man, and, secondarily, through the effect of other picture productions of the producer knowing that he is going to get paid what he is entitled to on a particularly fine picture. In other words, the percentage proposition is fair to both sides and theatre owners who are farsighted are quickly realizing that 'playing percentage' means more profit to them than a straight rental basis."

Author on the "Lot" Directs

This Plan Adopted in Production of "The Master Mind" Makes for Economy

JOHN GREY, president, and Arthur B. Reeve, vice-president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., announce that they are producing "The Master Mind," a serial starring J. Robert Pauline, the hypnotist, at their studio in Flushing, L. I. In a statement recently issued the above officials devote considerable space to the star and the popularity with which he has been received on the vaudeville stage in his role as a professional hypnotist. "As for the star, says the Supreme Pictures report," J. Robert Pauline is the only man in the country who combined the necessary stage experience with a knowledge of psychology sufficient to put over the "Master Mind" serial idea. Pauline has an international reputation as a hypnotist, and he deserves it."

The statement also deals at some length with another accredited advantage of the picture; namely, the presence of the author of the story in the role of director, while the picture is actually being produced. This is what the statement has to announce about this phase of the production:

"With the author 'On the lot' he may get a bigger and better idea while the scene is being taken. How easily he can change it then and save retakes. He can see that full advantage is taken of every dramatic moment in the story. He may see a spot that needs a touch of color and can add a minor character picturesquely dressed or with an unusual make up to serve as a highlight.

"The author can devise odd and beautiful sets for his film for much of the fiction writer's success lies in his ability to describe the surroundings in which his characters live. With the author in the studio economy and efficiency are increased, for when he gets an effective set he will make full use of it, even re-writing to do so. The author-directed serial never keeps a company hung up for lack of sets. In our present serial, 'The Master Mind' we have had an example of this."

Third Adventure Sceni at the Capitol

New York audiences last week sa Oregon as Clark and Lewis, famou blazers of the Northwest trail di through medium of the Robertson Cole Adventure Scenic, "Flaming Ice, which was at the Capitol Theatre, th recently opened largest motion pictur house in the world. Incidentally regular patrons of the Capitol got a thir taste of Adventure Scenics.

The Capitol booked the first ten o these pictures upon sight, and Manage Edward Bowes, after the showing o the first picture added an additiona bit of praise. "We decided strongl enough for the pictures to take the firs ten, after seeing the initial picture, he said. "Public showings of the firs has more than backed up our judgment. One of the strongest appeals o the pictures is contained in the fac that each tells a little human story which adds interest."

Says Read-Glaum Picture has Unusual Settings

Louis Joseph Vance's "The Lon Wolf's Daughter," J. Parker Read Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, released by W. W. Hodkinson, is sai to be noteworthy for its settings which are described as "riotous i color and action."

Much of the action takes places i Soho, the French quarter of London the Cafe Mignon in the picture bein typical of the crudely appointed coffe shops where visitors from across th channel are wont to gather. Then th train of incidents shifts to The Re Moon, ostensibly a low-grade eatin house in Limehouse, the heart of London's underworld.

Can't Make Stars With Electric Signs or Ad Space; Pictures Follow Stage

By WILLIAM A. BRADY
President National Association Motion Picture Industry.

TO me one of the significant signs of the times is that the motion picture is following the stage. On the stage today the play is undeniably the thing, and so on the screen is the picture. Of all the pictures produced this year five alone have stood out. "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female," "Eyes of Youth," "Soldiers of Fortune," and "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave" are the outstanding pictures of the year, and for an excellent reason.

TEN Thousand Exhibitors agree with you, Mr. Brady, in your selection of the five greatest film productions of the present season. Ten thousand exhibitors know you to be a theatrical manager of many years' standing and highly qualified to choose winning pictures as well as winning legitimate stage plays. We thank you for your compliment in choosing Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth" as one of the big five, and you will have the satisfaction of knowing before this picture has made its run that ten thousand delighted exhibitors agree with you.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG
in "EYES OF YOUTH" ..

PROOF positive that your selection of "Eyes of Youth" as one of the big successes of the season is evidenced by the following clipping reproduced from a Boston newspaper. All the advertising and publicity talk in the wide world, falls flat alongside of such a statement of fact from the Waldorf theatre. What has happened at the Waldorf is happening in hundreds of the finest houses in the country, and will continue to happen until "Eyes of Youth" has played them all. (Watch for our next week's announcement with statements on the tremendous box office success of "Eyes of Youth" in other theatres). In the meantime communicate with your nearest Equity franchise holder.

Waldorf Theatre

Owing to the great demand for seats the management of the Waldorf Theatre has decided to hold over Clara Kimball-Young's first big special production, "Eyes of Youth," for a second week at this house. "Eyes of Youth" is the first picture ever held over at this house for a second week. It has created a sensation in Boston, and despite the 3300 seats of the Waldorf, it has been impossible to accommodate the thousands of admirers of Miss Young.

Three Hodkinson Issues in Row at Big House

When Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production "Desert Gold" completed its two weeks' engagement at Tom Moore's Strand theatre, Washington, D. C., last week, it was followed in Tom Moore's playhouse by Leah Baird in "The Capitol," from the play by Augustus Thomas, and next week J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," opens at the Strand for two weeks with a third week held open for a continuation of the run.

Volume of Bookings on "Beckoning Roads"

"Beckoning Roads," Bessie Barriscale's latest picture for Robertson-Cole is claimed to be the most pretentious offering in which the star has ever appeared and has been heavily booked by first run houses. It was adapted from the book by Jeanne Judson, which was published in serial form in the Red Book under the title of "The Call of Life."

Feist Makes Promises for Future

"THE exhibitors are taking notice of the activity of the Goldwyn organization," says Felix Feist, Vice-President and Manager of Sales, "not only in regard to the Goldwyn Star Pictures and the Eminent Authors, but also the short reel subjects, the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, the Ford Educational Weekly and new subjects underway. More than seven thousand exhibitors are using these reels already, and the new year will find a country-wide call for these scientific and comic subjects that have a popular appeal.

"Besides the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, we shall shortly release the Goldwyn-Bray Comic and the Goldwyn-Bray Graphic as well as the Ford Educational Weekly which is covering industrial and scenic subjects with amazing success. We shall prepare a number of short reel films in color that will add a new angle of interest to these releases. No expense is being spared to get results and the best brains are being employed to make sure that these reels are entertaining as well as instructive.

"One of the greatest writers America has ever had is Booth Tarkington, and he is writing a series of two-reel comedies which Goldwyn will produce and distribute under the title of the Edgar Comedies. These are not slapdash, hit-or-miss comedies, but the work of one of the world's great humorists and the creator of boy characters who are already internationally famous in book and plays.

"We are keeping pace with the demand for high quality short subjects of Goldwyn caliber, in fact anticipating it. I do not agree with some film manufacturers who say the educational film is going to be the backbone of the industry, because the story and the drama, attractively presented as it is in Goldwyn Pictures will always command the greater audience. Where the exhibitor finds his patrons pleased with intelligent short reel subjects of the Goldwyn-Bray quality, he will find us ready to supply the best. If it is new and good, it's a Goldwyn."

Nineteen releases have already been announced on the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs, ranging from "The Samoan Follies," the "Mysteries of Snow" and the extraordinary cartoon series called "Out of the Inkwell." Three subjects are usually included in each release which runs one reel, in as for example the release of December 21, "Girl Pottery Makers of the Caribbeans,' "Trailing American Game Birds" and a Cartoon by the Bray Studios. For January 4 the release is a distinct novelty entitled "Tides and the Moon," a marvel of scientific accuracy and imagination. It is followed by a reel on "Hunting Wild Duck."

Goldwyn Official Says More Top-Notch Subjects are Coming

Goldwyn took over the distribution of Ford Educationals beginning with "What Uncle Sam Will do for 2 cents." In its weekly release it has covered an amazing field of interest. The titles themselves suggest a good deal and the pictures have established themselves with the patrons of several thousand theatres. Subjects included are of an industrial and scenic nature, ranging from "The Story of Steel" and "Good Roads" and "Panama Canal," to "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas," "Northern Sports Under Southern Skies," "Nature's Echoes in the Canadian Rockies," "Islands of the St. Lawrence," and so on through fifty titles.

The two-reel Edgar Comedies are now in process. The first eight manuscripts have already been submitted by Booth Tarkington and enthusiastically accepted by Samuel Goldwyn.

First Robertson-Cole of Year

"The Third Generation" by Henry Kolker Described as a Smashing Offering

AS its initial release for 1920, the second year of its existence, Robertson-Cole announces "The Third Generation," a "Superior" production from the Brentwood Studios. This picture has been selected from among many to start off the new year. It is said that the film is one of the best ever released under the Robertson-Cole banner.

"The Third Generation" was written and directed by Henry Kolker, a man whose broad knowledge of pictures includes not only a general studio experience, but a foundation of twenty years on the stage, including fifteen years when he supported great stars, and was himself starred on Broadway. Mr. Kolker built his latest success around the rise, fall and regeneration of one of the famous "Knickerbocker Families."

He was not content in obtaining one star to carry the picture. He engaged what he considers an all-star cast. The leading feminine role is taken by Betty Blythe. The male lead, the part of Alden Van Dusen, who represents "The Third Generation," is taken by Mahlon Hamilton, who had a Broadway stage career before he went into pictures for Pathe, Artcraft and others. The second feminine part in the picture is played by Betty Brice.

Screenings of "The Third Generation" were the test which led Robertson-Cole to hurry out the publicity and other matter needed to release it in the first week of the New Year. Officials liked the picture so well that they saw in it, at once, a smashing way to start off the year. Of "The Third Generation" A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, said: "We are very proud to begin our year with "The Third Generation." Mr. Kolker has by no means overstepped in calling its appeal 'universal.' We have here a picture which will go over strong, pleasing both exhibitor and public."

New Pathe Serial To Be Released on Dec. 28th

"The Adventures of Ruth," the new Pathe serial of which Ruth Roland is author, producer, supervising director and star, was released on Sunday, December 28. In "The Adventures of Ruth," Pathe offers the fastest-moving continued picture she has yet released, it is asserted.

The leading man is Herbert Heyes, who has a large following for his work in support of practically all the famous woman stars of the screen. Thomas G. Lingham, the heavy, is well known as the villain who pursued Helen Holmes through so many of her railroad and western serials. Charles Bennett, the mystery character of "The Adventures of Ruth," is a screen player of distinction. The remainder of the cast includes Helen Case, Helen DeLiane and William Human.

"Soldiers of Fortune" Makes New B'way Hit

In a return engagement to Broadway, "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production which has been doing big things for Realart, repeated past performances last week at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, according to the report of Moss officials.

It was a doubly important week for the young producing company, for at the same time Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" made her New York debut under the Realart banner at the Rivoli theatre, and proved to be an appealing holiday attraction, the last three days of the picture's run being distinctly notable from the Rivoli box-office point of view, it is said.

"Rouge and Riches" Is Tale of Show Life

"Rouge and Riches," the newest Universal production, starring Mary MacLaren, which has just been released is a story of New York stage life, and gives an intimate view of the goings-on behind the scenes of a Broadway musical show.

Harry Franklin directed. Miss MacLaren is assisted in the acting by Marguerite Snow, Wallace MacDonald, Robert Walker, Alberta Lee, Dorothy Abril, Lloyd Whitlock, Syn de Conde, Harry Dunkinson and Helen Sullivan.

Three Films Begun Same Day

Metro Launches "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "Judah," and "Shore Acres"

THE photographing of three new Screen Classics, Inc., productions was started at the Metro studios in Hollywood on the same day last week, when "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "Judah," and "Shore Acres" were launched on Friday.

Five companies are now working at the studio. Bert Lytell and May Allison have started their new starring vehicles. Alice Lake has started "Shore Acres" and Emma Dunn is nearly half-way through "Old Lady 31," by Rachel Crothers.

The interior of the warden's office in Sing Sing prison furnished the setting for the initial scenes of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," in which Bert Lytell is starring. This famous play by Paul Armstrong was adapted for the screen by Finis Fox, and is being directed by Arthur D. Ripley, with Sol Polito doing the photographing.

An elaborate lobby of a European hotel was constructed it is said, for the opening scenes of May Allison's new picture, "Judah", a picturization of the stage drama by Henry Arthur Jones and put into scenario form by Arthur and Lois Zellner. Henry Otto directs the production.

On the outdoor stage at the Metro studios the interior of a country bank has been built. Here the first scenes of "Shore Acres", in which Alice Lake is to be featured, were taken. This stage-play, written by James A. Herne, was adapted for the screen by Arthur and Lois Zellner. Rex Ingram is directing with Stephen Norton doing the camera work.

Says "The Bandbox" Is Hit

W. W. Hodkinson Reports that the Star, Doris Kenyon, is Duplicating Success

DORIS KENYON'S first W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Bandbox," the Deitrich-Beck production of Louis Vance's gripping story, is reported by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to be winning the same favor in which she is held by New York theatre-goers as the featured player in the Broadway stage success, "The Girl in the Limousine."

"Though Miss Kenyon has appeared as star of several other screen vehicles it remained for "The Bandbox" effectively to bring out the charm, talents and beauty of this accomplished young artiste," says the Hodkinson report.

Though first-run exhibitors in the East, who have had profitable engagements with "The Bandbox," received material aid in the publicity given Miss Kenyon as a stage star, many of the big Western picture showmen report equal success with the Deitrich-Beck production solely on it merits it is said. One of these is E. J. Myrick, managing director of the Peoples Theatre, Butte, Mont., where "The Bandbox" has just completed a successful engagement. The New Yale, Muskogee, Okla., also reported business beyond the management's expectations in its holiday week engagement of "The Bandbox."

Two Indiana theatres, the La Salle, South Bend, and the Grand, Gary, found the Doris Kenyon picture a banner box-office magnet during holiday week it is stated. W. Waldo Freeman, managing director of the Palace, Great Falls, Mont., is now engaged on an exploitation and advertising campaign for heralding "The Bandbox," which he has booked for early January presentation.

SIMPLEX NOTES

ONE of the many visitors to the Simplex factory during the week was Mr. Lennard F. Hoffman, manager of the Maritime Offices of the Perkius Electric Company, Canada. He reports the recent installation of two Mazda Motor Driven Simplex Projectors in the Screening Rooms of the Famous Players Exchanges in St. Johns, Toronto and Winnipeg, respectively.

The adaptability of the Simplex Mazda for Screening Room purposes together with the fact that the Simplex is used generally by the Famous Players organization prompted Mr. McIntyre, the representative for the concern in question, to equip each Canadian branch office with Simplex.

Mr. Hoffman reports very big business being done by the Perkins Electric Company, and included in his statement the fact that a particularly large and well-known theatrical circuit in Canada is being Simplexized.

Mr. Hoffman is a former New York City boy and is remembered by old-timers for his activities with the Kinemacolor Company in whose interests he traveled from coast to coast from 1908 to 1912, and his connections with the Edison and Renfax Talking Pictures are also well-known. Mr. Hoffman has recently returned from four years' war service in Europe where he went in 1915 with the 38th Regiment of the American Legion branch of the Canadian Forces.

Messrs. Balaban and Katz, two of the best-known exhibitors of Chicago today, with five of their staff were in consultation with the Messrs. Edwin S. and E. M. Porter together with the Engineering Staff of the Simplex Engineers.

The Chicago party of seven went into details concerning the planning and equipping of the projection rooms of their two new proposed theatres, one of which is to be known as the Tivoli at 63rd street and Cottage Grove avenue, and the Capitol at State and Lake streets. Each of these houses will seat five hundred and will contain all that is new in theatre equipment.

Bearing in mind the success which attended the equipping of the Newman Theatre projection room at Kansas City, which, by the way, has become known as one of the finest in the world, the Balaban and Katz Company decided to follow the same lines as was the case with the Newman, and with that end in view they brought with them to the Simplex factory their architect, builder, electrical engineer and several others deeply interested in the construction of the new Katz houses.

The Balaban and Katz Company are at present operating two of Chicago's largest houses; namely, the Riviera at Broadway and Lawrence and the Central Park at 12th street and Central Park avenue, each of which is equipped with two Type "S" Simplex Projectors. Both these houses run daily from two o'clock in the afternoon until midnight and the machine service under these conditions has been such as to prompt the installation of Simplex in their chain of other Chicago theatres now operating, as well as those being planned.

Universal Takes Charge of Stowell's Remains

An item recently appeared in "The Motion Picture Weekly," a Los Angeles publication, in which it was stated, that admirers of William Stowell, the Universal leading man who was killed in a railroad wreck in South Africa, are raising a fund to bring his body back to America for interment.

Whatever may have been the cause of the publication of such an item is not known. The fact is, however, that any such action on the part of Stowell's friends is unnecessary, says a report from the Universal officers. Carl Laemmle, the Universal president, has taken personal charge of the matter. According to the report, Universal has done everything in its power to effect the immediate return of Stowell's body, but owing to a peculiar law of the locality in which the wreck occurred, this is impossible for six months, it is said, as the removal of a body from the country within that period after death is not allowed.

Trio of Sunshine Comics Coming

Three more Supreme Comedies will shortly be released by Robertson-Cole.

All three comedies were written by Frank Roland Conklin, and the first of these "Mollie's Millions," will serve to introduce the new Robertson-Cole comedy queen, Mollie Malone, formerly Roscoe Arbuckle's leading lady.

"A Four Cylinder Frame-Up" is the title of the second fun film and Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp have the leading roles.

"Mollie's Mumps," the third comedy, also stars Mollie Malone and James Liddy.

George Beban Will Tour with His Picture

Sol Lesser, who has formed a producing company to star George Beban, the delineator of Italian characters in a series of six pictures, announces that Mr. Beban will make a personal tour with his first picture, "One Man in a Million," now in the process of completion in Los Angeles. In this production Mr. Beban again appears in his popular characterization of the sympathetic Italian well known from his stage-play, "The Sign of the Rose."

A cast has been assembled which includes Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd T. Whitlock, Dorothy Gumin, George B. Williams and Jennie Lee.

Society Woman Has Big Part in Drew Film

Instead of being photographed in future by News Weekly cameras as has been her wont because of her social position, Mrs. Lewis Peck, a society figure, will make her bow on the screen in support of John Cumberland in "After Thirty."

Though "After Thirty" is Mrs. Peck's initial venture into filmland, she is enjoying her work immensely and is said to give promise of doing big things in an acting way under the careful and thorough tutelage of Mrs. Drew.

Some set. And all for a Fox Sunshine comedy, "Chicken a La Cabaret," the latest production from the Fox comedy studios

January List of Fox Releases

Six Big Productions to Be Launched During Current Month

FOR the first month of the new year William Fox has scheduled for release six selected productions which are heralded by Fox Film Corporation as "the greatest six pictures ever released by one producing firm in one month since the birth of the industry." Among these six pictures are the first Fox production, starring Shirley Mason, the swiftest Western story ever filmed with Tox Mix, as its star; and an appealing story with William Farnum as its central figure.

The name of Miss Mason's first vehicle for Mr. Fox is "Her Elephant Man." It is a screen adaptation of the story by Pearl Doles Bell. "Her Elephant Man" according to the schedule of the Fox advertising and publicity departments, "will be exploited along brand-new lines by the producer with a large quantity of most attractive paper. The press sheet on this picture it is promised will set a new mark for this branch of service and will be found the most complete aid of its kind ever offered."

The picture was directed by Scott Dunlap from Isabelle Johnson's scenario, and in it Miss Mason is supported by a cast which includes Albert Roscoe, Henry J. Herbert, Ardito Mellonio and Harry Todd.

Another of the six January releases which is said to have made an impression upon those who have seen it at the Fox offices is the first of the Tom Mix 1920 series, "The Daredevil." A notable feature of the production of "The Daredevil" is that the authorship and directorship are credited to Mix, who holds down the three important posts of author, star and director. "From the opening title to the fade-out 'The Daredevil' justifies its name. Speed sticks out all over it like quills upon a porcupine," says the Fox report.

Then comes a dramatic offering entitled "Flames of the Flesh" with Gladys Brockwell in the stellar role. This is a typical Brockwell picture which gives the star opportunity to display the many startling gowns in a character that puts to the severest test her ability and charm as an actress, it is stated by Fox officials. In "Flames of the Flesh" Miss Brockwell is directed by Edward J. LeSaint and supported by William Scott, Ben Deely, Louis Fitzroy, Harry Spindler, Mme. Rosita Marstini, Josephine Crowell and Nigel DeBrullier.

The Madlaine Traverse picture for January is "What Would You Do?" The solution of the problem as presented on the screen is said to be a daring one and is depicted in a series of graphic scenes. In "What Would You Do?" the star is supported by George McDaniel, Frank Elliott, Charles K. French, Lenore Lynard, Bud Geary, Edwin B. Tilton and Cornelia Callahan.

"Heart Strings" is the title of the William Farnum production for January. This Farnum vehicle also is being widely exploited by the Fox organization as "the most appealingly sympathetic role ever handled by this actor." J. Gordon Edwards again is associated with Farnum in the capacity of director. The scenes of the play are laid in and around Quebec and New York City. In the cast supporting Mr. Farnum are Gladys Coburn, Betty Hilburn, Paul Cazeneuve, Robert Cain, Rowland G. Edwards and Kate Blancke.

The sixth of the films listed for January is "The Shark" a story of the sea and sea ports with George Walsh in the title role, supported by a strong cast and directed by Dell Henderson. Supporting Mr. Walsh are Mary Hall, Robert Broderick, William G. Nally, Henry Pemberton and James Mack. Director Henderson also used several hundred extras, it is said.

With the six productions listed for January, there is also on schedule from the Fox studios a drama based on the only novel ever written by Georges Clemenceau, Premier of France. "The Strongest" is to be presented by Mr. Fox with a good cast directed by R. A. Walsh. This production will be released early in the year, and will be carried over the top by an extensive campaign.

The Fox Sunshine Comedy contribution to the January schedule consists of "two corking good laughing shows," "Chicken a La Cabaret" and "Hungry Lions and Tender Hearts." Bud Fisher's Animated Cartoons, co-starring "Mutt and Jeff" bring up the rear of the list four abreast, including "He Ain't Done Right By Our Nell;" "On Strike;" "Shaking the Shimmy;" and "The Rum-Runners."

Hope Hampton's First Play with Own Company

For her screen debut, which also marks the initial photoplay made by the company named after her, Hope Hampton, filmdom's latest star, has assembled a cast of well known players. Opposite the star is Wyndham Standing, recently seen on the screen with Norma Talmadge in "The Isle of Conquest" and with Lucy Cotton in "The Miracle of Love."

Another important name in the cast for "A Modern Salome" is that of Agnes Ayres, Vitagraph's young leading woman, who won note in the O. Henry series. Another popular Vitagrapher in Miss Hampton's support is Arthur Donaldson, a veteran of the silver sheet.

A national advertising campaign will back Miss Hampton's productions.

Selznick Has New Idea in Building of Sets

What is described as "an innovation in the erecting of sets for interior scenes of a house" is in evidence at the Selznick Fort Lee studios. An entire house has been built, it is said, to represent a home and the idea of its being furnished throughout as if a real home has been carried out to the last degree, according to report. This set will be used in the next Selznick production, starring Elaine Hammerstein, under the title of "The Woman Game."

This new Selznick set is comprised of six rooms. One room is done in Colonial style with antiques, family portraits, and spindly Windsor chairs. Still another room is furnished in Italian furniture with inlaid chests, candlesticks and beautiful mirrors.

"Find the Woman" Stars G. Walsh and D. Reid

William Fox's visualization of the novel "Find the Woman" with George Walsh as the star is under way at the Fox studios in College Point. The picture is being directed by George Beranger. Playing opposite the star, is Doris Reid, Pauline Garron is also in the cast, which includes L. R. Wolheim, Will Dudd, Walter Man, Jack Raymond, Warren Cook, Sedric Ellis, and Jack Hopkins.

National Film States Plans

Will Picture Eight Popular Magazine Tales Which Will Push Americanization

SCREEN plays adapted from eight popular magazine stories of 1919 will be produced by the National Film Corporation of America during the coming year, according to an announcement issued by Mr. I. Bernstein, production manager. "This policy will place the writer of short magazine stories and serial novels in a far different position than he has occupied heretofore, stated Mr. Bernstein, "as the National will produce film adaptations prior to the appearance of the story in book form, if a book is to be published."

While Mr. Bernstein says that the serial-novel makes the better photoplay, he is certain that the short magazine stories already purchased have the foundation for pictures that can be exploited as "specials" of the first water.

"Every picture to be made at the National studios on the west coast during the coming year will be an America First product, written by American authors, with American settings," stated Mr. Bernstein, who is said to have pledged the department of the interior practical support in its scheme for Americanization through motion pictures.

I. Bernstein, vice-president and production manager of National Film Corp.

The first production of the National's "America First" series will be "Mary Minds Her Business", adapted from the serial now running in the Ladies Home Journal story written by George Weston. "Mary Minds Her Business" will have an all-star cast.

Williamson Serial Sells Fast

"Woman in Grey" with Arline Pretty and Henry G. Sell Commands Attention

WHEN George H. Wiley acquired the screen rights to "A Woman in Grey," the mystery story by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, the authors decided to come to America to supervise the production of the serial. This plan was the fore-runner of the many present day author companies, which are now producing features. It was Mr. Wiley's plan to have the author in constant consultation with Walter Richard Hall, who adapted the story for the screen, so that the best possible picture results could be obtained.

The success of "A Woman in Grey," is pointed to as conclusive proof of the soundness of Mr. Wiley's theory of motion picture production.

Arline Pretty, the serial star, who has appeared in Vitagraph and Pathe serials, beside appearing as Douglas Fairbanks' leading lady, is the star of "A Woman in Grey," while Henry G. Sell, former leading man for Pearl White, heads the strong cast of supporting players among whom are such serial favorites as Fred Jones, Margaret Fielding, James Heenan, Jack Newton, Ann Brody and Walter Chapin.

James Vincent has given the picture a feature setting throughout. Neither time nor expense was spared in the attempt to make this photoplay a great serial. The choice of the cast has been made on a different basis from that of the old time serial. Genuine dramatic talent has been the first requirement.

This story which is being disposed of on the state right plan is said to be selling rapidly.

F.P.-Lasky Gets French Story

Cast Being Selected for New Feature George Fitzmaurice Will Be Director

GEORGE FITZMAURICE is reported to be now selecting his cast preparatory to beginning his second George Fitzmaurice Production for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The title will be "The Man Who Killed" which was also the title of the French book and play. The play is by Pierre Frondaie, and is based on the novel by Claude Farrere called "L'Homme qui Assassina." This French play was translated into English by Gilbert Cannon and Francis Keyser as "The Right to Kill," and produced with success at His Majesty's Theatre, London, in 1915.

Ouida Bergere is at present working on the continuity of "The Man Who Killed." The story has to do with the Embassies in Turkey. Mr. Fitzmaurice has picked out a house of Turkish architecture built on one of the Keys off the coast of Florida where he expects to film the exterior scenes. Also some scenes will be taken at Miami, where he will take his company as soon as the cast is complete.

Briefs of Interest

The Selznick group of players was further strengthened this week by the announcement of Myron Selznick that he had signed a long term contract with Walter McGrail.

Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pictures announces a strong addition to his scenario staff in Charles Belmont Davis, well-known author, traveler and contributor to the stage. Mr. Davis is a brother of the late Richard Harding Davis.

It is said that Albert Pesco, general musical director for D. W. Griffith productions, will conduct the orchestra at the Strand Theatre, New York, when "The Greatest Question," Griffith's initial attraction for First National Exhibitors' Circuit is shown at that theatre.

H. L. Conway, for some time assistant branch manager of the Cleveland office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just been appointed manager of Pathe's Des Moines headquarters.

"Why Go Home?" is the title of the new Rolin Comedy, released January 11 by Pathe, in which the "Pint sized comedian," "Snub" Pollard, is featured.

Betty Blythe this week completed work in Brentwood's production of "The Third Generation" by Henry Kolker. She planned to commence next week in "The Yellow Back," by James Oliver Curwood, for First National release, but on account of the heavy snows in the California mountains, where the picture is to be filmed, production has been postponed until early spring.

Milton Sills will be Viola Dana's leading man in "Eliza Comes to Stay" her new Screen-Classics, Inc., production. Maxwell Karger will supervise. "Eliza Comes to Stay" was adapted for the screen by A. P. Younger. It will be directed by W. A. Howell.

According to a wire just received from the Coast, Raymond Hatton has signed a long-term contract to appear exclusively in Goldwyn Pictures.

Vitagraph has found two actors who look sufficiently alike to double for each other in "Thimble, Thimble." John Walker and John Crane, who have frequently played together on the stage, have been engaged for the parts.

Molly Malone, the latest acquisition to Supreme Comedies, which are being released through Robertson-Cole, has started work in her first comedy, her support being James Liddy who has appeared frequently in the new Supreme releases.

Margaret Marsh is now Marguerite Marsh. The film star, who is now appearing in a series of features produced by Grossman Pictures, Inc., has decided to tell her real name with a frankness that is unusual to those of the stage.

Gladys Leslie in "The Midnight Bride" will be one of Vitagraph's January releases.

M'me Schuepbach Dined at the McAlpin Hotel

M'me Anny Schuepbach, one of the best known women in the motion picture industry of Europe, who handles all the leading American productions abroad as executive head of the Mundus Film company, Paris, who has been in New York for the last six weeks in connection with recently made contracts covering European distribution of features starring Leah Baird, Doris Kenyon and the J. Frank Brockliss list of American-made films, gave a dinner at the McAlpin Hotel prior to her sailing for home on the French liner Rochambeau.

The guests were M'me Schuepbach's intimate business associates in New York, including Leah Baird and Arthur F. Beck; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Garrett; W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro, and Mrs. Atkinson; Mr. and Mrs. David Howells and Mr. and Mrs. Leon Perrett.

Fox Exchange Will Have Larger Quarters

With the time near at hand for removal of the main offices of Fox Film Corporation fast approaching, the New York exchange of that organization has secured new quarters which will be ready for occupancy by January 15.

The new home of the Fox exchange in New York will be in the same building as the main offices, 130 West 46th street. The exchange will occupy the entire tenth floor. This will give it 8500 square feet of floor space it is said.

New furniture will be installed, and the fitting of the display room will be of the latest design. This room will be equipped with a set of frames of the various sizes used by the theatre man in his lobby, and here the sales force will bring the exhibitors for the selection of paper, accessories and exploitation aids generally.

Edgar Lewis' Company Working Fast

Edgar Lewis, who is in Los Angeles at present working on his next picture for Pathe, "Sherry," from the novel of George Barr McCutcheon, took twenty actors and one hundred extra people, 150 miles or more into the wilderness of southern California last Sunday to make some special scenes. Mr. Lewis reports to Pathe that work is progressing splendidly on his picture and that he has already 10,000 feet of negative. Most of the scenes were taken in and about Los Angeles and Santa Barbara. Pat O'Malley is playing the Irishman of the story.

"The White Moll" Progressing Very Well

Pearl White, star of the William Fox feature, "The White Moll," has Richard C. Travers as her leading man. Work on "The White Moll" is progressing satisfactorily. Eddie Wynard, the cameraman, has already secured some very unusual shots it is reported.

The interiors of "The White Moll" will be completed within a week and the company then will spend much time on the lower East side of New York, where the scenes of the underworld called for in the story will be photographed.

Events of Week at Universal

AMONG Universal's accomplishments reported during the past week were the signing of a long-term contract with Edith Roberts to star in Universal productions and the purchase of the screen rights for three stories by popular authors. In connection with the contract just negotiated with Edith Roberts, Universal has issued the following statement:

"Miss Roberts, who is just eighteen years young, was born in New York and attended one of the exclusive seminaries up the Hudson in her very recent girlhood. She made her first theatrical appearance in vaudeville five years ago, when she had a small dancing and singing part in a musical comedy.

"After a year in vaudeville she was engaged for 'cute girl' parts in Christie Comedies. A little over two years ago she came to Universal City to play in the Lyons and Moran comedies, and her youth, ability, tireless energy and intelligence soon won her important roles in more serious photoplays.

"Featured roles soon followed in such Universal successes as 'The Love Swindler,' 'Beans,' 'A Taste of Life' and 'The Deciding Kiss.' In 'Lasca' she was co-starred with Frank Mayo. In her newest feature, 'The Triflers,' she has the stellar role, supported by David Butler.

"Miss Roberts is an ardent sportswoman. Aeroplaning, motoring, riding, swimming and tennis are her principal out-of-door diversions. She is the stepdaughter of Dr. Armstrong of Smithsonian Institute, who was lately killed in a railroad wreck in Africa, while filming the jungle for Universal.

"While no announcement has as yet been made as to what new pictures she will be featured in, it is understood that Carl Laemmle has already under consideration several stories which he believes will offer fitting vehicles for her peculiar talent."

Contracts with Edith Roberts; Buys Three Popular Stories

Edith Roberts who has enlisted under Universal's banner and will soon appear in features

Commenting on the purchase of the three popular stories just effected, Universal has the following to announce concerning the disposal of the stories secured:

"In keeping with Carl Laemmle's aim for bigger and better productions, Universal has purchased the screen rights for three stories by well-known authors, which have recently appeared in prominent periodicals. The first of these will be used as a vehicle for the starring of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. This story, 'Everything But the Truth,' was purchased from the Frank A. Munsey Co. It was written by Edgar Franklyn and will be the basis of the first five-reel Lyons-Moran comedy-drama to be produced.

"Frank Mayo, whose latest picture, 'Lasca,' is meeting with unusual success, will be featured as the hero in 'Luck,' a strong red-blood story of the far north. This story offers splendid opportunities for screen adoption and is from the pen of John Frederick. It ran as a serial in the Argosy Magazine. Franklyn is a Saturday Evening Post writer and already has four plays to his credit. Among them are 'Keep Her Smiling,' which was used by the Drews; 'Ready to Occupy,' 'Rescuing Ann,' to be produced by Edward Clark, and 'The Wicked Streak,' being produced by Lee Shubert.

"Through Julia R. Tutwiler, Universal purchased the screen rights for 'False Colors,' by Edwin Levin. Priscilla Dean has been selected to grace the stellar role of this production. Universal is also considering the purchase of several stories as a basis for the starring of Edith Roberts."

A Four Weeks' Run for "The World Aflame"

Pathe announces that Frank Keenan's picture, "The World Aflame," distributed by Pathe, will open a four-weeks' run at the Grand Circus theatre, Detroit, on January 11, backed by a big exploitation campaign. This booking, recorded last week, is said to be of the longest ever made on any motion picture feature in Detroit. The contract was signed by F. Emde, manager of the Central Theatre Company, proprietors of the Grand Circus theatre.

January Releases of F. P.-Lasky

A Straight Drama and A Comedy Are Scheduled for January 4th

STRAIGHT drama and comedy are offered by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its Paramount-Artcraft releases of January 4. They are Enid Bennett in the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Woman in the Suitcase," and Bryant Washburn in "Too Much Johnson."

In announcing these two releases for January, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation issued the following statement in connection with the pictures:

"It is a homely little bit of domestic drama that is unfolded in the Enid Bennett picture. A unique feature, for motion pictures, is that the two leading figures in 'The Woman in the Suitcase' aren't a pretty girl and a man who is trying to marry her. Filial love is the motif this time—the affection of a resourceful boarding school miss for her father, and her efforts to free him of an entanglement into which a designing siren has led him.

"Miss Bennett is Mary Moreland, who, by accident, finds the photograph of a beautiful woman in her father's suitcase. An endearing message on the portrait is signed 'Dollie.' Mary is shocked to tears, and her dad is her ideal, but she sets out bravely to discover who the intriguing creature is.

"First she must have someone to accompany her to the places where Dollie may be found. Wishing a real husky and not desiring to make a confident of any of her men friends, she puts an ad in the paper for a professional escort. Billy Fiske, somewhat of an amateur adventurer, gets the job. Between them they hatch up a scheme that not only flabbergasts the vampirish Dollie but shows Papa Moreland the error of his ways.

"C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story and scenario and Fred Niblo directed. William Conklin plays the part of Mr. Moreland, Dorcas Matthews has the vampire role, Roland Lee is Billie Fiske, Claire McDowell is Mrs. Moreland and Donald MacDonald and Gladys George round out the cast. Miss George, by the way, is worthy of more than passing mention. Not long ago she was playing the French maid in the Western 'The Better 'Ole' company, with De Wolf Hopper. She also created a part in Winthrop Ames' production, 'The Betrothal,' in New York. So impressed was Mr. Ince with her performance in the former play in Los Angeles that he offered her an engagement at his studio. With Charles Ray in 'Crooked Straight' she immediately made good. Her assignment to 'The Woman in the Suitcase' followed, and immediately afterward she was given the role opposite Mr. Ray in 'Red Hot Dollars,' which has just been released. Her work in the Ray picture is declared to be distinctly impressive.

"'Too Much Johnson,'' the Washburn picture, is a fitting successor to 'Love Insurance,' 'Why Smith Left Home' and 'It Pays to Advertise,' in all of which comedies Mr. Washburn has scored with picture fans.

"Lois Wilson is Mr. Washburn's leading woman; and the supporting cast includes Adele Farrington, Monte Blue, Clarence Geldart, Elsie Lorimer, Gloria Hope, George Hackathorn and Phil Gastrock.

The State Right Field

SALE BY EQUITY

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION announces the purchase by Joseph Skirboll, First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Pittsburg, of the rights to Harry Garson's special Production, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," starring House Peters, for the States of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The Rocky Mountain States, including Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah have been bought by Walter and Sol Lichtenstein, of the Equity Distributing Company, Denver.

Sol Lesser Going in for Production is Report

Sol Lesser, who with the recent signing of George Beban and Annette Kellerman has fully launched forth as a producing factor, is going to feature Authors in the majority of productions, instead of director or star. According to reports, he is now negotiating for several plays of George Bernard Shaw, Sir James Barrie, and one by D'Annunzio, the famous Italian poet and patriot.

Lesser is reported to be now completing arrangements for the construction of a new, modern, fully equipped moving-picture studio, costing, it is said, $200,000. It will contain a laboratory, and completely stocked property rooms.

Ned Finley to Make 24 Short-Subject Films

The Ned Finley Productions announces that it is to make a series of two-reel productions. The short-subject films under contemplation will number twenty-four in all, according to the announcement. A company of players is reported to be going South to Esmeralda in the Blue Ridge Mountains region of South Carolina to make a picture of the "bandit" variety. This picture, it is stated, will play Dick Camp and Adele Kelly in the leading roles. John Sturgeon is also cast for an important part in the production.

Swiss Films Brought by Representative

Milton Ray Hartman, representative of the Swiss Eagle Film Enterprise, has just arrived from Berne, Switzerland, and taken up his residence at his uncle's, Mr. Edgar W. Gerke, 40 Beverly Road, Ridgewood, N. J.

He has brought with him a set of Swiss Nature films. Among them "Swiss Boy Scouts Mountaineering" which shows the life, work and play of the scouts, and will arouse great interest in the United States.

King Baggot and George Seigman in the Oriental costumes of their characters in the Burston serial "The Hawk's Trail"

Orient Seen in Burston Film

Chinese Sets Are Feature of "The Hawk's Trail"; Press Book Prepared

FROM the Advertising Department of Burston Films, Inc., comes the announcement of the early completion of all publicity and advertising plans for the third Burston serial, "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot, featuring Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell, and directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

In this serial some of the sets and action take place in an early episode, the scenes representing the Chinese underworld and also the magnificent living quarters of the "boss" Chinaman, posing as a merchant, but in reality owner of a string of resorts. This interesting character is played by George Seigman, whose make-up is said to include costumes of lavish Oriental richness that harmonize fully with the magnificence of the Chinese interior in which the principal action takes place.

The nature of the story gives King Baggot a truly protean opportunity, inasmuch as he is required to play a different character in nearly every episode. This has been used to advantage in designing the twenty-four sheet stock-poster, which shows King Baggot "straight" as a heroic figure on the left, while along the lower border are arranged the various characters he assumes.

Special paper based on still photographs have been prepared for the episodes, it is said, and these include one-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets. The variety of costumes and some of the handsome Oriental sets have been made to lend an infinite variety to the episode paper. Ready-to-use newspaper electros, publicity stories, and illustrations, player cuts, slides, lobby photos, banners and a page of "stunts" for the exhibitor are to be found in the exhibitors' book.

Northwestern Offers All-Indian Picture

What is claimed to be the only picture with an all-Indian cast ever produced has been completed by the Northwestern Film Corporation of Sheridan, Wyoming. It was produced by special permission of the government and was seven months in the making. The title is "Before the White Man Came."

More than 600 Indians took part in the picture, and many buffaloes were used. It is described as essentially a picture of the great outdoors, though it has a story in which the love and hate of the savage quicken.

William E. Wing is credited with the scenario, and John S. Maple directed. It is a state right offering.

Violet Clark to Write Script for Jans Film

Violet Taggart Clark has been engaged to do the scenario for the first super-feature of Jans Pictures, Inc. Miss Clark is now putting into scenario form the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp. The screen version is to be called "Love Without Question," and Olive Tell will portray the leading role. B. A. Rolfe will be the producer. Work will begin at the Peerless Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., within a few days.

Curtis Productions Disbanded Until Spring

An announcement has been received to the effect that it has been found necessary to discontinue productions until the spring in order that similar lighting effects can be secured to complete the first of the Cathrine Curtis Productions. For this reason, the company has been disbanded for the present, it is said, with contracts providing for resumption of production early in April.

This plan was not decided upon until after the Curtis Company had been forced to discontinue productions at three different points because of snow and winter weather. They first worked at Spokane, Washington, where they waited two weeks, after winter set in, thinking possibly they could resume production. Later, they came to Pine Crest, California, and they here found snow the first day after they began work. From there they moved to Keene Camp and snow followed them to that vicinity a few days later. It is estimated the inclement weather cost the Curtis Company in the neighborhood of $40,000 because of the inability to work.

Lucy Cotton Stars in Bacon Production

Lucy Cotton, recently signed by Cosmopolitan Productions for series of special feature productions, is the star of Gerald Bacon's late six-reel production, "Blind Love," a screen version of Max Marcin's, playwright, story. Supporting Miss Cotton in Mr. Bacon's productions are: George Le Guero, Thurlow Bergen, Frank O'Connor, Bert Leigh, James P. Cullen and Eduardo Durand. "Blind Love" has been purchased recently by Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, for distribution on the open market.

Leah Baird in Person at Moore's Garden House

It is reported that Miss Leah Baird, star of the new Gibraltar Picture, "The Capitol," photodramatized from Augustus Thomas' Broadway success of the same name, is to appear personally at Tom Moore's Garden Theatre in Washington next week when the picture opens there for a full week's run.

Cloverio Comics Are Coming

Production is well along on the first of the Cloverio comedies which will be presented by Hector Cloverio. Billie Bingham, Joseph Grant Kelley and Ruby Benning are featured.

The first releases will be made ready in February and will be heralded by an extensive advertising campaign.

Dramatic action typifies "Lightning Brice" the Jack Hoxie and Ann Lytle serial production which is being released through Arrow Film Corporation

"Sky-Eye" Is a Six-Reel Feature; No Serial

The Sol Lesser organization wishes to correct a false impression about the "Sky-Eye" in the following:

"The Sol Lesser organization wishes to correct the impression circulating in the trade that 'Sky-Eye' is a serial. This is a feature in six reels that is being offered on the state-right market, and due to the fact that it has an extraordinary title, coupled with its sensationalism, has led many to believe it is a serial.

"Lieut. Russel J. Hunt, playing the part of 'Sky-Eye,' eclipses the heretofore dangerous stunts of jumping from one plane to another in his death-defying feat in jumping from a speeding plane to a rushing train. He proved that this stunt was not a freak, for he rehearsed it several times before finally getting it perfect."

In line with the advertising accessories prepared on this picture, a press book of sixteen pages has been completed for exhibitors' help.

Kerrigan Productions Sold for West Indies

The W. W. Hodkinson Foreign Department announces the sale of the entire series of J. Warren Kerrigan's Robert Brunton productions for the West Indies to Ramirez Torres, head of the Selection Film Service, Inc., of Porto Rico and Havana.

Pioneer a Canadian Invader

Contracts with Sterling Films of Toronto for Five Years to Handle Output

WHAT promises to be an important step toward making the picture business safe for independents in Canada was the signing of a five-year contract between the Pioneer and the Sterling Films, Limited, of Toronto, last week.

The Sterling Films, Limited, is an organization composed of leading independent exhibitors of Canada, and representative business men in fields not affiliated with the picture industry. Starting conservatively with an exchange in Toronto they are now busily engaged in instituting offices in Montreal, and before many weeks plan to have a string of Sterling exchanges stretching across the Dominion from the St. Lawrence to Vancouver.

The Sterling interests are headed by H. Miller and D. Dunkelman, while the general management is in the hands of I. Soskin. Mr. Soskin, who is an authority on the picture needs of the Canadian exhibitor, speaking of the contract with the Pioneer said: "The Sterling Films, Limited, has a definite policy in regards to its future activities and development. We are here to serve the best interests of the exhibitor, not only in the matter of supplying him with the best of productions, but also in protecting him from the encroachments of the large monopolistic groups which is threatening to sound the death knell to the individual theatre manager," he states.

"We have in our company some of the foremost exhibitors in the Dominion, but at no time does the Sterling intend to enter into competition with its customers by operating theatres. Our exchanges were created as a protest against this practice."

The Sterling Films will handle the entire list of Pioneer features, as well as the Facts and Follies series of one-reel comedy novelties.

English Unit at Los Angeles

G. B. Samuelson, Accompanied by Actors of English Stage, Begins Productions

AN English film company headed by G. B. Samuelson is reported to have come to Los Angeles to begin the production of a series of pictures at that location. Mr. Samuelson, it is said, is accompanied by a number of well-known players of the English stage. Arrangements have been completed for use of stage space and offices at Universal City, and filming has already begun on the first of a series of six pictures to be made in this country. The first film to be made will be an adaptation from the story by Gertrude Page, "Love in the Wilderness," and work of making scenes for this has already been started.

Included in the number of players who accompanied Mr. Samuelson to Los Angeles are Miss Madge Titheridge, who was starred in New York in "A Butterfly on the Wheel," which ran for eight months at one of the leading theatres; C. M. Hallard, whose first starring role was in "School for Scandal"; Campbell Gullan, leading man in the original presentation of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," at the Comedy Theatre in New York; Miss Maudie Dunham, who is said to have made a reputation for herself on the musical comedy stage in London.

Since his arrival in Los Angeles, Mr. Samuelson is reported to have made a five-year contract with Miss Peggy Hyland, former William Fox star, and she is to be starred in Samuelson's films also.

Credit to Writer

In a recent issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in which the Katherine MacDonald feature for First National, "The Thunderbolt," was reviewed, no credit was given Daniel F. Whitcomb, who was co-author of this original creation.

Catherine Calvert Feature Is Progressing

Arrangements are said to be now practically completed for the southern trip of the Catherine Calvert company engaged in the first production of this former Famous Players-Lasky star for Films Incorporated. The elaborate settings caused some delay and a further delay was caused by the addition of new actors to the cast. In the meantime William W. Young, president of the producing company, has been casting about for a sea-going yacht which would exactly fit the description of the yacht in the story of the photoplay and has at last found this among the yachts of a New York millionaire.

In the studio, work is reported to have been progressing rapidly under the direction of Harry O. Hoyt and Lowell R. Stark, who have been forced to revise their plans several times because of additions to the cast and the desire to make the most of the talent available in the carefully selected personnel of the company.

Picture from Macgrath Novel Well Along

Studio reports from the Atlas Studio at Newton, Mass., where Harold MacGrath's novel, "The Place of Honeymoons" is being produced, indicate that the picture is well under way and will be completed on schedule time.

"The Gray Brother" Soon Released

Edward A. MacManus has almost ready for release his production, "The Gray Brother," a photodrama of prison life written by Thomas Mott Osborne and produced under the direction of Sidney Olcott.

A number of experts declare that Mr. MacManus has accomplished wonders with the story of Mr. Osborne's personal experiences with the criminal classes. Sixty-two interior sets were necessary to the visualization of the fifty odd principal characters that dominate a mass of thirty-five hundred people who were used to portray life in the underworld and within prison walls where Mr. MacManus and his camera experts penetrated to get real color hitherto denied visualization by prison managements.

Mr. Osborne is said to be highly gratified with the production.

Territory Still Open on Chaplin Reel

In "Lord Helpus," the Charlie Chaplin single-reel picture being released by Tower Film Corporation on the state rights market, Chaplin is given full scope for his funniest comedy antics. There are some territories still open for this production which promises to be a box-office receipts booster, announces the W. H. Productions Company.

Shake-Up Among Pioneer Branch Managers

Whether or not it comes as a result of the tour of inspection which M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, is now making cannot be definitely stated at the present time, but announcement has been made that the Pioneer exchanges will start off the New Year with new managers in charge.

I. Cobe, who has been in command of the Pioneer office in Buffalo for nearly a year, tendered his resignation recently. His successor as manager of the Buffalo Exchange will be R. T. Murphy, who has acted as Mr. Cobe's chief lieutenant for several months past.

The Cleveland office has a new head in D. S. Davidson, who succeeds C. R. Nelson Morris.

National Film Buys New Site in the West

Three acres of land adjacent to the little mountain town of Sunland, located about 35 miles from Los Angeles, has been leased by the National Film Corporation for general location purposes. The contour and situation of this property is well suited for general production purposes, according to I. Bernstein, National's general manager, as it lends itself to almost any sort of "atmosphere." Besides the National's production of "The Kentucky Colonel", Sunland is said to have furnished the best exteriors for Mary Pickford's "Heart o' the Hills" and Metro's "Old Lady 31". The National has built several semi-permanent "sets" on the property.

Re-Issues Tom Moore Series

Kalem Productions to Be Distributed by C. B. Price Co. and Clark-Cornelius

AN announcement from the Clark-Cornelius Corporation states that rights have been acquired to a series of eleven two-reel Tom Moore dramas and comedy dramas by C. B. Price Co., Inc. They will be released on a territorial rights basis. Domestic territory will be handled by Clark-Cornelius Corporation and foreign territory by C. B. Price Co., Inc.

These productions were produced by Kalem. Marguerite Courtot plays leading woman with Moore in the entire series with such persons as Robert Ellis, Paton Gibbs and Ethel Clifton in the casts.

The series includes the following pictures: "The Secret Room," "The Black Sheep," "For High Stakes," "The Prodigal," "The Adventure at Briarcliff," "The Cabaret Singer," "The Girl and the Bachelor," "The Black Ring," "In Double Harness," "His Inspiration" and "The Girl and the Explorer."

It is said that the series will be released to state right buyers at intervals of one a week backed by a trade paper campaign. According to reports, an elaborate list of advertising material will be issued on the series, including one sheets, three sheets, six sheets, lobby photos and cuts.

Zierler Buys "Sacred Flame"

Schlomer-Ross Production Starring Emily Stevens in Commonwealth Hands

SAM ZIERLER, manager of Commonwealth Pictures, Inc., who owns the rights for "Eyes of Youth" for the State of New York, has purchased the New York State and northern New Jersey rights for the latest Schomer-Ross production, "The Sacred Flame."

Speaking of "The Sacred Flame," Zierler says: "This picture, directed by Abraham S. Schomer, tells one of the most human stories I personally have ever seen on the screen. It's the kind of a story that the public wants because it rings true, and brings that character of entertainment that tends to raise the dignity and prestige of moving pictures. Miss Stevens' acting is superb throughout, she portraying the role of Rosalie in masterly manner, giving just the right shades of emotion and expression in those scenes that are tense and gripping. Her work on the screen has always been an inspiration to me for she is an actress of consummate skill whether legitimate stage or on the screen.

"Over the garden wall" with Elinor Field one of the all star cast of "The Kentucky Colonel" produced by National Film Corp.

"I purchased the rights to 'The Sacred Flame' for New York State and northern New Jersey for I recognize in this production those elements that make for successful exhibition in any and every type of theatre. The supporting cast is brilliant, including as it does the popular star, Muriel Ostriche and other well-known players."

The story was conceived, written and produced under the personal direction of Abraham S. Schomer, among whose former productions include such pictures as "Ruling Passions," "Today," "The Yellow Passport," "The Inner Man," and others that have scored heavily in the industry.

"The Sacred Flame," says Mr. Schomer, "brings to the screen one of the most human stories I have ever yet produced. Touch the hearts of your people and you have a winner. 'The Sacred Flame' goes to the very depths of emotion and up to enthralling heights, carrying the fan through every phase of human feeling."

"Candy" Industrial

In "The Candy Courtship" is a picture just completed for the Lowney Candy Company, the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is five reels in length.

State Right Sales

Jacob Wilk has sold the series of thirteen Alice Brady and eleven Robert Warwick re-issues to M. Feitler, 414 Ferry Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia and to the Reliance Film Evchange, Mather Building, Wash, D. C., for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia.

Murray W. Garson of Foundation Film Corporation reports the sale of "Blindness of Youth" to Sol Lessor and Leon D. Netter of Masterpiece Film Corporation, for the state of Ohio. The subject was also disposed of for Northern New Jersey to Frank Gersten.

The Foreign Department of C. B. Price Co., Inc., has just closed with the American British Continental Film Company of London, England for the picture "LOVE'S LAW," featuring Gail Kane for the whole United Kingdom of Great Britain. This picture has also been sold to Mr. Max Glucksman of New York City for South American territory, Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentine and Chili.

Sennett Special Titled "Down on the Farm"

Word has just been received from the Mack Sennett Studio that the title of the big Sennett feature which has been in the course of production for the last six months is to be "Down on the Farm." The picture is five reels in length. Those who have had previews of this production are said to have expressed the opinion that it is the funniest picture Mr. Sennett has ever made. More than fifty thousand feet of film were taken in making the picture, it is said, and it is now being cut and edited to five reels by Mr. Sennett.

"Everybody's Business" Will Be Exploited

H. S. Piper, who control the rights to "Everybody's Business," for Michigan, the six-reel photoplay production being released by W. H. Productions Co., on the state rights market, advises some unique exploitation and publicity stunts to be used for that production. "The effects from this special exploitation will be felt not only in their own territory, but throughout the entire country," it is said by the W. H. Productions Co.

Special preparations are being made for the first showing in Detroit. This production is being scheduled to receive the co-operation of American Legion Posts in various parts of the country.

Rawlinson Terminates Oliver Contract

Despite reports which are circulating throughout the trade, Herbert Rawlinson announces the termination of his contract with Oliver Films Corporation, for which he has recently completed the filming of the Chief Flynn Secret Service stories that are to be distributed through Republic.

Fox Studio Doings

Half of the big William Fox studio in Hollywood is being used this week for circus stuff required for the initial Shirley Mason production, "My Elephant Man," being directed by Scott Dunlap. The settings include all kinds of tents to be found on a circus lot and the plot has a complete menagerie, the side show freaks and all other atmosphere-creating properties, such as peanuts and red lemonade.

The William Russell Company is home from a ten days' stay at Prescott, Arizona, where Director Emmett Quinn made the exterior scenes for "Ruth of the Circle A." The remainder of this film will be made at the Fox Hollywood Studio.

Director Howard M. Mitchell is making the final scene for the Madaline Traverse subject, "The Penalty." The scenario department has already completed the next script for Miss Traverse, but as yet no titles have been selected. It is probable that Denison Clift, who has been the head of the Fox scenario department for the past year, will direct or act as co-director in the making of this film.

Jacques Jaccard, who has been identified with the Universal since his return from the army and over-sea duty, has been engaged by William Fox to serve as director of Tom Mix. The first film to be made under Jaccard's direction has been given a temporary title of "One-Quarter Apache," and is from the pen of Alton J. Neitz. The cast selected for this film, which will go into production shortly after the first of the new year includes Francelia Billington, who has been featured in the past six months in a number of Universal subjects. Miss Billington appeared in the lead role in "Blind Husbands." Others for this cast are Eva Novak, Charles K. French, Lester Cuneo and Jack Curtis.

Director Charles Swickard is making the last scenes for the second Buck Jones film, "The Last Straw," and scenario is now being prepared for the following subjects, which will be started within a few days.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

A most important announcement made this week by Jesse L. Lasky is that Roscoe Arbuckle will, for a short time, give up the making of two-reel comedies, in order that he may take the featured role in the George H. Melford production "The Round-Up." Mr. Arbuckle is now on his way to the coast from New York, where he has spent a few weeks, and immediately upon his arrival will begin work under Director Melford. The scenario for this film was prepared by Tom Forman and Mabel Juliene Scott will play the feminine lead. This will be Comedian Arbuckle's first appearance in anything but two-reel comedies, he having played continuously in that sort of film for the past five years.

Party of Prominent Mystic Shriners who recently visited The Famous Players Hollywood Studio

Dorothy Davenport, wife of Wallace Reid, who has been absent from the screen for the past two years returned to play an important role in the Artcraft special production "The Fighting Chance" now being filmed under the direction of Charles Maigne. The leads for this picture are Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Nilsson. Bertram Grassby will appear as the heavy. The scenario was prepared by Wiil M. Ritchey.

William C. DeMille has started work on the filming of "The Prince Chap" with Thomas Meighan, Lila Lee and Kathlyn Williams as his leads and Bryant Washburn under the direction of James Cruze is now working in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram." The script for this provides a number of balloon scenes. Washburn has been taking lessons at the Government Balloon School near Arcadia, where some of these sets will be made. Elmer Harris is author of the Temple Telegram scenario.

Director-General C. B. DeMille is doing the final editing on "Why Change your Wife" and by the first of the year, he will be ready to start on a new picture. Up to this time, however, Mr. DeMille has made no announcement of his future plans.

"A Lady in Love" is the title of the next vehicle for Ethel Clayton, which will be put in production with Walter Edwards as director, about the first of the year. In the meantime, Miss Clayton is enjoying a short vacation during the holiday season.

Miss Bebe Daniels is playing the lead opposite Wallace Reid in "A Dancin' Fool." The scenario for this was written by Clara G. Kennedy, and the direction is in charge of Sam Woods, who is responsible for the most recently made Wallace Reid picture.

About Metro Players

With the return of June Mathis from New York, following her conference with Vicente Basco Ibanez, work of preparing for the filming of this author's famous story of the great war, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," was begun this week at the Metro studios. Miss Mathis will write the continuity, and filming will be started about the first of February. Author Ibanez comes to Los Angeles early in February on a lecture tour, and will spend some time at the Metro studios in conferences with the producing organization there in charge of making "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Script is now being prepared by Albert S. LeVino on "Burning Daylight," the famous Jack London story. This subject will star Mitchell Lewis, and the filming will be started about the middle of January.

All Metro producing companies continue on their respective subjects: Viola Dana, under the direction of William A. Howell, in "Eliza Comes to Stay;" Director Henry Otto is in charge of filming "Judah," starring May Allison; Rex Ingram is directing Alice Lake in "Shore Acres;" John Ince continues work on "Old Lady Thirty-One," and Herbert Blache is directing, "The Hope."

Universal Newsettes

The last week of the year will see work started on several productions at Universal City. Director Rollin Sturgeon, who has just finished the editing of "The Breath of the Gods," starring Tsura Aoki, is working in the scenario department in the preparation of the script "Jewel." The cast for this film has not been announced, nor is it definitely known who will be the star.

Phil Rosen, who recently graduated from the ranks of cameramen and became a director, and who since has been making a number of two reel western films for Universal, is next to direct Mary MacLaren in a story at present known as "The Better Half." This story is still with the scenario department, but sets and scripts will be in readiness for filming before January first.

The final work on the most recent Allen Holubar made film starring Dorothy Phillips, "The Gorgeous Canary," has been completed and negative is ready for the laboratories. "The Devil's Pass Key," has also had its final editing in the hands of Eric VonStroheim and Al. Santell has given his latest comedy, "Lower Four and Upper Three," featuring Joe Martin, the ape, its final inspection. Tod Browning has perhaps one week's more work on "The Beautiful Beggar," starring Priscilla Dean, the company having spent the present week on making scenes on the Saint Sophia Mosque built from photographs of the original edifice at Constantinople.

The film adaptation from the Bayard Veillers story, "The Primrose Path," now being directed by Christie Cabanne, has been given the title of "Burned Wings." The cast for this is headed by Frank Mayo and Josephine Hill with Mae Busch, Beatrice Burnham and Rudolph Christians in the leading roles. William C. Dowlan is still at work on "Locked Lips," which stars Tsura Aoki as the Japanese girl living in Hawaii. Final scenes are being made for "The Forged Bride," by Director Douglas Gerrard, which is an adaptation from the J. G. Hawks story, "The Sins of the Father," and features Mary MacLaren.

Three short subjects have been started. Art Flaven is directing "Running Straight," a two reel western featuring Hoot Gibson. This will serve to introduce Virginia Faire, winner of the fame and fortune contest who has recently contracted with Universal. Another film has been put into the making by Edward Kull, who has Robert Burns and Peggy O'Dare in the leading roles. The title is "Kaintuck's Ward." Edward Sowders is filming the western playlet "A Sage Brush Gentleman."

Goldwyn

There is little actual production activities at the Goldwyn Studio, as most of the companies finished the subjects on which they were working during the past week and new film releases will not be taken up until after the holidays. Three of the Goldwyn stars are in New York for the holidays. Mabel Norman remains there until about the first of the year. Tom Moore and Jack Pickford left early this week for New York and will see Christmas and New Year on Broadway.

T. Hayes Hunter has begun the filming of the Basil King story, "Earth Bound," with a cast that is made up of Wyndham Standing, Naomi Childers, Mahlon Hamilton, Flora Revalles and Alec C. Frances. Frances is a former member of the Goldwyn Stock organization, and has just made another contract to remain with Goldwyn for the coming year.

Prior to the departure of Tom Moore for New York, the last scenes for the film entitled "Duds" were made by Director Tom Mills, who is now busy with the editing of this film. The last scene has also been made by Director Wallace Worth for "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," and Director Reginald Parker will complete "Dangerous Days" within the next few days.

The complete cast for the Madge Kennedy picture, "Two Cents Worth of Humanness," includes Kenneth Harlan, Willard Lewis, Florence Shon and Richard Tucker. The film will be directed by Harry Beaumont.

F. J. Godsol, chairman of the Executive Committee of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles this week for a short stay with Vice-President Abraham Lehr, who is in charge of production at the studio

Hampton

The New Year will see all effects of the Jesse D. Hampton Producing organization and all producing units at work at the new Hampton Studio, 7200 Santa Monica Boulevard. For the past several weeks, the Blanche Sweet Company, under the direction of Robert Thornby has been working at the new plant in the filming of "Simple Souls." This photoplay is adapted from the John Hastings Turner story of the same name by Fred Myton.

The William Desmond Company has completed the filming of "The Parish Priest," which is an adaptation from the Dan Sully stage play of the same name. In the making of this film, it was necessary for the Hampton Company to film a greater portion of the ordination ceremony of the Catholic church. Permission to do this and for forty priests to work in the picture was secured from the bishop at Monterey and Los Angeles, and in return for the services of the priests, Jesse D. Hampton filmed therefrom and made a complete picture which consists of five reels of the ordination ceremony and presented it to the church. Two weeks were required in the filming of this portion of "The Parish Priest."

William Desmond is next to work in "The Man from Make-Believe," which is an adaptation from the Saturday Evening Post story by Byron Morgan, and the cast for this has not been selected, but it is definitely announced that Josef Franz will direc the making of this film.

Jesse D. Hampton has arranged for the next H. B. Warner picture which will be "Uncharted Channels," adapted from the Kenneth Clarke novel of the same name by Eugene B. Lewis.

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's News

HOKUM—HOKUM—CaCtch

Weather—earthquakish.

Carl Laemmle is in town.

Al Kaufman is in our midst.

Harry Caulfield's home from New York.

Roscoe Arbuckle is back from New York.

Mary Pickford got an airplane for Christmas.

Ben Schulberg's gum-shoeing about our town again.

Lew Cody has bid the women of Broadway "good-bye."

Sol Lesser made a flying trip to San Francisco via the Lark.

We again hear that Mary McLaren is going to leave Universal.

Walter McGrail has come out to work with the Harry Rapp-Selznick bunch.

The crop of Christmas cards was reported to be very good at all studios.

HOKUM had to buy a big waste basket to hold all the New Year resolutions.

Walter Hiers has consented to play with Famous Players-Lasky for five years.

Lyons and Moran have bid Broadway good-bye, and are back among the home folks.

Christmas has come and gone, and we may now expect to see liners "do your Christmas shopping early."

Julius Stern was seen in the Alexandria lobby Friday evening after Carl Laemmle arrived. (Adv. for the hotel.)

The Goldwyn publicity department is responsible for the information that "Will Rogers has finished 'The Strange Boarder'."

Charles Murray has gotten into the habit of acting as master of ceremonies again because of the various Christmas benefits.

Lila Lee and Lois Wilson went out and bought new automobiles for themselves for Christmas. No, the machines are not twins.

Madge Kennedy's hobby is collecting telegrams. No, she is not a high-priced messenger girl, but just keeps those that come to her

And now we learn that Beatrize Dominguez, the Universal Spanish beauty, has a castle in Spain, and is now playing in "The Moon Riders."

Now that Christy Cabanne's picture at U City has been renamed "Burnt Wings," causes one to inquire how it happened they didn't think of "The Singed Cat."

Louise Giaum has written a book on the subject "I Have Nots," in which the actress makes a frank confession that she hasn't done everything under the sun.

Tom Gibson's automobile was run down by a flivver that jammed the tail light up into the carburetor. Tom says the "J" in Jam should have the hard sound like "D."

Jacques Jaccard was trying to find his knife. "Where is the vanishing dagger?" said he. And then he thought that would make a good title, and that's how the serial was named.

The Chauncy Depew of the films has been discovered in the person of an innocent and 'umble press agent who answers to the name of "Buck," and whose real name is H. L. Massie.

Victor Schertzinger is back from Broadway, and Mabel Normand will come shortly. They did not like the weather back there for filming. (Echo of Chamber of Commerce laughing with glee.)

Viola Dana has an admirer who is an aviator at a local field, and every day he does his fancy didos over the Metro studio. Sad to relate, Miss Dana has been on location for several days.

Met a very interesting person this week named Victor Gibson. He's a close associate of Charley Fuhr, and is hard to find. In fact, nobody knows where Charley lives, or Victor either.

Herb Somborn is our blushing bridegroom this week, he having said "I do" in chorus with Gloria Swanson. Judge Crawford tied 'em up near the famous million dollar rug in the Alexandria lobby.

Wallace Reid finds work a pleasure, (old stuff in most instances) as about all he has to do in his coming dance picture, is dance, dance, dance. We use three "dances" here to give the Waltz time.

A visitor at the Goldwyn studios wanted to know who the boy was directing when he saw a group of lads together working in scenes for the "Edgar" stories. HOKUM advises that it was E. Mason Hopper.

Wallace Worsley made a scene of slap stick the other day for Goldwyn's "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," when a bumble bee workd on one of the actors just in the rear of the said thespian's ear.

Prissy Dean keeps the speed cops feeling good by finding a place for them in her pictures, and then a mean fellow rises to inquire what kind of a part can they give a speed cop in "The Beautiful Beggar" which is laid in Turkey.

Frank E. Woods has sought the quietude of an individual building for an office at the Famous Players-Lasky drammer factory, and now occupies the Japanese bungalow built especially for Mary Pickford to use as a dressing room.

BUSINESS NOTE: Wonderful Harry's place where beans are served for Metroites, is now owned exclusively by Wonderful Harry himself, Tom Kennedy having disposed of his interest to his partner, Wonderful Harry, whose last name is Greenish.

Rex Ingram finds it advantageous to be an artist. When he can't think of the character man's name, he sketches a picture for Metro Casting Director, Horace Williams, and the likeness is so true to life the casting director immediately knows who the director wants.

A house hunting tourist applied to Robert Brunton at the studio the other day to rent a set erected near the street for a coming Pickford United Artists release. Its a New England type house 40x60. Bob lost a tenant when said prospect discovered there were only two sides to the house.

"MR. DE MILLE SPEAKS."

When HOKUM sought the low down information regarding the why and wherefore of directors wearing puttees, information was sought from that dean of producers, C. B. De Mille, who is accredited with being one of the first to hide his trousers by the use of the leather slip-ons.

While Mr. De Mille did not state definitely, he inferred that the cause for donning puttees first was that Hollywood was more or less covered with bramble, when he came west to grow up with the country, early in December, 1913. In going from one set to the other—the Lasky Company had two sets, and a stage then—it was necessary to walk through this brush, and to be economic with his trousers, Mr. De Mille had them encased in leather.

Another excuse for the wearing of these detachable uppers of riding boots, is that a director is up and down, and down and up continuously, making it necessary to keep a valet busy if his trousers were to retain a respectable appearance. With puttees pushing the trousers up, no one can tell whether they are pressed or baggy at the knees.

So this first interview brought out information that may be of interest to everyone of the industry—economy and efficiency were introduced in one respect at least, as early as the year 1913.

HOKUM, not being thoroughly satisfied, intends to delve into this question of cause and creation, and maybe in the next issue we can give more definite details.

Soon to be Seen in Jans Productions

Olive Tell, of Universal and universal fame, who is appearing in the picturization of C. Wadsworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room," to be released by the Jans Pictures Corporation, Inc., under the title of "Love Without Question"

Here and There

Henry Kolker is now supervising the final cutting and titling of "The Third Generation," his first production as author-director for Brentwood. Betty Price has an important role, also little Peggy Cartwright, aged five years. Betty Blythe and Mahlon Hamilton have the leading parts.

Claude H. Mitchell in his picture "Seeing it Through" just finished for Brentwood has been rejoicing in the fact that his plot was laid in Southern California and therefore he was at liberty to choose the most beautiful and most typical bits within a fifty-mile radius of Los Angeles for all his location work. So we can look for undisguised and uncamouflaged "shots" of the same scenery we have frequently witnessed unawares in past films. It sounds attractive.

Edwin Stevens and Mayme Kelso have important parts in "Seeing it Through." Miss Kelso as the housekeeper of the character portrayed by Mr. Stevens, wears the identical costume which she wore as housekeeper of the boys' school in "Oliver Twist," and while the two pictures have nothing else of plot or characters in common, the atmosphere of Edwin Steven's house of mystery, together with the character portrayals of Stevens, Frank Hayes and Mayme Kelso, and the situations in which they are thrown are said to offer a striking contrast both dramatically and photographically for the warmth and love of the opposite group of characters surrounding ZaSu Pitts

Al Haynes, one of the Christie comedians, gets so exasperated when trying to drive a car through "Christie Corners," that he resolved not long ago, that the next time anybody disregarded signals, he would get right out and smash the driver in the jaw! He didn't care who it was, by gosh! It happened as per schedule, all except the smashing. Another driver failed to observe Haynes' arm sticking out of the Haynes family automobile. Al said "darn" or something and gave chase. The offending driver pulled up in front of a film laboratory half a block down the street. Haynes hopped out, eager for the fray. Then he paused, retreated, and said to his wife in a softer tone: "Drive on." The other driver was Jack Dempsey.

Baby Ivy Ward, whose latest screen engagement was with Wistaria Productions, under the direction of Burton King, recited "The Passing of Marmion and Douglas" at the Stage Children's Festival held at the Hudson theatre during Christmas week.

After nearly one year of hard work during which he has made seven important pictures for William Fox at the Hollywood Studios, Frank Beal will take a long vacation on his orange grove near San Bernardino. When he recuperates he will return to Los Angeles to make more pictures. During the past few months Mr. Beal has made "The Danger Zone," with Miss Madaline Traverse, one of the most successful pictures in which that star has appeared. He then went to Miss Gladys Brockwell, with whom he made "The Divorce Trap," "Chasing Rainbows," "Broken Commandments," "Thieves" and "The Devil's Riddle."

Selznick Engages Walter Hall

Walter Richard Hall, one of the most successful of present day photoplay dramatists, has been engaged by Myron Selznick to write the screen version of "Bucking the Tiger" which is to serve as Owen Moore's next feature vehicle under the Selznick banner.

"Bucking the Tiger," a comedy drama from the pens of May Tully and Achmed Abdullah, is also to be the first play produced by Selznick for the legitimate stage and is scheduled for an early opening in one of the leading Broadway theatres. Under this arrangement, motion picture exhibitors will receive the benefit, it is said, of the public approval and popularity of stage successes, coupled with the extra publicity which is assured in publication throughout the country.

In engaging Walter Richard Hall to make the picturization of "Bucking the Tiger," Myron Selznick, has secured the services of one of the most versatile of the present day crop of authors. Hall's past record of achievements in the writing of successful screen subjects of a widely varied nature places him in a class by himself.

The unusual originality of the plot and theme of "Bucking the Tiger" with its many novel twists and turns in the unfolding of the story which is rich in humorous situations and tense dramatic moments, caused both Myron Selznick and Owen Moore to comb the field for a writer capable of turning out an exceptional screen version. After days of considering the best screen authors available Hall's versatility and past record prompted an immediate decision in his favor.

Work on the screen production will be started at the Selznick Studios within the next few weeks and will be under the direction of Wesley Ruggles.

Walter Richard Hall

Personal and Otherwise

George Archainbaud, who has directed such stars as Gail Kane, June Elvidge and Montagu Love, and will be remembered most recently for his series of productions with June Caprice, has been selected to direct the next Selznick picture starring Elaine Hammerstein.

The hit made by Walter McGrail as the bored New Yorker in "The Country Cousin" is said to be directly responsible for his being signed by the Selznick Pictures Corp. for his exclusive services during a long term.

Eugene Mullin, Eastern scenario editor for Goldwyn, has entered into an arrangement with G. Marion Burton to handle some of the Goldwyn scenario work. Mrs. Burton has established a scenario department of her own, under the management of Arthur H. Jacobs from which she furnishes not only continuities on an independent basis, but also synopsis of books and plays with criticisms for screen purposes.

Roy W. Neill, who directed E. K. Lincoln in "The Inner Voice," finished work on that picture some days ago. It is now being cut, and Mr. Neill has commenced shooting interiors for Norma Talmadge's next feature.

Oscar Eagle has deserted the screen for the time being, and is supervising the initial performances of "Zip—Goes a Million," the musical version of "Brewster's Millions," which had its premier in Worcester, Mass., December 8th.

George LeGuere, who is now playing the juvenile lead in Arthur Hopkins' Broadway success "Palmy Days," will soon be seen opposite Lucy Cotton, in Gerald Bacon's late production "Blind Love," a screen version of Max Marcin's story. Oliver D. Bailey directed.

Billie Rhodes, National film star

On the Coast

William Beaudine has finished the direction of the next Christie Special, which is to present Eddie Barry in the role of a cannibal and Helen Darling as a missionary maid.

Thirty-five orphan kiddies who lost their fathers in the recent war saw "Anne of Green Gables" at Miller's New Theatre the other day, and howled with glee over the mischievous pranks of Mary Miles Minter, alias Anne.

While down on the boundary line of Mexico last week, Jay Morley, who is being featured by Vitagraph in the O. Henry story "An Afternoon Miracle" had occasion to fire a number of shots from his big Colt six-shooter in the making of a scene. He emptied the gun and stopped to reload, and instantly a curio merchant was at his side with a request for the empty discharged shells. He wanted to sell them, he said, to tourists as souvenirs of bandit raids and he only wished several more film companies would send their companies down to film "western" dramas. The newspaper accounts of Mexican hostility are slightly exaggerated, it would seem.

Director David Smith reported, however, that when he was at Tia Juana he had to show his script to all officials in the vicinity, who read it carefully, decided that it in no way reflected upon the Mexican people, and gave him full permission to make all the scenes he required.

Melville Brown, who wrote "Speed" and "Cleaning Up" and directed Al St. John in both of these two-reel comedies, has been engaged by Vitagraph to direct Montgomery & Rock in their future two-reel comedies.

Pending the arrival of Jean Paige, who will play opposite him in the newest Vitagraph serial, Joe Ryan has turned his attention to directing and starring in the O. Henry story, "The Passing of Black Eagle."

"The Red Terror" is the title of H. H. Van Loan's latest story for Tom Mix. The scenes are laid in Russia and were developed by the author from incidents witnessed by him while visiting the Bolshevik-infested land in 1914. Mr. VanLoan's story, "The Great Redeemer," is being prepared for production by Maurice Tourneur, who is said to be planning to make it a powerful feature production with an unexcelled Goldwyn cast. Furthermore, the Universal Company has already expended $200,000 on the Van Loan story "The Virgin of Stamboul," which is being magnificently produced by Tod Browning at Universal City. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, told Mr. Van Loan that he liked "The Virgin of Stamboul" so well that he would be pleased to have him create another foreign feature story along similar lines. It seems to us that Mr. Van Loan can well afford to say: "This is a Van Loan month."

The filming has just been completed of the Bradbury Production of "Hollyhocks," an original story written and directed by Robert North Bradbury. Louis Gottschalk has transferred allegiance from D. W. Griffith's productions and is composing special music for "Hollyhocks," and it is claimed that the film is an innovation in feature-picture presentation.

"Work" Is Van Loan's Creed

ONE of William Shakespeare's best known young men albeit a dismal sort of a chap—"Hamlet" by name—was asked one day what he was reading. His answer was: "words, words, words."

H. H. Van Loan, one of the screen's best known writers today—a young man, too, but altogether different from that melancholy Dane, who, even in his time knew that "the play's the thing," says that work, work, work, makes the successful playwright.

Mr. Van Loan, whose first story was released only a year and three months ago, is a firm believer in work. He has worked hard all his life, and he's mighty glad he has had to do so. This is what he says:

"I believe that the man who has had to knuckle down and fight the uphill battle for existence, is the real fellow in life, for he is taught self-reliance and develops better both mentally and physically than the man who walks the path of roses. Some one has said there are men who boast they are self made, thus relieving the Lord of a great responsibility. Leaving these boasting individuals out, we must tip our hats to men like Charles Schwab and Henry Ford, who have attained remarkable success, only through their determined efforts, mixed with the hardest kind of work."

Mr. Van Loan says he spent many laborious months in his newspaper work in New York, important assignments frequently keeping him up all hours of the night. It was hard work, he says, but it was nothing to compare with what he experienced while representing the International News Service in London some years ago.

"Those experiences," said the author at his cosy little home in Glendale, California, a few days ago, "I am really grateful for, as they have proved invaluable to me in connection with my photoplay writing. From those experiences I have been enabled to develop numerous situations for the stories prepared for the screen.

"The years I served as publicity manager for the Universal Company in New York were also crowded with unceasing work, as the Big U had so many stars under its wing; it was making more serials than any other producing organization; and its multiplicity of activities both in New York and at Universal City made it necessary to turn out a tremendous amount of publicity matter. In addition to that the demands from all kinds of magazines and weekly publications were so constant that there was nothing to do but work, work, work."

Mr. Van Loan says that when he decided to enter the motion picture writing field, he knew that it would be some time before his efforts would bring any results. And he was right in his assumption. None of his first stories found acceptance. The producers gave him some encouragement—that was all. However, "praise without profit puts little in the pot." But the aspiring scenarioist was not downcast—only more determined to "win out." And he did, but only by "work, work, work."

His first story that found its way to the screen made an instantaneous hit. It was "Vive La France," released in October, last year, with Dorothy Dalton in the leading role. Thomas H. Ince made the play and it was admitted to be one of the best releases of 1918.

One of Mr. Van Loan's next best plays was "The New Moon," in which Norma Talmadge was starred. This was a Russian story, produced by Joseph Schenck, who was so enthusiastic over it that he asked the writer to make another for him.

During the past year Mr. Van Loan has sold fifteen stories, among them "When a Man Loves," and "The Highest Card," for Earles Williams; "Three Gold Coins," and "The Red Terror" for Tom Mix, and "The Great Redeemer," which Maurice Tourneur is to produce as a special feature. At the request of General Manager Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Van Loan is preparing four additional stories for Mix.

One of the author's most pretentious stories is now being prepared for the screen by the Universal Company and will be its leading special feature for the early part of 1920. It is "The Virgin of Stamboul," in which Priscilla Dean plays the leading role—that of a Turkish beggar girl. Mr. Van Loan while in the employ of the International News Service, was sent to Turkey in 1912 to investigate conditions there for his organization. During his stay in Constantinople he witnessed incidents upon which he based his story of "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Notwithstanding the fact that his photoplay writing causes him to "make the night joint laborer with the day," in order to comply with the constant demands upon him for material for leading stars, Mr. Van Loan is writing a series of articles for the Los Angeles Express, one of the leading newspapers of the southland. These articles give advice to writers who aspire for fame as screen playwrights, and hundreds of letters are being received by the author from men and women, some asking for further advice and others thanking him for the helpful information contained in the articles he has written.

During the past few months Mr. Van Loan has been importuned by a number of his friends in New York to visit the big city, but he will defer his long-contemplated trip until the early part of 1920. At that time he intends to visit New York and witness the initial production on Broadway of "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Charles Maigne Directs "The Fighting Chance"

"The Fighting Chance," which is now being transferred to the screen by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with Charles Maigne as director, and Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Chambers' series of books which dealt with the ultra-fashionable set, which in a sense has carried on the traditions of aristocracy of the Old World, such as fox hunting and the like, in the hills of Westchester County and other environs of Manhattan.

Constance Talmadge on Watch for a Comedy

Although no less than sixty manuscripts are submitted to the Constance Talmadge Film Company every week, it is said, it is exceedingly difficult to get exactly the right kind of comedy for this First National star. Very few writers have the deft pen of John Emerson and Anita Loos. Constance Talmadge wants comedies of manners, comedies that are funny because they delight one's sense of what is ridiculously human in the way of little everyday commonplace foibles and frailties—subtle comedies, not comedies of the slapstick variety.

Says Miss Talmadge: "I want comedies chiefly because I enjoy making people laugh; secondly, because this type of work comes easiest and most naturally to me. I am not a highly emotional type."

Scenario Dept. Reorganized

Metro Provides New Space for Scenarioists in the Longacre Building

THE Metro scenario-reading department has been reorganized at the New York offices of the company in the Longacre Building. About a month ago Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, the editor, was called from Hollywood to New York City to conduct the department in the East in view of the fact that most of the available screen material Metro decided was to be had in the metropolis.

To gain space for the department, new quarters were acquired for the Metro shipping department on Forty-eighth street, and the space so preempted in the Longacre Building was refitted for Col. Brady. Since his arrival Col. Brady has been busy selecting his staff of readers, which now is said to consist of Miss Edna Garden, Miss Carrington North and Miss Florence Wilstach.

Miss Edna Garden has been a reader in the Metro home-offices for a little more than a year, and after examining and obtaining material in New York had passed it along to Colonel Brady in Hollywood. Miss Garden was a student at the National Academy of Design several years ago and studied for the stage later under Madame Alberti.

Miss Carrington North has had a successful career as an actress. Although born in the United States she has lived variously in South America, Mexico and England. She studied for the stage at Sir Herbert Tree's dramatic academy in London and later appeared in several of his productions.

Miss Wilstach is a graduate of Sweet Briar College. She studied abroad for a year until the war broke out when she returned to this country and played with E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe. Before coming to Metro she was a member of the scenario department of Robertson-Cole pictures, it is said.

Fairbanks Made Director of War Savings

Recognizing the tremendous public following enjoyed by Douglas Fairbanks, Director Robert E. Smith, War Loan Organization, Twelfth Federal Reserve District, is reported to have appointed the United Artists' producing star, director of the War Savings for the Southern California zone.

Prior to making the appointment the Government official offered the screen star, it is said, the assistant directorship for the entire Twelfth Federal District, which comprises the seven States of the Pacific Coast. Owing to the great amount of time required for his studio work, Fairbanks preferred the smaller territory. He but recently finished "When the Clouds Roll By," and is now working on his third United Artists' picture.

Gouverneur Morris Gone West with Continuity

For the production of his first Eminent Authors Picture, Gouverneur Morris left New York last Sunday en route to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City with the continuity under his arm for "The Penalty," it is said. Governeur Morris has closed his estate at Bedford Hills for the winter and will spend the next six months in California. He will work at the Goldwyn studios in co-operation with the director and actors.

The Zellners' New Metro Scenario Writers

The Zellners—Arthur and Lois — have moved into offices in the administration building of the Metro studios in Hollywood and are now members of the Metro scenario staff headed by June Mathis. They are picturizuity for "Judah" and for "Shore ing "Fine Feathers" and "An Outsider", having completed the contin-Acres."

W. A. Howell Will Direct Viola Dana

W. A. Howell has been engaged to direct Viola Dana in the Screen Classics, Inc., production of the comedy, "Eliza Comes to Stay." Mr. Howell left the legitimate stage in 1910 to start producing comedies. He originated the Falstaff comedy series, which was issued for three years.

Jottings From The Coast

King W. Vidor has begun the filming of "The Battle of Youth," which is to be his first picture for the First National, at 6642 Santa Monica Boulevard. During the past week he has had his Cameraman, I. H. Morgan and Location Man, Carrol C. Owen, looking over locations along the Sacramento River in Northern California where many of the scenes will be filmed. A crew of technical men have erected settings in the vicinity of Sunland, California where another portion of the picture will be filmed.

Among the more prominent of those associated with Vidor are the following: I. H. Morgan, cinematographer; R. A. Gausman, assistant director; Homer H. Hobson, technical director; William Parker and Agnes Parsons, Scenario Department; Wendell C. Willson, office manager; R. L. Collmer, Carrol C. Owen and Myrtle C. Reauveau.

Robert Bradbury, who is responsible for the story and production and direction of the first of a film titled "Hollyhocks," is now engaged in editing the picture which will be released as a Bradbury production. This subject features Edward Hearn and Patricia Palmer, and includes Gertrude Claire and William F. Moran as principals. The subject was made by the Mitchell Lewis productions.

This company has also organized a comedy producing unit which will make Clark productions, they being directed by Frank Howard Clark and feature Billy Brunton. These are to be of a polite farcical nature and each consists of two reels. The first has been titled "Monocled," and is from an English sketch. Interiors and exteriors are being made at a beautiful mansion in Brentwood Park.

The first subject filmed by the Alkire Producing Company titled "An Ace in the Hole," and starring Joseph Bennett, was given a view by a number of well-known men of the trade at Clunes Broadway in the morning of December 22. This six-reel comedy features a number of aeroplane flying stunts.

The most recent co-operative organization of the west coast film colony is that of the Motion Picture Art Directors' Association which is now composed of more than forty Art Directors connected with practically all of the local studios. The officers elected are: R. H. McCray, Vitagraph, President; R. E. Sibley, Lois Weber, Vice-President; E. C. Hartley, Universal, Secretary; Sidney Ullman, Metro, Treasurer. Quarters for the new organization have been secured at the DeHennasy Art Studios at the corner of Santa Monica Boulevard and Vermont Avenue. The new organization has already begun the collection of a library and at their bi-weekly meetings will discuss problems that confront the Art Directors in their studio work. Meetings are held the first and third Thursday of each month.

The first three releases of Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven for the Paramount-Artcraft program have been completed and titled. These are "Teasing the Soil," "Hoodooed" and "In Spring." All were produced under the direction of Charles Parrott, and are from scenarios by Bennett Cohen, Robert MacGowan and Keene Thompson.

General Manager, Isadore Bernstein, has announced the policy of the National Film Corporation of America for the coming year will be to use only stories by American authors and having American settings and the first of the "America First" films will be "Mary Minds Her Business," which was written by George Weston and appeared in the Ladies Home Journal.

Flanagan and Edwards, featured comedians, of the Hallroom Boys series of two reel comedies with their director Harry Edwards, will go to San Francisco within the next few days where they will spend two or three weeks making exterior scenes for comedies which are to be finished at the National Studios in Hollywood. One week of the comedians' stay in the north, they will make appearance every evening at the Strand theatre where their pictures are being shown.

One more week of scene taking will be necessary for the second Clara Kimball Young release for the Equity organization. This picture is "The Forbidden Woman" adapted from the story of the same name by Lenore J. Coffee. Harry Garson, General Manager of the Garson Studios, where this picture is being filmed, is also serving in the capacity of Director, and has assembled a notable cast, who are playing in support of Miss Young. Conway Tearle is leading man, and the principals of the cast are Jiquel Lanoe, Heffron Adams, Winter Hall, Milla Davenport, Stanton Williams and John MacKinnon.

More than three hundred people took part in the scene made on "The Big Small Town Bet" at the Thomas Ince Studios, built especially for the Charlie Ray picture, "Homer Comes Home." This is from an original story by Agnes Christine Johnson. It is now expected that it will require Director Jerome Storm a few days of the new year to complete this film, and following that Ray will leave the Thomas Ince Company to become a producer for the First National.

Director Fred Niblo has a cast which includes Lloyd Hughes as leading man, Wade Botelar, Lucile Young, Edith York and Golden Mullen in support of Miss Bennett in the C. Gardner Sullivan story, "The Man in the Moon." Production on this film was started about a week ago. It has been found necessary for the Irwin Irvin-Willat-Hobart Bosworth-Ince Company to return to Catalina Island for the making of additional under-sea scenes for "Below the Surface." The company spent three weeks there, but because of heavy sea, it was found the films would practically all have to be retaken.

—Last Week We Met—

E. E. Fulton

E. E. Fulton

LEST good natured Mr. Fulton doubt our word after reading the caption to this column we should say that it was really several weeks ago that we had the fortune to spend some hours with him, his sons and their plant in Chicago.

After listening to an account of the various professions in which Mr. Fulton has had a part, one sort of wonders how he happened to arrive finally in the M. P. supply house business when he could have gone into so many more that should be more interesting. It must have been the hand of Fate plus a good bit of hard work, for he is oday one of the most successful supply men in the industry.

E. E. Fulton was born in Canton, Ohio, along back in 1861. After graduating from high school in Washington, Indiana, where his folks had migrated he took up telegraphy with the Western Union, later being sent all over the country on special assignments.

Leaving matters electrical for a while he entered the hay-and-grain business and gained a prestige which caused him to be known as the "Corn King of the Miami Valley." This title was helped along by the notoriety attendant to a shipment of corn aggregating some two and a half million bushels, which was the largest single consignment from that section of the corn belt.

Unfortunately a disastrous fire stepped in at this point and destroyed the wonderful business which he had built up. In order to show that he was not in the down and out class, "E. E." went straightway and married the girl he had in mind for some time.

Since that time Mr. Fulton has been engaged in several business ventures, including a grain brokerage, publisher of a trade journal, manufacturer of wire fence material and bale ties, also hay implements. In 1906 he went with the Enterprise Optical Co. as office manager. During his stay here the business broadened out and the Motiograph became one of the factors in the projector world.

In reality Mr. Fulton has been in the supply business only since 1911, when he leased some floor space at Lake and LaSalle streets, in Chicago. Under his skillful guidance the Fulco factory has expanded until today it either makes or handles every important piece of theatre equipment. Mr. Fulton is extremely fortunate in having three sons who have natural inclinations for the same kind of work. Thus the E. E. Fulton Co. finds it unnecessary to go outside the family for talent along any of the executive and manufacturing lines. And what is more strange than this is the astonishing fact that the quartet acts in perfect harmony with the "old man" as the boss.

But—all the boys say that "E. E. is a corking good man to work for." Could there be a better testimonial from one's working force?

W. R. Rutledge

HERE is another man who heard the call of motion pictures while working in another industry, followed a "hunch" and is now riding to a success with an idea of his own.

For a number of years, W. R. Rutledge was employed in the construction department of the General Electric Company. He put in several years in setting up G-E apparatus on the Pacific Coast, in Australia, South Africa, China, Japan, England and Canada.

Saying "good-bye" to the construction game, he was appointed chief engineer of the Central Minnesota Power Company located in Minneapolis. After a while at that position he became general manager and chief engineer of the Southern Minnesota Power Co. In these two positions of importance Mr. Rutledge spent the best part of 10 years. In the year previous to our entry into the war, he transferred his affections to the Northwest Utilities Co., of Mankato and Chicago, holding the same position as with the Southern Minnesota Power Co.

If we remember rightly he spent considerable time during 1917 and 1918 in Government work as consulting electrical engineer. Putting more energy into his work than his constitution could stand he was invalided home for a much needed rest and was about ready to return when the armistice was put across.

It was while he was at home recuperating that he became interested in Mazda projection. To his mind there seemed to be no facilities for the conversion of the carbon arc lamphouse into one to use the incandescent equipment. His years of experience in the electrical field had taught him what to look for in the correct equipment, so he spent six months doing it. He investigated every angle of Mazda projection until he was satisfied that he had the right grasp on all problems involved. Incidentally, during these investigations he convinced himself that the Mazda lamp as a source of light for the projector was here to stay. Then he designed the Project-A-Lite equipment to fulfill the necessary requirements.

W. R. Rultedge

At the present time Mr. Rutledge has control of the production and sale of the new Project-A-Lite transformer for reducing current to proper voltage and regulating it to proper amperage to insure accurate results with Mazda projection. He considers the adapter and the transformer as his own enterprise.

In talking over the general motion picture situation, it could be seen that Mr. Rutledge was decidedly an optimist. He believes sincerely in the future of the motion picture and, naturally, that the theatre of the future will be a distant cousin of the carbon arc but a very close relation of the Mazda lamp. Anyway, he can easily prove that his equipments are "getting across" in fine style and that is satisfactory enough when it is considered that they have been on the market but a short time.

NEWS ITEMS OF THE WEEK

THAT MAN HARRY HAKILU LUCAS of Atlanta, Georgiah, sir, has a personal follow-up system that beats the mails. A week ago we received a circular letter from him, which listed about seventeen hundred and eleven items in stock. The day following Marse Lucas showed up himself, merely, as he put it, to clinch the argument. He did.

AND BY THE WAY, you patrons of Lucas in Georgia and vicinity, just ask Harry about that "Shrinking Viollette" he purchased on Broadway. The story is worth a good cigar any day in the week.

CARBON BILL KUNZMAN hoisted his flag last week in Milwaukee. The boy is considerable of a scene shifter. First it is in Texas and then in Canada. But wherever he goes perhaps he doesn't make 'em love National Carbons.

WE AGREE with you, Bill, on those ads your home office is inserting in the NEWS. They could only be improved by having more of 'em.

Equipment Operating Projection, Questions Answered

The Transverter—What it is' How it Works How it Differs from Others, and What it Does

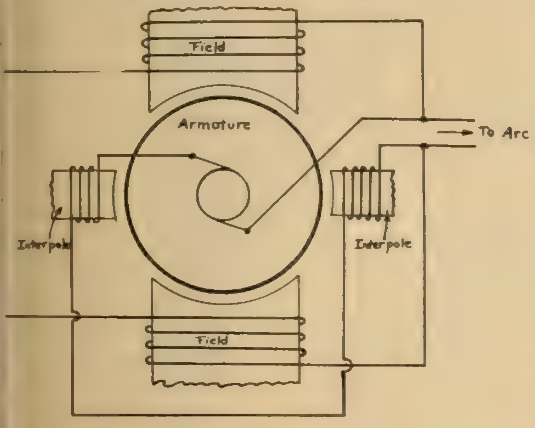
A simple diagram will illustrate the principal onnections and general layout of a bi-polar shunt ound commutating pole type generator.



. 2. Wiring Diagram of Transverter showing relation of Main Field and Interpoles

Results obtained are not due to these particular onnections alone, but to the perfect balance of all ie elements entering into the construction of the onstant current generator. In addition to the conections themselves is the kind of material, the proortionate amount used in the several parts of the achine and the adjustment of one element in retion to the other. Final results are dependent pon the machine running at the speeds intended or the different loads. This latter is taken care f automatically if the unit is used on the AC ipply line service—i. e., proper voltage, frequency nd phase, for which it is built.

An examination of the transverter would show iat instead of having the interpoles placed at the o-called "neutral point" which is half-way beveen the two main poles, they are built so as to be djustable as to position. But the adjustment of iese poles is a very delicate matter and should ot be attempted by the projectionist. Their adistment plays a delicate part in the successful opation of the machine being the sole means of king care of commutation, and at the same time etermining the volt-ampere characteristics of the achine.

The position of these interpoles must not be ianged.

The exact function of interpoles in the operation f any generator will not be told here, but will be eated in another article because the explanation ould be a lengthy one going deep into the theory f induction and commutation. Moreover, this is general description of a definite machine and oes not call for a detailed analysis of its design.

What takes place inside the generator when arcs e manipulated will be discussed at length when ie details of the test are given, later on in the ticle.

VENTILATION

Transverters built prior to December, 1917, were uipped with a propeller type fan. In later maiines the fan is of the centrifugal type, providing rculation of air in greater quantity and greater locity. The fan draws fresh air through both the nerator and motor and discharges the heated r through the four slots about midway the height of the machine. Certain operation of the centrifugal fan is assured by its fastening to the coupling. As th diagram shows, the fan is set between the two halves of the couplings and keyed thereto by the same key that locks together motor and generator shafts. This new system of ventilation is much superior to the old, both in its mechanical features and in the results of its operation. This better ventilation means cooler operation without otherwise affecting the performance or rating of the machine, thus insuring longer life of the apparatus.

The main argument against any vertical machine has been the question of bearings. The horizontal machine by lengthening its bearings surfaces could be made to support practically any load without overheating. But the vertical machine is not thus favored. The entire weight of the rotating elements must rest on either a bottom bearing or be supported from the top bearing. One bearing must bear all or nearly all the weight of the rotating parts.

In the case of the Transverter a special self-aligning ball thrust bearing is provided in the machine for this purpose. It is stated that this thrust bearing has a load carrying capacity several times greater than any normal load that it will have to carry. Above this thrust bearing is an annular bearing which centers the lower end to the rotor shaft. There is a similar annual bearing in the center section, and a third at the top of the generator armature shaft. These three annular bearings hold the rotating parts in perfect alignment at all times.

Grease cups are provided for all the bearings. Care must be taken as to the quality of grease with which the cups are filled. An excellent grade of grease is supplied by the manufacturers, and this should be secured and used whenever possible. An inferior quality of grease and even some of the better grades may contain a trace of acid or elements which in time will form acid, thus damaging the polished surface of the ball races to such an extent that renewals of the bearing will be necessary.

CONTROL PANELS

There are two control panels which have been devised for use with the Transverter, known as Panel A and Panel B. The former uses the same arc control switches that come with the projection machine and generally mounted on it. The other panel is equipped with two single pole switches to take the place of, or supplement, those on the projector. With the exception of the switches, the panels are identical in instrument layout and connections. The manufacturers recommend the use of Panel A wherever possible, hence our description will be based on this panel.

Panel "A" as shown in the illustration is equipped with an ammeter, a voltmeter and a generator field regulator. The front face of this panel is 12" x 14" and 6" in depth. Inside the panel and operated from the outside is the generator field rheostat, which is used to regulate the current, the generator will furnish to the arcs. A current of only one ampere or less flows through this rheostat, which means that a negligible amount of energy is wasted. A relay for protecting the field coils of the generator in case the circuit through the lamps is opened is also provided. The contacts of this relay are so arranged that when the field current increases above that necessary for the generator voltage of 150 volts, the entire resistance of generator field rheostat is inserted in the generator field circuit, thereby making it impossible for the field coils to be subjected to a voltage greater than that for which they are designed, thus preventing any possible damage to these field coils.

As soon as the arc is struck the relay contacts close and short circuit the part of the resistance not used in regulation of the amperes passing through the arc.

So much for the general description of the machine and the details of its manufacture. From the foregoing description it will be a simpler matter to follow the tests which were carried out.

We will now assume that the transverter under test has been run under load for the required time.

The connections used in this test were shown in Fig. 4, the only difference between the usual line up for motion picture projection, and for the test being in the insertion of meters in the a. c. lines.

After the over all efficiency was determined, the next step was the test for volt-ampere characteristics of the generator or what is known as the "generator performance curves."

First, the field rheostat was set to give 50 amps. at 55 volt, or for normal voltage at normal load. The load was then gradually increased without changing the settings of the field rheostat. Consequently as the current output varied the voltage varied with it. At each change in load, volts and amperes were measured. The results are given in the first column below. (To be continued)

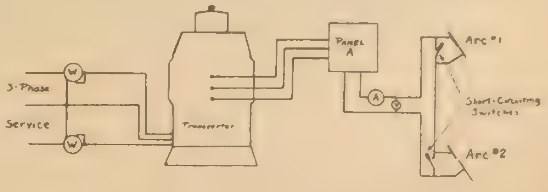

Fig. 4. Test Connections

Well Known Men in New Equipment Firm

Julian Speer W. H. Rabell

A NEW firm under the name of the Matthews Lighting Company has recently been incorporated with offices at 844 Seventh Avenue, New York City. Mr. W. H. Rabell is president of the corporation and Julian Speer, secretary. Both men are well known to the motion picture trade, particularly in and around the New York district. The Matthews Lighting Company will handle individual lighting sets for farm, home and theatre use, besides having the agency for some of the foremost motion picture equipment.

Mr. Rabell, the president, is owner and manager of the Independent Movie Supply Co., located in the Film Building. He entered the motion picture field about 14 years ago, remaining but a short time, then left to take up the work for which he was trained, that of an expert accountant. During his career as a chartered accountant Rabell audited accounts of the largest manufacturers in the country as well as those of the leading insurance companies.

Later he entered the employ of J. H. Hallberg and worked there for several years.

In March, 1917, Mr. Rabell started the Independent Movie Supply Co. with its line of Imsco products. He had a floor space in the beginning of but 250 sq. ft. At the present time his establishment covers an area of 5,500 sq. ft. with a payroll of 16 employees.

In addition to his usual duties as manager of the supply house, Rabell has designed and brought out various pieces of equipment and supplies, including carbon economizers, engine generating sets, film cement, projector oil and stereopticons.

During the Fourth Liberty Loan Mr. Rabell conceived the idea of using incandescent lamp equipments mounted on trucks and operated by Imsco engine generator sets. There were 14 these trucks in constant nightly use and thro their attention-drawing powers it is estimated t they were the means of selling $700,000,000 in bo of that issue.

Besides his New York office Mr. Rabell branched out into foreign fields until at the pres time has foreign distributors in India, China, Si Siberia, Russia and Australia.

Julian Speer, the secretary and manager of firm, is a graduate of Carnegie Institute Technology and has spent most of his time si then in the employ of the General Electric Co pany.

After graduation, Mr. Speer entered a sh career as an Exhibitor in his home town of F Wayne, being one of the first to operate a moti picture theatre in that vicinity. For two years continued as a theatre owner and manager duri which time he worked on and patented seve devices connected with motion pictures. One of t most successful of these devices was a film ren vator, the first of its kind. A number of these m chines are in active use in exchanges today. Si that time many other similar machines have ma their appearance but none that were of grea adaptability.

Leaving the theatre business Mr. Speer engag in the selling of automobiles which were then j coming to the fore. Only a year was spent in t work before he was called to the Fort Way Works of the General Electric Company to ta charge of the new department on motion pictu apparatus. His new work entailed a trip throug out the country with the idea of selling as ma compensares as possible. This required two and half years. He then was called to the New Yo Office of the same firm and has been there up to t time he left to become one of the partners in t Matthews Lighting Company.

Mr. Speer is known throughout the theatre tra in the New York District as an expert on moti picture electrical equipment, and all his friends this line will be glad to learn of his new and a vantageous connection.

O. W. Jastrum, Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill., writes:

"Well, I am glad to see that my recent letter to you in regard to advancement of 'small town' men has found some response. I knew there were many others who were anxious to get out of the small town class, if they could. And likewise I want friend E. H. Lilley to know that I have seen his article and appreciate his appreciation. Haven't any owners 'come to' enough yet to reply—or don't they read the News? From their attitude on small town affairs you might imagine them trying to get along without your paper—and 'get along' is about all they would do.

"As to conditions around here: Fair in small towns, but higher rentals threatening to put us on the bum. It is the absolute truth that we cannot pay more and make anything in smaller places near here. Rockford, Illinois, has three big shows.

"Ascher's Midway, excellent music, including a large pipe organ and 14-piece orchestra; pictures are good, including Select, some Paramount, Goldwyn, and specials, etc. Projection I would call poor, as we have much better here in my own little 250-seat house. Of course, they have an exceedingly long throw, but poor light and irritating jump in pictures at times. Expect something from a 2,000-seat palace, you know. I would rank it second of the three, considering all things.

"Orpheum is primarily an exponent of Fox pictures and specials. A nice place (formerly vaudeville), large stage, settings changed three times a year whether they need it or not. Maybe a small town manager would put that stage to use—but not so with their manager. They have a very good orchestra, from five to seven pieces, fine projection. But—all seven orchestra lights are about five feet from floor, on the edge of the stage, and shine directly in your eyes as you watch the picture. It's a pleasure when they turn them out for their rest period, although you hate to miss the music, too. Another little (?) thing overlooked by a big town manager. But at that, I believe the Orpheum comes first—especially in their advertising, although they verge toward the suggestive at times, especially on 'Girl Of My Dreams' and 'The Woman Michael Married.'

"The Palm is the third, and in one way the best. It has a quiet, restful air about it that neither of the others possesses. You know what I mean—that forget-your-worries and keep-cool atmosphere that is so hard to get. But the projection is mighty poor, mainly because they do not use enough juice, I guess. Steady and evenly illuminated, but so dim that in tinted scenes you can hardly see from the center of the house (1,200 seats) and their music is poor—nothing but a pipe organ, and an old one at that. In good shape, but tiresome for a steady diet. With an improvement in projection and music, the Palm would lead the bunch, according to my ideas. Paramount mainly, with Pathe and good specials.

"As I try to see every picture before I run it, I visit these three shows a good deal, and if I was to make any changes as a new manager, I'd be guided by the above. Just a few things that slipped by someone or else neglected.

"All shows appear to be doing mighty good business, and have right along, probably due to Camp Grant being located there.

"This time you can publish my name if you want to, and I'll be glad to hear from Brother Lilley or anyone else who wants to get up and get on in this game. Maybe we can help each other or start a National Association of Peppy Small-Town Pushers, or some such organization!"

Comment:

Very glad to get your report on conditions in your territory, even though you do rap some of your houses pretty violently. However, it is sometimes good for a man to see himself as others see him.

It is a fact that many managers have not been waked up to the importance of auditorium and stage decorations and settings. This seems impossible when one considers the space that trade papers have given to this subject. Although it may not be so in the case of the Orpheum, it is generally a fact that any manager who neglects such items as orchestra lights, obsolete stage settings, etc., has an eye only on the box office of today, forg ting that he should be building for an even lar attendance tomorrow. It all goes to show that the poor showmen aren't in the towns.

We haven't heard from Lilley since that ot letter. Perhaps after reading this reply of yo he will come to life again. We hope so, a way.

Camera! An Article on the "How" and "Why" of Practical Cinematography

Explaining Many of the Technical Problems of the Assistant Cameraman

By William Barbarin Laub

ARTISTIC SENSE AND DRAMATIC INTUITION

It has been said that every cameraman should have some knowledge of art but while that might be of some value I think that it is enough to merely possess an artistic sense and appreciation.

It wouldn't hurt you a bit to know something about composition for some day, all directors may leave this to the cameraman.

It is the selection of the most artistic and beautiful subjects in backgrounds principally and the manner in which you treat and "place" the subject. The general rule in still photography, especially in landscape or waterscape work is to balance the picture; that is, not too much sky, not too much land and no preponderance of anything unless it is something to be emphasized. Composition which emphasizes an object is obtained by observing rules of suggestion as for example; we might be distracted from the picture of a very beautiful tree by a road which "tracks" our eye and makes us think of everything else but that tree. But composition in motion picture work is subordinate to one rule, namely, that the photographer always has a reason for making a picture. All other parts of the picture should be subordinate to the central idea the scene is to convey.

In all work, the artistic cameraman uses light just as an artist wields his brush and he can do just as much with his subject. The lighting of a face, for example, produces the "coloring" and shading essential to effects of beauty and often in close-up work, a wide angle lens thrown just a hairs-breath out of focus towards the film and used with a stop tending to slight over-exposure, will give us real portraiture effects on the screen. This "soft-focus" stuff however has been sadly overdone. It is effective and beautiful at times, but where it falls down badly is that it sometimes spoils the illusion of the picture. We see a character in a scene, everything sharp, as it should be, and then suddenly jump to a soft-focus close-up and it doesn't fit because there is no reason for it being "soft." Our minds immediately grapple with something that annoys us because it is not real and then the illusion of the picture is spoiled.

Study any portrait or painting of great beauty and you will find it entirely possible to secure the same light effects and composition with a motion picture camera. One of the most beautiful scenes the writer has even seen was the introduction to Joan d'Arc in a well known historical drama. It was typically Millet, a glimpse of a road, sunlet in places, shadowed by bordering trees in others and a flock of sheep with their shepherdess in their midst.

Nothing could be of more value to a cameraman than a visit to a public art gallery and a study of the reproductions (or originals of famous painters' works).

In general interior work, there is always an opportunity in every case to obtain artistic and natural effects. How would this room in reality be lighted. We should ask ourselves, or the technical director if we are not sure. If it is night, would there be brilliant flood light, dim gas light or soft shaded lights as from modern electric fixtures? Get the effect that should be there and then insist on the proper tinting in the positive film to complete your work. If it is daytime, any light effect should have a natural scource, for nothing is more inartistic than to see a character with a beam of sunlight playing through her hair when we know that it would have to penetrate thick walls to reach her. Directors of prison scenes please note.

The young cameraman should not feel discouraged upon being told that motion picture work in the future is going to demand photographers who are also directors and directors who are also photographers. But it is, and we are getting to it more and more all the time. In addition, the director of tomorrow is going to be a dramatist also, and more creative than in the past. Possibly he will be the man who can write his own scripts and he will be recruited from the ranks of the writers; all of which sets a higher mark for cinematographers if they are to stay abreast of the industry.

There are few really big directors today who don't know quite a bit about photography and the really successful cameraman is the man who also knows something about dramatic construction.

The real cameraman today is taking the place of the assistant director of yesterday who is now, a director's assistant, attending to details of business etc. It is the camera-director now who watches the minor people in a scene while he photographs it, discovers slips that the director, intent on his star, cannot see and makes the most helpful suggestions on getting over dramatic points that come up for question. He is the man who is asked by the director and the star if a certain bit of action "got over" and he can helpfully describe his impression of it because he has the intelligence to constructively criticize drama.

Naturally he is also competent to assist in cutting the picture and assembling it which is really "writing" with the scissors.

More successful pictures have been "built" out of miles of film with a pair of scissors and a bottle of film cement than have even been turned out of a scenario writer's typewriter. But alas, this has mainly been no fault of the writers. Their scripts have not always been followed and their subtlety is frequently lost in the direction of a scene.

Now do you realize why the field of successful cinematographers will never be crowded? We know of about two dozen men whom our description of a real cameraman will fit, though there may possibly be others. After all, many will say; our job is to get the stuff, and it is enough to do that, for many do not always get it. True, but why not be worth a bigger salary check?

ARTIFICIAL LIGHTING

It is almost impossible to give any hard and fast rules for lighting interior scenes. But every light used in motion picture studios is placed on a set with some definite purpose. It may be flood light, top light, side illumination and sun or moonlight effect. The lights used in studios are of two varieties, arc and mercury vapor tubes, usually constructed in banks, containing eight or a dozen tubes. The direct rays of an arc (or carbon gap light) produces hard lighting and heavy shadows, but studio arc lights are equipped with spun glass diffusers and plain ground glass diffusers which considerably soften their effect. The mercury vapor bank is a device in which the vapor of mercury is raised to incandescence by the passage of an electric current. These lights are highly actinic (That property of light which affects the sensitive surface of the film the most) rich in violet rays and are usually the foundation of all interior scene lighting. Arc lights in single and double "broadsides," "spots" and overhead domes are auxiliary lights, generally used for effects and flood lighting.

As in exterior photography, important action is emphasized or handled without distraction, but in interior work this is accomplished to a large extent with the use of lights and the shading of back-walls of a set and other unimportant things. Unless a cameraman is "tipped off" by a technical director (who is related to the big boss) that some bit of his handiwork is wanted in the picture, back and side wall of a set and its dressings are not featured. Technical directors as a rule are only too glad to have their work set forth in a picture, but unless the set has a dramatic value and a real part in the picture and does not merely provide a setting or atmosphere, it is desirable to subordinate it to the action, for shading it makes the figures of characters "stand out" and admit of better lighting effects. Besides, a set or interior scene should nover be more than atmosphere in a picture. It should be there, and not killed entirely by lack of sufficient flood light, but it should be like carefully arranged music in a motion picture theatre. We hardly realize the music is there, for it is a part of the story we are seeing, but subordinate to it always. On exterior stages and in studios where there is always considerable natural top-light from glass roofs, walls of sets have to be shaded by means of flats (oid sections of scenery) laid along the top of the set.

The lighting of a set or scene, largely depends upon the effect sought, the subject to be predominant and the space to be illuminated. Effects, such as moonlight entering a room through doors and windows are usually created with hard lights and spots.

The simplest way to tell anyone how a scene should be lighted for any particular effect is to advise their study of the same effect as nature creates it in any room. We should not try to originate such things, for nature is difficult to improve upon. What we strive to do is to imitate nature as closely as possible within photographic limitations. A room bathed in moonlight will not be lighted within by any other light, for then the light from the moon would be killed. Switch on the electric light in a moonlit room and observe that it obliterates the moonlight coming in the window. Therefore, in changing during a scene from moonlight effect to brilliant interior lighting, it is patent that we must "kill" the moonbeams, or the arcs producing them at the same instant we turn to interior lighting.

Somehow or other, in motion pictures, the moon always shines in full every night of the year. Possibly because every story has a lover or two. A character extinguishes a light in a room and instantly, moonlight fairly bursts through windows (and walls sometimes), bright enough to enable us to see his every expression. Outside, the ever-present moonlight reveals everything that goes on in exterior scenes, tinted for night effect. Real gloom now and then might add to the dramatic effect of things. With interior scenes, it is often possible to vary this order by having the actor carry a lighted match out of the set (as one does in going through a dark place) and this provides us with an excuse for keeping a small spot-light on his face. Else, the light from some source may enter the scene, as from another room, or a street lamp outside or from any natural source previously established. When we speak of previously establishing a thing of this sort we are getting into photographic dramatic construction.

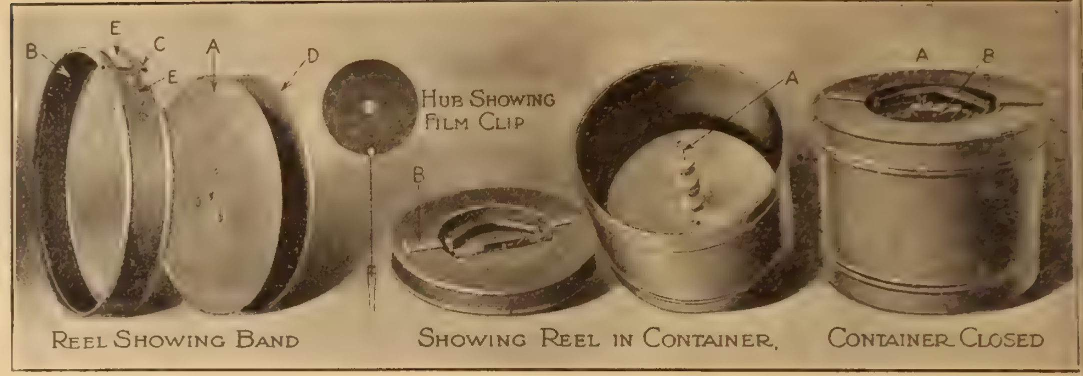
A Good Shipping Container

SOMETIME ago in these columns there was carried a story and photographs of a new film reel and container invented by Mr. A. B. Carter of Brattleboro, Vermont. At that time the new device created a lot of attention. But the inventor was not entirely satisfied with his product and set to work to improve it. This he has done. The container in its present form represents perhaps the most advanced article for use in shipping film that has been devised and put on the market. Several of the cases have been in use for some months, undergoing all the severe knocks and hard usage that film cases are subject to. And they have withstood every trial. A complete description follows.

This invention was perfected by a man of fifteen years' experience in the motion picture business, knowing the need of something to take the place of the present reels and shipping containers, which would not only protect the film to the utmost from fire, but also from wear and tear in transit, which destroys more films under the present method of shipping than the actual usage.



Reel Showing Band — Showing Reel in Container. — Container Closed

Figure 1 in the cut shows the reel of the new invention, which is especially constructed, being solid on the sides, as shown at A, with a three-inch hub for the protection of both ends of film as it equalizes the tension. About each reel runs a movable steel band (B, Figure 1), the edges of which are bent around a heavy wire (C) in such a way that when the band is placed on the reel the flared edges (D) lock behind wire (C) of band and when pressed together is caught by an extra steel snap lock shown at E-E, making in itself a strong, durable and fireproof container and reel. The method of catching film to hub is shown (Fig. 2), which is a steel spring fastened to the end of heavy tape which extends beyond the edge of reel and cannot be pulled off from hub, as the illustration shows, which is one of the big features of this reel.

Figure 3 shows reel placed in container, which is round and has a metal rod (A) made into bottom of the container through a ¼-inch steel strip such as shown on cover at B. Fig. 3 shows one reel in a four-reel container with two spools slipped on central rod, when extra precaution is to be taken in shipping one or two reels in a large container, the spools holding the reels to the bottom.

Figure 4 shows container closed with cover in place and locked. It will be noticed that the cover is sunk in the center for the purpose of protecting the handle and lock from breakage and so that containers may be stacked, as there are no projections.

The lock (A, Figure 4) consists of a split washer with a coil spring behind it and encased for pr tection when cover is in place. The split washe fits around groove of central rod at A, Fig. 3, an the spring holds same in place. To remove cove all that is necessary is to pull back on pin (I Fig. 4) which runs through split washer and in slot of cover of the lock. It is thus disengaged fro central rod and cover may be removed. It will b noticed that central rod (A, Fig. 3) extend through lock (Fig. 4), and at which point a hol is drilled in central rod for the purpose of sealin container when cover is on and locked. The con tainer is lined throughout with fibre board.

It is shown by this method of handling an shipping motion picture film each reel of film i in a separate fireproof container, and when place in shipping case, they are all in another fireproo container with an air space around each and ever reel and space for photographs or lobby displa around outside of reels, which cannot get damage in any way, no matter how rough the handling, an film is always in a fireproof case at all times excep when running or inspecting, as the name of subjec on reel and part number of film may be placed o the outside of the metal band, thereby doing awa with the paper band which is in present use, as wel as old tin cans and covers.

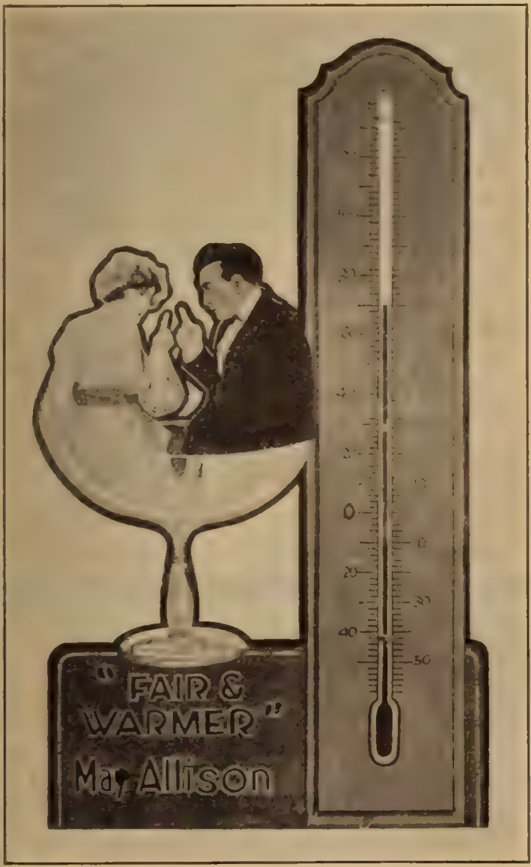
Business Boosters

THE old geezer who said there was nothing new under the sun had a bum steer. He thought he knew all about everything, but I bet he never heard of a motion picture.

But now everybody knows a lot about motion pictures, and they take them as much for granted as they do their morning grape fruit.

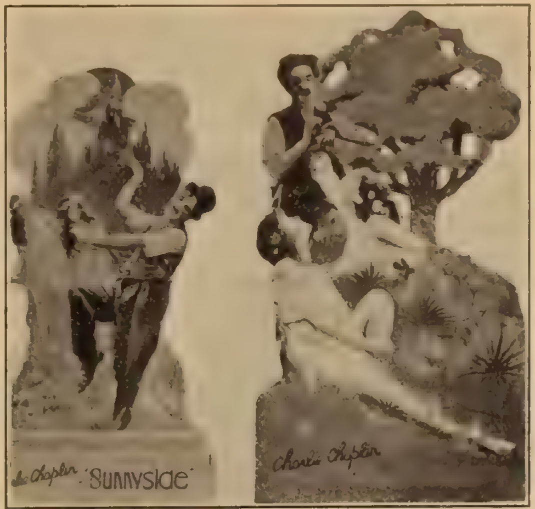
With the dawn of the motion picture industry, however, there has sprung up a lot of other industries, all of them allied to the production of motion pictures. These smaller industries are not so spectacular as the making of pictures, but they are very important to the man who has the exhibiting to do. One of the most important of these side industries is that of making signs and posters and theatre fronts to catch the eye of the passing throng and fill them with a desire to see what it's all about.



What would be the use of a producer making pictures if people did not see them? And how would the great, busy public know there were certain pictures to be seen if the sign man—the man behind the paint pot—did not so contrive to catch the eye as to excite curiosity?

There are many ways to stir up this little curiosity germ, but the surest and best way is to invoke admiration. Get something different. Either in size or color or effort. Above all things, let the signs used in connection with a photoplay fit the photoplay which it is announcing.

It is just six years since A. F. Luthi felt that there was a great, unploughed field in the picture business, waiting for someone to steer the plough. In fact, the call was so great that Luthi threw over a very lucrative position as expert accountant to a large local firm, in order to prove that he was right. He rented space in a small down-town store. He went out and got a job to make a sign for some nickle show, and then he went to his desk and made up the sign. He delivered it himself when it was done, too. And if he got fifty cents for the sign when it was done, he counted himself lucky.



But six years makes a lot of difference. And just as the picture business has advanced by leaps and bounds during that time, so have its attendant industries kept stride with it, until now the B. B. Sign Manufacturing Company is one of the best known purveyors of picture posters in this territory, supplying advertising material to exhibitors from one end of the state to the other.

"B. B." isn't anybody's initials. It stands for Business Boosters. And that's just what the B. B. Sign Manufacturing Company is. It boosts the other fellow's business. It is the great link between the public and the exhibitor.

There are many people making signs and posters to be used in connection with the exhibition of motion pictures. But Mr. Luthi claims to be the first man in Ohio to enter the business, and it is his proud boast that he and his army of workers have always aimed to bring motion pictures into high moral favor.

Mr. Luthi says that every B. B. poster and theatre front must be elevating. That is the first requirement. They must be artistic. They must reflect the spirit of the picture which they advertise, and they must be original. That's a pretty big order, but Luthi and the men who work with him don't think it too big for them. And when they get a special front all worked out for a special production, they don't peddle it around and cheapen it. After it has served its purpose they keep it as a sort of artistic memorial.

Here is a sample of the kind of work the B. B. Sign Manufacturing Company turns out. The Nazimova poster with the mushroom and the bunnies was immensely popular in Ohio. Mounted on board, and hand painted, it was a beautiful lobby display. And classy, too. The Ben Turpin poster was another big hit. It was all made in the B. B. Sign Manufacturing Company's shop. The tree, and the background was painted in by hand, by the company's special artist, Mr. Miller. The eyes were transparent. They were made of celluloid. And when a light was placed behind them, they sure did flash. The "Sunnyside" display is another sample of the work done by this progressive organization, showing what a strong factor originality is in the make-up of a poster. The girls in the big group were all assembled from other posters, and arranged in a graceful position. At least two of the girls in the one "Sunnyside" poster were taken from one sheets. But the third one was drawn in by Mr. Miller to complete the group.

Mr. Luthi says there are two distinct objects for him to pursue in his business. One is co-operation with the exhibitor. The other is the exploitation of ideas. And he hit on a simple, unique and effective method of succeeding in these pursuits. He gets the help of the exhibitors themselves. There are half a dozen prominent Cleveland motion picture exhibitors who act on a sort of advisory board for the B. B. Sign Manufacturing Company. Emery Downs, manager of the Knickerbocker; Tom Carroll, manager of the Standard; and Bill Friedman, manager of the Metropolitan, are a few who bring in their ideas to Luthi and Miller, who try them out, and adopt them if they prove practicable. C. E. Almy, local Metro manager, is another active worker on the advisory board and has offered many valuable suggestions.

"There's nobody knows more about the exhibition of motion pictures than the exhibitor," says Luthi. "So why shouldn't he have a voice in the manner in which pictures should be exploited?

"It's harmony that makes for big success in this world," Mr. Luthi went on to say. "Harmony between individuals. Harmony between industries. Harmony between the various branches of the same industry, and harmony in the application of one to the other. We try to have all of our posters and displays harmonize with the pictures that they represent, and by having faithfully followed these precepts we feel that we have rightfully earned our name of 'Business Boosters' to the motion picture exhibitors."

New Office Opened for Typhoon Fans

THE Typhoon Fan Company, in order to give its large number of customers in the Central States quicker and better service, has opened an office at 64 W. Randolph street, Chicago, in charge of John P. Gleason, who for three years has been the company's representative in this territory and Thomas R. Wilson, formerly chief ventilation engineer of the Health Department of the City of Chicago.

The Typhoon Fan Company at present is installing their ventilating systems in the Pantheon, the New Panacea theatre at Kedzie and Madison and the New Stratford theatre at Sixty-third and Unity street, Chicago, as well as in a number of moving picture theatres in the nearby territory, and have just closed a contract with B. S. Shanberg of Kansas City, Mo., to install the Typhoon system in the big theatre he is erecting at Hutchinson, Kansas.

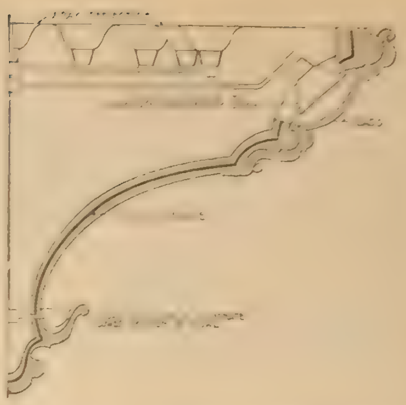
Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, at present is looking over installations in New Orleans and is expected to make a visit to the new Chicago offices this week.

An Excellently Lighted Theatre

REPORTS from new theatres clearly indicate that owners are paying a great deal of attention to interior lighting. Manufacturers of lighting fixtures realize the factors to be considered in theatre illumination as is shown by specific instances that have come to view.

The New Palace Hippodrome in Milwaukee is an example of perfect lighting. In this theatre the lighting fixtures were considered—and properly so—as a part of the decorative scheme, carrying out the period of the design which was used by the architect throughout the building, thus harmonizing lighting arrangements and interior.

The large central fixture is twelve feet in diameter and eight feet deep. The fixture is made of composition reinforced with steel lath and conceals twenty-seven specially designed X-Ray reflectors for indirect lighting. Each reflector contains a 500-watt Mazda C lamp.



The lower portion of the fixture contains eight 60-watt Mazdas which are wired on a separate circuit. The lower lamps light the under portion of the fixture and will give a dim light throughout the auditorium at the time the pictures are on the screen. This arrangement is explained more fully by the cross section sectional view of the fixture.

Dwyer Bros. Predict Great Year

THE Dwyer Bros. & Co., who are the Simplex Distributors for Southern Ohio and Kentucky, are among the pioneers to handle the Simplex Machine, which dates back to 1912, both Leo E. Dwyer and Fred P. Dwyer are very well known among the trade, due to their fair treatment with their customers, which accounts for them having a countless number of Simplex machines in their territory.

Their offices are located at 631 Walnut street, Cincinnati, Ohio, which is in the central part of the city, they are able to furnish equipment for the theatre from one end to the other, they also maintain a well equipped Repair Department, which is in charge of Mr. Geo. E. Raywood, a resident of Cincinnati, and who has many marks to his credit for his expert repairing.

Mr. Leo E. Dwyer was in charge of the Projection at the recent Columbus, Ohio Methodist Centenary, at which time he produced the largest picture the world has ever known. Simplex machines and Extralight Shutters were used.

In connection with Theatre Equipment, The Dwyer Bros. & Co. manufacture D-B Theatre Chair Covers, which are patented.

How to Play "The Broken Melody," a Selznick Picture

THERE is no necessity to emphasize the fact that music for the Photoplay is as essential as good projection, especially for Photoplays where music is the basic foundation of the plot. In such a case it is absolutely necessary that consideration be given to the musical accompaniment.

"The Broken Melody," the film production for which the following music cue is intended, is in the strictest sense of the word a narrative based on the famous song bearing the same name. The song entitled "The Broken Melody" is employed several times throughout the picture, and in every instance it designates an important phase of the continuity, or is featured in close-ups as a vocal solo, or solo for cello. It is therefore important that the following instructions be carried out.

"The Broken Melody," song by Van Biene, should be played as Cue No. 1, in order to specifically indicate its relation to the picture. Cue No. 3 is a scene in which Stuart Grant is (to be exact) demonstrating his love to his girl, Hedda. At the same time, we see a close-up of Ivan playing "The Broken Melody" on his cello. The lovers listen to his wonderful playing until the end of the song, which is accompanied by the following verse:—

"A still sweet joy for just a little while
Then going—then forgetting. Then
In slow monotony of days that come and go."

This verse proves to be of great significance to the lovers. It is therefore very important that Cue No. 3 be played as a cello solo.

Cue No. 4 is a rehearsal of a musical comedy show—a comic opera extract played as a piano solo is the only proper accompaniment for this scene.

Cue No. 7, Hedda, the girl is singing a song of love—"Why?", a beautiful ballad song by Sol P. Levy is very appropriate.

Cue No. 10, Ivan is playing his composition, "The Broken Melody" on his cello and Hedda is singing the song. A back stage effect of a soprano solo with cello accompaniment is the perfect musical accompaniment for this scene.

Cue No. 13, Hedda is again singing the song, but without cello accompaniment.

Cue No. 15—it is essential that the Theme be played for this cue as a vocal solo with a piano accompaniment.

Cue No. 36—the Theme, "The Broken Melody," should be played ff with full orchestra, in "Tempo Pomposo," in form of a grand musical finale for the picture.

By carefully following the above instructions Exhibitors will insure a perfect showing of this excellent production, and will thereby place themselves in a position to give their patrons double value for their money. A wonderful picture, coupled with an excellent concert.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Nobody Knows and Nobody Seems to Care," a one step, said to be the greatest melody in years. (Irving Berlin.)

2—"Smile, Dear," by Henry Gebel, a newly acquired fox trot in the Catalog of Shapiro & Bernstein.

3—"Where Lanterns Glow," a fox trot with the proper tempo. (Forster Pub. Co.)

4—"Patches," a new fox trot by Lee S. Roberts. It has a beautiful melody, character sentiment and enough pep. (G. Schirmer.)

5—"Love's Enchantment," by Irene Varley, Intermezzo D'Amour adaptable for picture playing. (Belwin, Inc.)

6—"In Your Arms," a ballad fox trot. (Richmond Pub.)

7—"Dramatic Allegro," by Christopher O'Hara, for wild west, mining town and ranch scenes. (Oliver Ditson.)

8—"In China," by Otto Metzan, a much talked of fox trot. (A. J. Stasny.)

9—"I Know What It Means To Be Lonesome," a waltz by Kendis, Brockman and Vincent. Arranged as a fox trot for Orchestra only. (Leo Feist.)

10—"Budding Spring," Romance Moderato by Eugene Platzman, a composition suitable for scenes of light character. (Belwin, Inc.)

11—"Because You Say Good-bye," a Concert Ballad, which won its way into the hearts of the people, because of its heart rending appeal. (Belwin, Inc.)

He Bought the Organ
Because of the Service

The other day the manager of a chain of moving picture theatres came to Brattleboro to buy an Estey Theatre Organ for a new theatre he was about to erect. He said that he already had several organs of different makes in his different theatres, but they were not satisfactory, because he did not get the service necessary to keep them running. He had heard that the Estey Organ Company gave this service, and on this basis he placed his order.

What that man had heard is true. The service is a part of what you buy when you install an Estey Organ in your theatre. The organ is as good as we can make it, and in addition to that it is accompanied by service promptly available when required.

"GREAT AIR ROBBERY"

Specially selected and compiled by M. Winkler
The timing is based on a speed limit of 14 minutes per reel (1,000 ft.)

Theme: "Half Reel Hurry," Levy

MUSICIAN'S NOTE:

The character of this picture is a modern up-to-date dramatic love story. Practically the entire film is based on a love story between several aviation officers. Most of the action is portrayed on aviation fields and up in the air. Spectacular aeroplane flights and stunts are produced throughout the entire picture, and from a musical standpoint, 90 per cent of this film is 4/4 Allegro, with propeller effects.

The compiler of this music cue, therefore, suggests that musicians be very careful in handling this subject, as it very often happens that scenes flash from an exciting aeroplane hunt, 5,000 feet in the air, to the quietness of the boudoir, of the girl they love.

The entire picture necessitates synchronization in the strictest sense of the word, and very often galops will have to be played pianissimo and slow numbers, tempo allegro for the reason that scenes are so rapidly changed, that a change in music is a technical impossibility.

"The Chilkat Cubs"

(Educational-Bruce Scenic—One Reel)

THIS Robert Bruce scenic takes the spectator to Alaska, particularly to that part of it known as the Chilkat Pass. Here it was in '98 that the gold-rushers took the easiest way to the interior of the country. It bordered the Chilkat River and so widely was it traveled that vegetation ceased to grow. There were no wild animals nor tame ones in its immediate vicinity. Now it is different. Which is the reason for this excellent scenic. It is more of a study in the character of the bear than a picture of landscapes or the Pass itself. A title states that the famous road has become overgrown with weeds the past twenty years, and that deers and bears are always close at hand.

Ralph Yarger, Mr. Bruce's photographer on this occasion, deserves the credit for presenting such an interesting close-up of the bears. Chilkat Cubs they are called. We don't recollect of having seen wild animals photographed so closely. Mr. Yarger has caught them at play and at war. Whether the bear is a stolid brute we don't know, but he does seem unmindful of the click of a camera. A story travels along with this number. "Woof," a female cub, is in search of her brother, "Wow." The latter growing tired of his sister's continual nagging, has gone to another clime. The female, a black cub, is heart-broken. Her lunch of ants and sap doesn't taste good. But in traveling the Pass she encounters her brother, a brown cub, meandering along as unconcerned, as if leaving relatives was an every-day event. "Woof" gives him a love-tap or three and when "Wow" doesn't respond, she shows how dangerous the female of the species can be when aroused.

Here is the number at its best. The camera is literally on top of the cubs and catches them in one of the most pleasing "shots" of a bear fight that one would want to see. Mr. "Wow" takes the count and grows repentant enough to accompany sister back to her happy hunting ground. The picture closes with one of the familiar Bruce moonlight vistas. The clouds are arrayed in fleecy formation and present a picture inspiring enough for a poet.—LAURENCE REID.

"Mutt and Jeff Nooze Weekly"

(Bud Fisher Cartoon—One Reel—Fox)

HERE are Mutt and Jeff with a Nooze Weekly of their own. And knowing how these freaks can cover the globe and catch vistas of this land and that, of this bird and that, of this quadruped and that, they stand a fair chance of having their Weekly booked. They have a trademark too. A globe revolves and the lanky shape of Mutt, in diaphanous costume, covers three quarters of it, while Jeff reposes in the lower left hand corner. Mutt, of course, has the easy job again. He is the man on the stage who does his work with his voice. Jeff is in the little booth turning the crank. And so the show is on.

They have caught some fairly good "shots" of themselves. It's strange how these freaks can capitalize their personalities. What care they for scenery and science? Outside of the ex-kaiser, they are the most photographed fellows in the world. So with every foot of film you see Mutt and Jeff. A fairly novel number, but we prefer them in some other occupation than the "fillum" business. Where is that bird, who shimmies when he walks, which they "caught" in Iceland? Perhaps he is in the laboratory being developed. Next time we expect to see him. There is only one field that the team hasn't covered, and that is topical tips from the newspapers. Perhaps they will show their humor along this direction yet. Who knows? The Nooze Weekly is a satisfying filler, although we have seen funnier cartoons.—LAURENCE REID.

"Red Cross Travel Series"

(Four New One-Reel Releases by Educational Films Corporation)

HIGH calibre is shown in these four one-reelers of the Red Cross Travel Series and if forthcoming releases are of such excellent merit generally they should be very much the vogue in all first-class theatres.

The reviewer must confess that he was quite agreeably surprised by the high-class photography, interesting sub-titles, and skillful laboratory work displayed in handling these subjects. They will be a very valuable adjunct to any screen program and will stand up by themselves when it comes to providing keenly interesting and instructive entertainment.

"The Tiny Kingdom of Montenegro" is shown with all its quaint dark-skinned peasants. A festival which is in progress gives the spectator a glimpse of the native Montenegrins in holiday array. Unique stalls are on the street where even clothes can be purchased and the peasants seem to be born bargainers. All the scenes first shown are supposed to represent the period previous to the Teuton Invasion of 1916. The work of the Red Cross does not dominate the picture but in the finale you realize the immense task confronting the workers.

"Archangel, City of Snow" shows Arctic scenes of imposing grandeur and the cameraman has managed some very long shots which show the picturesque region of icy mountains and forests. The soldiers are shown at their outposts in the bitter cold and snowshoes and dog sledges as the means of locomotion. These are the first scenes the reviewer has viewed of this region and should prove a sheer novelty for motion picture patrons.

"Marie, Queen of Roumania" will certainly captivate you. Her work among the destitute is a delight to witness. There is no doubt that the Queen is dearly loved by all her subjects because you cannot mistake the supreme adoration expressed by the citizens of all classes whenever Queen Marie is about. And she shows that she is a democratic Queen and not the least bit affected. The destitute are in good hands when Queen Marie and the Red Cross co-operate in this manner.

The fourth reel shown is entitled "Constantinople, Gateway of the Orient." This is thoroughly described by its title and will prove of as great an interest as the other three. All in all these one-reel "features" are not only highly entertaining but of great topical interest and history and geography combined. A credit to any theatre that uses them.—TOM HAMLIN.

"Behind the Door"

(Thos. H. Ince Special—Seven Reels—Directed by Irvin Willat—Released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation)

THERE can be no doubt but that this Thos. H. Ince special is tremendous drama but it would have been more timely two years ago and also it cannot hope to find universal favor because it is so vividly brutal and cruel in many of its sequences and in its very dramatic plot. Presented before an audience of hard boiled reviewers and you would get unanimous enthusiastic praise. Shown to an audience of women, you would be liable to have to call in an ambulance to take hysterical females to a hospital. That is how horribly realistic Mr. Ince and his staff have made the scenes of this picture version of Gouverneur Morris' unusual story as published in McClure's Magazine.

And the point is that there are some millions of women who go to the theatre to be entertained. Will they be entertained with this "he" man story of Captain Krug's terrible revenge? Will they enjoy the unfolding of this drama, we might say tragedy, even up to the point where by the most skillful of direction and the most clever acting, you can in imagination see what happened "behind the door"?

No one can gainsay but that it is a wonderful picture. Wonderful from every viewpoint but the one we have mentioned. Hobart Bosworth who is starred as Captain Krug gives an exceptional portrayal of the rugged type of a seafaring man and he has been accorded support which merits our greatest praise. The production is exceptional in every detail and no expense has been spared in any scene.

It will be a picture which will make many friends and many enemies. Those who like it will come back a second time to see it just as they have to view "Broken Blossoms." Those who do not like it, will call it the most terrible, horrible picture they have ever looked at just as they did with the Griffith picture we mentioned. It is a picture for those who want something besides the saccharine Sunday school story of "and they lived happy ever after."

It is a picture for those who enjoy good acting. For such as we have mentioned, there will be no shudders of horror when Captain Krug with every primeval instinct aroused and a burning hatred for his enemy expressed in every line of his seamed face says to his mate: "I swore I would skin him alive but he died on me—damn him." This is the sort of stuff "Behind the Door" is made of.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to June 8, 1919.

"THE LINCOLN HIGHWAYMAN"
(FOX)

Russell Has Entertaining Mystery Melodrama

YOU can put down "The Lincoln Highwayman," William Russell's newest offering, as one of most entertaining mystery melodramas of the season. So dominant is its note of mystery, so suspensive is its line of action, and so well conceived and executed are its plot and characterization, that the picture cannot help but please the most critical audience. It looks to us like the best piece of work that Director Emmett Flynn ever turned out. Of course, he was fortified with a workable plot, and a star who is adaptable to most any kind of vehicle, but just the same he was its guiding spirit and brought it forward with a plethora of entertaining highlights.

One is in doubt concerning the identity of the highwayman, who in an up-to-date manner, practises his hold-up game on the Lincoln Highway with the aid of a speedy motor car. You suspect that the star is the guilty culprit, and also the Secret Service man, and you are indeed surprised to find that he is a motor-cycle policeman. It is Mr. Russell's privilege to keep his company guessing and also his audience. And this he does to complete satisfaction. The girl in the case, possessing a romantic nature, naturally falls in love with the supposed criminal, and he knows a thing or two about keeping a woman interested by not playing into her hands. The hero has a fast car and a garage and the action carries him along under suspicion all the time. But he is only endeavoring to win a reward.

The climax brings a happy surprise and a good solution of an interesting plot. Mr. Russell is supported by a canine actor who is as intelligent as a human, and Lois Lee, an actress of considerable charm and vivacity. Edward Piel also contributes a clever performance as the Secret Service agent. His poise and repression make his work conspicuous. The picture is well staged in every particular.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The main attraction at the ——— next ——— will be "The Lincoln Highwayman," the Fox feature, with the popular William Russell as the star. This picture is an adaptation of Paul Dickey's play of the same name and it affords Mr. Russell with excellent opportunities to reveal his talent and personality. Perhaps it is not a misstatement when we declare it to be the best vehicle he has ever had. It is essentially a melodrama of speed and the plot runs through many exciting incidents before the pseudo-highwayman finds a happy ending to his six-cylinder romance. The story concerns a mysterious bandit who is operating on the Lincoln Highway. The Governor of California assigns Captain Claver, of the Sacramento police force, to the job of capturing him. Mr. Steele, of the Secret Service, is also interested in the case. But the highwayman continues his daring robberies despite the long arm of the law.

Jimmy Clunder, a young oil operator, is suspected by Marian Calvert when he carelessly drops a gem stolen from her guardian. Naturally she falls in love with him because of his daring exploits, although he tells her that he is not the bandit. Jimmy turns bandit the next day just to prove to Steele that he is not a coward and as Marian is with him she gets first hand evidence of his courage. But Jimmy is only attempting to win the reward for the capture of the real bandit and this is accomplished when he masquerades as the paymaster of a copper mine. The girl, the Governor, and the police captain and his assistant are at Jimmy's garage to accuse him with the crimes when he turns the tables on the policemen and arrests them as the bandits. So Jimmy is cleared in Marian's eyes and they are left to work out their romance. The picture is well acted by a competent cast and cleverly staged.

CATCH LINES

Do you drive your own car? Would you know how to act if held up by an auto bandit? See the popular William Russell in a stirring melodrama, "The Lincoln Highwayman."

The fastest moving photoplay of the year. That's "The Lincoln Highwayman," the latest picture to present William Russell. A story of an auto bandit—a story of fast moving action and thrills and romance. The picture travels on six cylinders all the way.

William Russell and man's best friend in "The Lincoln Highwayman," a new Fox picture written by Paul Dickey

PROGRAM READER

There was a bold, bad highwayman at large in California. He owned a fast car and his base of operations was the Lincoln Highway. A much traveled road, still so efficient was he in carrying on his profession that the minions of the law were baffied. Finally the Governor, becoming exasperated over the failure to catch him, sent his most trusted police officer to the Highway and told him not to come back until he had the bandit in his power. Now Jimmy Clunder was suspected of being the highwayman and he didn't try very hard to establish his innocence. Because of a certain girl who just adored bandits—they made her feel so romantic. But Jimmy was after the rich reward for the highwayman's capture. How he wins it after leading everyone to believe that he is guilty, how he found romance too and took advantage of it are the main factors in this most exciting story—a story that holds one in breathless suspense throughout its incidents. The star is the popular William Russell, supported by Lois Lee and other capable players, and the picture is "The Lincoln Highwayman," an adaptation of Paul Dickey's play of the same name. At this theatre next ———.

"TIN PAN ALLEY"
(FOX)

License Taken with Truth in This Sentimental Tale

THIS picture is a glorification of the street of popular song publishers and a glorification of false sentiment. It does not sound much truth. A young man rises from poverty through composing a surefire "hit" after the style of "Smiles." Unable to stand prosperity he soon dissipates his royalties until he is at the bottom of the ladder again. Truth is violated in his inability to find a job. The inference is given that his publisher is responsible for this in order to save him from himself, but the conclusion is not arrived at according to Hoyle.

The hero's failure is not genuine, for once having composed a popular hit, rival publishing houses would surely make a bid for his services. And he played a violin in a cabaret before he turned to composing, and he could become a musician again without having to break bakery windows for bread. The sentiment is overdone, which factor, with the false pathos, robs the picture of its charm. The feature is a reminder of the co-stars' earlier release, "Words and Music By," but it lacks the ingredients that made this latter offering acceptable. The romantic interest is neglected in order to capitalize upon the value of the title.

You see a girl attempting to save a man who is really not worth the effort. And the sentimental publisher puts him back on his feet. The title editor has overstepped the mark in emphasizing its humor, and some of his efforts make the picture appear almost ridiculous. The titles, however, are far better than the story. And why give a press agent the name of John J. Curfew, who writes stories about an actress named Ringer? The sticky sentiment and the overworked satire spoil what otherwise would be an interesting theme. Too much liberty has been taken with the original. George Hernandez stands out among the players.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, the Fox co-stars, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in their newest photoplay entitled "Tin Pan Alley."

It tells of the struggle of a youth to make a success musically, of how he finds the true source of inspiration in the center of the music publishing houses—the street commonly known as "Tin Pan Alley." Tommy Breen has been discharged from a factory because he thought more of his violin playing that he did of his work. In his boarding house he meets June Norton, a cigarette girl in a restaurant and through her influence he turns his talent to song writing. The "hit" earns him a position in the cabaret in the restaurant and eventually the leading song publisher in New York makes him a member of his staff.

Prosperity turns his head and he soon forgets June, preferring the company of Mona Merwin, the musical comedy queen. But June doesn't give up hope and she visits the publisher, entreating him to use his influence in halting the youth's course. The sales on the song become smaller and when he is requested to write a song of the home and make another hit, he fails. So Tommy is dismissed and, without funds, he soon embraces the ways of poverty again. June hears of his trouble and makes another plea with the publisher—who now has an idea for Tommy's future. He sends the young man to the country for a rest and when he arrives at his destination he finds that it is a "comfy" cottage with June waiting for him. In that atmosphere Tommy is inspired to write his song of the home. This is a story of the sorrow and happiness of any young man's life—particularly when he is trying to make a name for himself. It is rich in sentiment and pathos and humor. The stars are capably supported.

CATCH LINES

A fascinating story of love and home—an interesting story of a youth's ambition and the will to succeed—an entertaining story of sentiment and romance—that is "Tin Pan Alley." See it.

He wrote the most popular "hit" of the day, but success turned his head.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a clever title which can be exploited for its full value. Everyone has heard of "Tin Pan Alley"—that it is the street that houses the publishers of popular songs. First then tell that this picture brings home the methods of the publishers to establish a popular song. Bring out that it features the home in a delightful manner—and that the home and the heart are inspirations for popular songs. Tell that a youth wrote a popular "hit" and couldn't stand prosperity. When he attempted to duplicate his first effort the inspiration wasn't there. Use catch lines asking the reason for his failure. You have a picture here for lobby display. You can link up with your music store and feature some popular song in your lobby in return for the music dealer featuring your picture.

You can arrange your musical program so that it includes the most popular hits of the day. And feature your music as a medley of hits from "Tin Pan Alley." Play up the stars and tell that they are always splendid in pictures of home and sentiment and sweet romance.

William Fox presents Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in "Tin Pan Alley," which is titled by the producer as "a musical duet in pictures"

"WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY"

(UNITED ARTISTS)

Sure Fire Winner with Any Audience

DOUG'S latest is farce comedy of the variety which made him famous back in the old Triangle days. It opens with a subtitle and some scenes which lead you to believe that the story is to be taken seriously, but which later is found to have been used only to make plausible the stunts which the star executes and to excuse superstition in a man.

Inside of five minutes Doug is in the midst of a continuing series of his kind of athletic stunts and for fully four reels the picture keeps up its farce comedy tempo with a laugh in every foot of film. It then slows down long enough to allow Frank Campeau to bring on the plot, same being of the w.k. idea of the villain trying to trim the heroine's father out of valuable oil property, with the hero being falsely accused, etc., and then gets a running start for another couple of thousand feet of still better athletic action and convincing mechanical effects, which wind up with a flood which would make Noah green with envy. "After the clouds roll by" Doug is discovered up a tree, with his lady fair floating down toward him on the roof of an uprooted house.

He then changes his temporary residence to the approaching roof, there to explain that all the trouble, including the flood, which we will suppose was of the villain's planning. This done, a church with a parson clinging to the steeple comes floating by and the knot is about to be tied as the last scene fades out.

Fairbanks, cameraman and director are entitled to full credit for producing a picture which will stand as a masterpiece of its kind for many a day.—Length, 5700 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Daniel Boone Brown	Douglas Fairbanks
Mark Drake	Frank Campeau
Curtis Brown	Ralph Lewis
Dr. Metz	Herbert Grimwood
Hobson	Albert MacQuarrie
Lucette Bancroft	Kathleen Clifford
Bobbie DeVere	Daisy Robinson

Directed by Victor Fleming.

Assisted by Ted Reed.

Original Story and Scenario by Douglas Fairbanks, assisted by Lewis Weadon and Tom Geraghty.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Douglas Fairbanks, premier screen comedian and without doubt the most popular male star of the day, will present his second picture for "Big Four" release, "When the Clouds Roll By" at the ——— theatre for a ——— day run beginning ———.

Farce comedy of the best sort with the star's athletic stunts always to the fore sums up this latest picture from the Fairbanks studio.

Doug is named Daniel Boone Brown in the feature, a healthy, normal young man with a job in his uncle's office. To tell you all about this picture would spoil part of your enjoyment and also monopolize the newspaper for it is a full hour and a half of rushing dramatic action with a laugh every minute and some spectacular stuff which has never been surpassed.

There is a flood which rivals the biblical description of the one in which Noah played the leading role. Some of the cleverest camera work ever attempted in a photoplay is evidenced. The star shows his athletic prowess to as great advantage as in any feature he has ever made. And the story will hold interest for itself alone.

In support of the star are such well known players as Frank Campeau, Kathleen Clifford, who plays the part of Doug's sweetheart, Ralph Lewis and others. The picture is in six parts, every reel of which is entertainment of the highest type.

PROGRAM READER

It is with more than usual pleasure that we announce Douglas Fairbanks in his latest photoplay, "When the Clouds Roll By" for next week. To begin with everyone wants to see America's foremost comedian and actor and especially will this be true of his latest contribution to the screen, a picture which all agree is the best he has ever done.

If you remember "His Pictures in the Papers" the feature which was largely instrumental in building Mr. Fairbanks' fame, you will appreciate the entertainment gem in store for you when we say that "When the Clouds Roll By" is even better although in construction they somewhat resemble each other.

Doug has the same sort of likeable role which permits him to do the foolish, laughable athletic stunts which everyone enjoys and the "bits of business" and titles are highly original. We cannot praise this picture too highly. If it doesn't break all records we are going to be disappointed.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this picture you should feature the fact that it is Fairbanks at his best, that the story is original and was written by the star himself and that no expense has been spared to make a picture which will stand as a masterpiece of its kind.

There is a strong tinge of superstition in the early part of the offering which makes permissible stunts in advertising and the use of catch lines and selling talk, touching on this subject. You might talk about black cats, walking under ladders, finding horse shoes, the unlucky opal rings, the bad luck of breaking mirrors, etc., for all these things are touched upon in the scenes of the feature.

If you desire to consider the picture seriously, you can start a discussion of the effect a studied attempt to inculcate a belief in the supernatural and to make a person superstititious will have on the physical and mental person, for such a thought was the foundation idea of "When the Clouds Roll By."

One of the most spectacular sequences in the film is a flood caused by the breaking of a fictional dam.

You can get reading attention by referring to the famous Johnstown flood and it might not be out of place to talk about Noah and his flood.

In newspaper advertising, this feature like all others with Fairbanks as a star should feature the actor's name and a good likeness of him since you are selling primarily Fairbanks with the story and all other angles secondary.

In this you will be aided by the producers who have prepared some very good line cuts and also have excellent stills ready for you.

In window displays there is a very nice opportunity to tie up with jewelers in an opal sale since an opal ring figures in the scenes of the story quite largely.

For a contest, there is a chance to pull some good stunts with essays on the subject of superstitions, from the angle the person who will name superstitions which some particular profession believes in like, actors or sailors among whom a strong belief of what is good and bad luck exists. Another essay contest idea would be to offer a prize for the best story of a "nightmare dream" which the person writing had experienced. Quite a lot of the scenes in the picture are projected as a nightmare which the star is experiencing.

CATCH LINES

He broke three mirrors, walked under a ladder, and ran into all sorts of bad luck predictions but all the same he won the girl of his choice after "going through fire and water," mostly water.

How would you like to be married on the roof of a house by a parson who clung to the steeple of his church, as both church and house floated about in the flood waters following the bursting of a dam. See "When the Clouds Roll By."

"ROUGE AND RICHES"

(UNIVERSAL)

Often Told Tale Makes Obvious Picture

THE story of the proud and poor girl of aristocratic parentage, who adopts a career upon the stage as a member of the chorus, is one of the most familiar formulas in photoplay production. The only variation in the construction is noticeable in the pattern which it follows. Usually the theme is developed around a comedy base. In this instance "Rouge and Riches," as the title implies, is constructed upon a sentimental premise, and the idea is so single track in its conception and execution, that it offers no sustaining value in regard to romance, action, suspense, characterization and other ingredients.

One cannot sympathize with the heroine inasmuch as her motive in becoming a chorus girl is purely a mercenary one, and she is extremely fickle besides. The old tale of the girl who would marry a millionaire and maintain her virtue at the same time. In the course of events she learns to appreciate that riches, do not bring love and so she finds happiness with an actor not blessed or cursed with wealth. A melodramatic flourish is attempted in the latter reels, but it fails to score because it is so obviously introduced to add a belated bit of action.

A typical story book picture one without much reflection of reality. Certain scenes of rehearsals are depicted in a lifelike manner. These constitute the points of interest in a feature not calculated to make even an amateur picture goer enthuse to any extent. The title sounds like something Laura Jean Libbey might have conceived and the text goes back to her day. Mary MacLaren is quite appealing as a chorus girl, but her talent is never given an opportunity. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A human tale of a chorus girl is offered in Mary MacLaren's new picture, "Rouge and Riches," which comes to the ——— theatre next ———. The picture is an adaptation of one of W. Carey Wonderly's stories which appeared recently in Live Stories Magazine and is the charming and spirited recounting of the events in the life of Becky, the last of an impoverished Virginia family, who adopts a career on the stage in order to recoup some of the misspent fortune. Becky has read in the papers of chorus girls marrying millionaires and her object in taking up the life behind the footlights is purely a mercenary one. She leaves her fiance behind and comes to New York and as she possesses the necessary requisites for the stage she is offered a position in the chorus of a musical show.

A Wall Street magnate is attracted to her and offers her marriage but her mercenary motive is forgotten because she falls in love with Tom Rushworth, one of the masculine members of the troupe. She is about to accept Willis, the millionaire, when she learns that Tom has been arrested for the murder of a former sweetheart. He has been given the third degree for refusing to talk about his actions at the hour of the crime, the reason being that it would involve Becky's reputation. However, she comes forward and furnishes the much needed evidence to establish his innocence and then the thought comes home to her that happiness can be gained without money. So she accepts Tom's love in preference to Willis' wealth. The picture is richer in stage incidents than that found in the usual story of theatrical life and the fact that it contains a touch of the human and the genuine serves to make it thoroughly interesting. Miss MacLaren plays the part of Becky with her customary charm and she is supported by Wallace McDonald, Marguerite Snow and others.. Harry Franklin directed.

CATCH LINES

She put on rouge to gain riches. She became a chorus girl in order to catch a millionaire and after she caught him she found that his money could not bring love. What happened? See Mary MacLaren in "Rouge and Riches."

She was a chorus girl and the prettiest member of the company. She had three suitors—one was a playwright from her old home town, one was a millionaire, and the other was an actor. Which one did she choose? See "Rouge and Riches."

She read the papers and found that chorus girls have a way of marrying millionaires. So she went on the stage. Follow her adventures in "Rouge and Riches," the latest Mary MacLaren picture.

Did you ever have a desire to go on the stage and marry a millionaire? Does a rich marriage bring love? See "Rouge and Riches" and find out. A clever picture of the home and the stage.

PROGRAM READER

Some girls go on the stage to receive the plaudits of the world. Others go on to seek fame and fortune in their art. And a certain few go on to meet and marry millionaires. They know they are in the public spotlight and that the business man will worship at their shrine when his day's work is over. Such a girl was Becky, who came from the old Dominion. She was the last of her people and in order to save the estate and keep the wolf from the door she came to New York and found a position in the chorus. Her motive was to meet a millionaire and so intrigue him that he would ask her to be his wife. But when she had thoroughly charmed him, she suddenly woke up to the fact that riches and love do not necessarily go together. A less fortunate man attracted her. He offered her nothing but his heart, but it was sufficient. Better to have a loving husband than the clothes that money might bring. Such is the outline of this most interesting story of the stage and home as offered in "Rouge and Riches," which comes to this theatre next ——— with Mary MacLaren.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another picture of a chorus girl and it carries enough points of interest to make good advertising copy. Take the title for instance. It suggests the make believe world and the life behind the footlights. Play it up for it is a winner. Do not go to any length in exploiting the theme because it is anything but original. Simply feature it as an entertaining story of the stage and a girl's ambition to gain wealth. She belonged to the chorus and she knew that it appealed to the busy business man. Play up the fact that the picture generates a deal of heart interest and sentiment and capitalizes the power of love. What of the catch lines? Surely a good angle. We have written some for your teaser campaign.

Tell your audience that Miss MacLaren has a picture which brings out her charm and talent. Acquaint your patrons with the fact that the picture is a romantic drama of the stage—of the life behind the footlights. Use stills of the stage scenes.

“THE SAGE BRUSHER”

(HAMPTON-HODKINSON)

Reviewer Pronounces This a Wonderful Picture

“WONDERFUL” is the word that accurately describes this screenization of Emerson Hough’s great story, and it is an artistic achievement that reflects credit on the entire motion picture industry. A photoplay masterpiece demands many essentials, and Benjamin B. Hampton’s picture qualifies in every respect.

First it has the appealing story interpreted by a notable cast. Every member of the cast is the perfect type for his or her respective role. And they are clever artists and do not overact. The story contains charming romance in two channels, villainy thwarted, comedy, pathos, and thrills with the “melo” made realistic. The direction is exceptionally well done, and the photographer has cleverly caught some excellent long shots of beautiful scenes.

The sequences, replete with thrilling incidents, are skillfully sewed together by a silver thread of sweet sentiment. One marvelous incident shows a kitten struggling in the water after the awe-inspiring flood breaks from the dam and sweeps everything before it. A dog heroically leaps from a log and, seizing the kitten, swims with her to safety. From every angle, a screen masterpiece.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and tremendously pleasing; Elite, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing; Family, big puller and wonderfully pleasing; Workers, strong puller and tremendously pleasing.—Tom Hamlin.

Roy Stewart doing some love making in “The Sagebrusher,” the latest Benj. B. Hampton feature, distributed by Hodkinson

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Emerson Hough’s novel, “The Sagebrusher,” has been screened by Benjamin B. Hampton for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and will be shown at the ——— theatres for ——— days beginning ———.

Edward Sloman directed the production and it is said to have been highly eulogized by the critics as one of the outstanding film productions of the year. One of the tremendous scenes described is the flood which sweeps everything before it. One of the many happy sidelights is said to be the rescuing of a kitten struggling in the raging waters. A dog leaps from a passing log and brings the kitten to safety.

A refined girl is persuaded by her friend to go west in response to an advertisement that states a Western rancher desires a housekeeper, object, matrimony. When she arrives the girl is blind, having lost her sight on the trip. So she does not see the rancher in all his ugliness. He tenderly cares for her in his shack with the aid of a neighboring woman and although he feels that he is not worthy of her he decides to marry her in order to protect her.

The young doctor arrives in time to witness the wedding and the big-hearted rancher persuades the young doctor to kiss her after the ceremony in place of the groom. The blind girl of course thinks that her husband kissed her and wonders for weeks why he evades her afterward.

Another romance is on its way when her girl chum arrives from the east and meets the neighbor of her husband. The visitor is amazed when she glimpses the lazy, untidy and ugly husband. But when the plotters break the dam and let loose the flood of waters through the valley, one of the many outstanding feats of heroism was performed by the rancher as he made the great sacrifice.

And two romances promised a happy future when the young doctor restores the sight of the young bride, now widowed, and wins her for himself.

PROGRAM READER

Emerson Hough is a great author.

“The Sagebrusher” is an intensely interesting and popular novel.

And Benjamin Hampton persuaded Edward Sloman to direct the filming of “The Sagebrusher” for W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

This combination of powerful names naturally means something.

According to the unanimous eulogies of the screen critics the results have been simply wonderful.

Two fine love stories are told in the book and faithfully depicted in the picture. They have the great human appeal. And then there are melodramatic incidents galore. Something to stir the most blase.

In the great climax of the swiftly moving photoplay a dam is dynamited and a flood of water rushes furiously down the valley carrying houses, churches and all before it with the resultant loss of life pictured in the catastrophe.

And a blind bride recovers her sight. And a dog saves the life of a struggling kitten in the raging waters. And———.

But what’s the use. We cannot begin to describe it.

“The Sagebrusher” will be shown at this theatre next week.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you will at once realize that it must be exploited to the very skies in order to secure a good opening the first day. After that you can simply relax your efforts because the word-of-mouth boosts will certainly pack your house for the balance of the engagement. Use the name of the author, the title of the book which is the same as the photoplay, also mention that Benjamin B. Hampton is the producer of Stewart Edward White’s “The Westerners,” and Zane Grey’s “Desert Gold.”

“RED HOT DOLLARS”

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Wholesome, Entertaining Comedy Drama

THIS is a comedy-drama that can be cheerfully described as one of those wholesome and pleasantly entertaining photoplays, and the youthful star appears in a typical Charles Ray role, the kind that won him most of his popularity, although not so simple a type as some he has portrayed.

He appears as a young machinist who is adopted by his employer in reward for a heroic deed, and who afterwards settles a feud between his foster father and the grandfather of his sweetheart, thereby winning a charming girl. This is a lively photoplay from start to finish with never a lagging moment.

There are several high spots in the comedy that will bring hearty laughter and the star is surrounded by a good cast and favored with splendid direction. Charles Mailes gives a very excellent characterization of the dour old Scotchman, and Mr. Ray is quite irresistable in his role which is rich with quaint humor.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and highly pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Workers, good puller and very pleasing.—Tom Hamlin.

Charlie Ray and his “Scotch lassie” in the Thos. H. Ince feature, “Red Hot Dollars,’ released through Paramount-Artcraft.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray in his latest Thomas H. Ince production, “Red Hot Dollars,” is the Paramount-Artcraft picture to be shown at the ———theatre for ———days beginning———.

The star appears as a young machinist, Tod Burke, and is employed in the great machine works owned by Peter Garton. One day when his employer is inspecting the mill the youth heroically shoves him out of the way of a falling crane but in saving his employer the young man is severely injured.

Peter Garton takes him to his own home and becomes so attached to him that he tells his society sister that he will adopt the boy. The sister tries to introduce the boy into society and many laughable situations are presented.

When the boy goes to tell his sweetheart the good news he is surprised to find that she is not overjoyed. And when her dour old Scotch grandfather finds out that Peter Garton is the youth’s foster father he orders the boy from the house. It seems that the old man was still running his small machine shop and was gradually being crowded out by the Garton concern. He was very bitter against Peter Garton although they were once the best of friends.

It began to look as if a sweet little romance would be nipped in the bud. When the youth secured his sweetheart a position as stenographer in the office of Peter Garton they did not let the old Scotchman know. But he found out when he discovered a portion of his grandchild’s pay envelope. And that happened to be the very day that Peter Garton entered the office and found his adopted son dancing with the stenographer.

She was discharged by Garton and when the old Scotchman heard of it he flew into a rage and made his way to the Garton residence where the two old enemies were soon cooped in by the youthful lovers and finally forced to make-up and not interfere with romance.

PROGRAM READER

One young machinist wins a father and a fortune by a deed of heroism, but thereby stands a chance of losing his sweetheart.

Of course she was glad that he had a brilliant future before him but her grandfather was a deadly enemy of the boy’s new foster-father.

This young and budding romance was simply going to be nipped in the roots before it hardly started to bloom.

His sweetheart’s grandfather was a dour old Scotchman and remembered that his former friend was the president of the Iron Foundry which threatened to crush his little machine shop.

So the old Scotchman simply chased the young lover out of the house. The only way to smooth love’s path was to effect a reconciliation between the two old enemies.

And that is the task that confronts Charles Ray as Tod Burke the machinist Romeo.

SUGGESTIONS

After this picture is booked you have three good names besides the title. The Charles Ray following can be captured by displaying the star’s name at every opportunity. And the producer, Thomas H. Ince, has made many of the most successful productions of the screen, so his name should be mentioned in all your announcements. Then the picture is a Paramount-Artcraft brand, well advertised and not to be neglected in preparing your advertising copy. Outside of these three powerful adjuncts you should use the title with catch lines.

CATCH LINES

What does it profit a man if he gains untold wealth and loses his sweetheart?

Money proved a barrier to one budding romance, but love as usual finds a way.

In order to win his sweetheart he faced the tremendous task of reconciling a dour old Scotchman to a hated enemy.

When his foster father found the youth dancing with the pretty stenographer during business hours, she lost her job but finally gained a loving husband.

"THE GREATEST QUESTION"

(FIRST NATIONAL)

Photoplay of Sadness, Artistically Produced

D. W. GRIFFITH'S first production for First National will no doubt keenly interest everybody, although it is not pleasant entertainment. It is a photoplay of sadness, and here is just barely enough sweetness in it to partially offset the lust displayed by one of the characters.

It touches somewhat on the occult and the theme may appeal to Spiritualists and be scoffed at by Atheists. But away from this angle it is melodrama in a home-spun atmosphere, portrayed by a cast of most excellent types. Brutal passions are shown as well as ragedy. It is not a picture suitable for children and may not generally be considered up to the Griffith standard, but it is intensely interesting, very unusual, and has the happy ending.

Lillian Gish is the child of a roving peddler, and when her parents pass away she takes employment around the house of a quarreling couple. When the man tries to assault her she recognizes him finally as the vague haunting figure that in her early childhood she saw murdering a woman. In the meantime her kind neighbors rescue her and the spirit of her neighbor's son apparently returns to let hem know there is oil on the farm.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and generally pleasing; Elite, strong puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and fairly pleasing; Workers, good puller and generally pleasing.—Tom Hamlin.

Produced by D. W. Griffith.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

D. W. Griffith's first production for First National Exhibitors will be shown for —— days at the ——— theatre beginning ——.

"The Greatest Question" is the title, and the theme is occultism, although it is a drama that portrays the hopes, griefs and joys of plain everyday folks.

The producer of "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and other great screen successes has placed many of the Griffith favorites in the cast. Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, Eugenie Besserer and Josephine Crowell are principals.

As the little girl rides about in her father's wagon she remembers at times rather vaguely of witnessing a murder. Her father is a peddler and after his death the mother soon follows him. The girl has now grown, but is a mere slip of a girl and hardly understands why she is alone in the world.

When a kindhearted but poor family take her in charge she does not want to impose upon them and accepts an opportunity of becoming a hired girl to the neighboring couple. This same neighboring couple are very brutal people. Their appearance brings back vague memories to the girl but nothing definite.

The eldest son of the kind neighbors is swept from a submarine while away at war and the mother feels that his spirit is near her. When the brutal employer of the girl tries to force his attentions upon her she is horsewhipped by the ugly wife.

And the youngest son of her kind neighbors rescues her when the wretch tries to grasp her for the second time. It is this scene that she recognizes her brutal employers as the murderers of a girl. She had witnessed the crime at the age of four.

Oil is discovered on the farm of her good neighbors after the mother had visited her son's grave in the cemetery. She declared that the spirit of her departed son bade her not to sell the farm. The oil was discovered shortly after. The younger son of the good neighbors is deeply in love with the girl and happiness appears to be on the way.

PROGRAM READER

"After Life Comes—What?"

Whether you believe in Spiritualism, the occult, mental telepathy, palmistry, astrologists, phrenologists, fortune tellers, clairvoyants, etc. etc.—You are keenly interested in "The Greatest Question."

And "The Greatest Question" is a great film production scheduled to appear on the screen of this theatre next week.

D. W. Griffith is the producer, and it is a First National picture. It was this same producer who was responsible for the greatest artistic triumphs of the screen, among them being "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Broken Blossoms," etc. etc.

Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, Eugenie Besserer and Josephine Crowell are in the cast and they are artists you never forget.

This is a masterful drama of the hopes, griefs and joys of plain everyday folks and has the happy ending.

And thrills are supplied as well as romance. The theme will keenly interest you.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture your best bet is, of course, the producer. Mention that the artistic genius who produced "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Broken Blossoms," and other great screen successes has delivered his latest as the first production contributed to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Tell of the cast and mention the names of Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, Eugenie Besserer and Josephine Crowell. Use the catch lines but always carry this one line in all your advertising: "A masterful drama of the hopes, griefs and joys of plain everyday folks."

CATCH LINES

Do you believe in ghosts? After life comes —what?

One wanderer sleeps all night in a graveyard and the colored gentlemen passing immediately threw into high.

Have you ever seen a brutal couple that not only fight among themselves but continually battles with the world at large?

Occultism sways a mother's faith and her departed son returns in the spirit to comfort her.

"THE WEB OF DECEIT"

(CAREWE-PATHE)

The Dual Role Seen Again

A FATHER is called upon to recognize his daughter whom he has not seen since she was a mere child. And an impostor comes into his life to bring him happiness and to use up his wealth until the obvious climax when the real heiress is introduced and her rival is given her just deserts. The girls are supposed to be cousins but the father, who must have had an inkling concerning their close resemblance, doesn't stop to investigate. He accepts everything for granted.

The story is not the kind of material that is being turned out in this modern day. As much as truth is violated in the plot the development of it, to fit the screen, does not bring forth any appreciation of that virtue. Too much liberty is taken with the characters and they are manipulated about like so many puppets. It is melodramatic in action, naturally, since it has to do with crime, but it doesn't solve anything. No moral is presented; very little romance is offered, and as far as dramatic highlights are concerned, they are nowhere visible.

The picture seems to have but one purpose which is to give the star an opportunity to differentiate a dual role. And the characters are not sufficiently contrasted to permit such a course. As it is, the two characters impersonated by Miss Cassinelli keeps you perplexed so constantly does one follow the other. The backgrounds of the feature—the scenery, etc., are first rate. The direction is up to the mark.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dolores Cassinelli returns to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her newest picture entitled, "The Web of Deceit." This is a forceful drama that turns the light on a cross section of a woman's heart. In writing the story Finis Fox, the scenarist, designed a dual role for the star that gives her every opportunity to display her talent as an emotional actress. Very few characters are required to tell this powerful tale. Mitchell Harris, Letty Ford, Hugh Cameron and Franklyn Hanna being the principals in support of Miss Cassinelli. Edwin Carewe is both producer and director of "The Web of Deceit," the action of which takes place on a New England farm and in New York City and Long Island. The star makes the picture doubly interesting by portraying the dual role of two girls who closely resemble each other, but have different temperaments.

In her part of Wanda Hubbard, the adventuress, the star is introduced as the sweetheart of a crook. They rob a safe and while hiding in the house overhear a conversation about a long lost daughter. A few days later while visiting her mother and her "sister," Lucille, the former confesses that the girls are really cousins, but that Lucille is the daughter of a wealthy army officer—the man Wanda had robbed. So the adventuress palms herself off as Lucille and enjoys several months of all the happiness and the love that her "father" could give her. Then, Lucille, innocent of the plot, meets a friend who notices the remarkable resemblance between the two girls. In due time her identity is established. So the girls change places. The picture contrasts the craving for a good time and beautiful clothes that leads a girl along the primrose path and the virtue of contentment that makes another girl honest and sincere.

PROGRAM READER

Everyone has a drama in his or her life. Each one of us weaves a web of our thought and actions. Sometimes they are just fancies—sometimes they take form and lead us into temptation. Take Wanda Hubbard for example. She had day-dreams just like every girl. She wanted to go straight. True, she loved a crook, and love has worked wonders. But temptation whispered and it was so easy to listen to it. So she spun a different kind of web than she intended. She robbed a house, deceived her mother and enmeshed herself and her "sister" in a maze as intricate as a woman's heart. Did she deceive because she loved, or because she was weak and couldn't help it? You will find out in this most interesting photoplay, "The Web of Deceit," which brings Dolores Cassinelli to the ——— screen. It is a woman's life drama and has an array of heart questions that have come up in your own life. The star is supported by capable players. You'll enjoy this drama; it is entertaining all the way.

Dolores Cassinelli, star of "The Web of Deceit"

SUGGESTIONS

This picture can be exploited on the program reader and catch line angle. We have written several for your benefit. Then there is the contents of the story. Make emphatic that it deals with temptation that comes into a woman's life. Why did she deceive? Was it because of her love of pleasure or finery? You can use such questions as these in your copy and they are bound to arouse a lot of interest. Make mention that it offers Miss Cassinelli in a dual role—as a good girl and as an adventuress. Mention the star's other releases, such as "The Virtuous Model," and "The Right to Lie." Be emphatic about her beauty and tell that she is one of the most photographed actresses in the world.

Describe the plot in teasers, but don't give it away entirely in any of your advertising. You might use Scott's famous lines for a teaser campaign—"Oh, what a tangled web we weave, when first we practise to deceive." Use stills of the star. Perhaps you haven't played her pictures before. This is all the more reason why you should make your audience acquainted with her beauty and talent.

The World of Wonderful Reality

By E. Temple Thurston

Character of Story: Society drama.
Theme: Life versus ideals.
Characters: John Grey; Jill Dealtry; Mrs. Dealtry, her mother; Mr. Dealtry, her father; Mrs. Rowse, John's housekeeper; Monsieur Defautin, cafe proprietor; Madame Defautin, his wife; Charles Henry Wuirk, musician; Matteo Allievi, musician; Skipwith, rich and in love with Jill; Amber, the other girl.

The Plot: This is a sequel to "The City of Beautiful Nonsense" in which John Grey, an impecunious author, after many amusing adventures, became engaged to Jill Dealtry whose parents clung to the aristocratic fringes of Prince of Wales Terrace. The present story opens with the return of the lovers from Venice and their consequent meeting with the practical side of life—especially as applied to their own prospective marriage. John is essentially a Bohemian by nature—thinking only of the wants of the moment and much better suited to be the companion of his old friend, Amber, than to move in the near-society circles frequented by Jill's parents. Upon their return to London it is apparent that things do not look the same in London by daylight as they do in Venice by moonlight and pressure is soon brought to bear on Jill by her father and mother who want her to marry Mr. Sopwith, a rich old bachelor who will enable Jill's father to live without working—a life-long habit which he fears he may be forced to abandon if the family funds are not immediately replenished. Naturally when the parents learn that Jill is contemplating a marriage with a penniless author who makes companions of equally penniless musicians, they bring pressure to bear upon Jill. Jill fights nobly for her ideals for a time but when it comes to the actual question of facing a life made up of dodging bill-collectors and eking out an existence which affords only make-believe luxuries, she wilts and writes John a letter to the effect that she cannot go on with it. John, meanwhile, has persuaded himself that Amber is not really in love with him—though she is—and that Jill, left to her own devices, would be thoroughbred enough to take the bad with the good. He is grieving for Jill when she writes him another note asking him to come to her. Thinking she has reconsidered he rushes to her home to find that Skipwith has died and left Jill all of his money so that neither Jill nor her parents can see any further obstacle to Jill's marriage to John, provided John will abandon his Bohemian ways of life and come to life in the stuffed bird atmosphere of near-society. This convinces John that Jill puts a much higher value on her physical and social necessities than on her spiritual aspirations and he refuses the offer to take him into the bosom of the Dealtry family. The story ends with John and Amber on the way to one of their favorite restaurants where they play at being rich—a state which would, in real life, bore them to extinction.

Locale: London.

Picture High Lights: This story, though slight in plot, has theme and could be developed into a good picture on the order of "Lord and Lady Algy."

Neptune's Son

By Rupert S. Holland

Character of Story: Adventure.
Theme: Pusuit of pirates.
Characters: Captain Nathaniel Burgess, retired sea captain; Capt. Ben Libby, another; Jim Burgess, Nathaniel's grandson; Jerry Grantham, an author; Mary Burgess, Jim's mother; Captain Flanders; Perkins, seaman; Slim Sam Pigeon, pirate; Red Derek, pirate captain; Sampson, another pirate; Haj Putali, a Buddhist priest; sailors, pirates, natives.

The Plot: Jim Burgess, the son and grandson of sailors is anxious to go to sea though his mother prefers to have him go into business. Jerry Grantham,a magazine writer who seeks out Jim's grandfather to get material for his stories persuades the family that Jim ought to have a chance to try sea life before settling down to anything else. He succeeds in this and Jim sails with him in a few days on the Barnacle, ostensibly a trading ship bound for San Francisco around the Horn, but really a boat sent in pursuit of Red Derek, a pirate who has been preying upon ships along the coast of South America and whose most recent exploit has been the looting of a ship of the same company which owns the Barnacle, stealing, among other things, the ruby which has been the eye of a Buddhist idol in Delhi—a stone which was stolen by one of the sailors on the looted ship. The chase leads the adventurers into many strange ports along the Southern coasts and finally lands them on a desert island where the hero and two others are marooned, having fallen prisoners to the pirates. They escape, however, and finally land in Chili where they fall in with Haj Putali, a priest from Delhi, who has come in search of the eye of his god and who joins them in their efforts to run down the pirate. They have learned by now that Derek makes his headquarters in Chili and that he has brought his loot there to dispose of it. There is some further fighting before the crew of the pirate ship are persuaded to desert their captain and turn him over as prisoner. The priest recovers the eye of his idol and then goes to San Francisco with the hero and his friends to see America before returning to his own country.

Locale: A port in Maine and South American ports.

Picture High Lights: No love interest is supplied in this story which is full of action and adventure. It also needs more complication in the plot.

The Bridegroom Cometh

By Barker Shelton

Character of story: Comedy.
Theme: Unpremediated matrimony.
Characters: Steve Gilder, young attorney; William Stone of Stone & Macullar, attorneys at law; Andrew Macullar, junior partner of the same firm; Eben Burnett, bookkeeper; Agatha Macullar, Andrew's daughter; Pierce Bullard, auctioneer; duns, bill collectors, clerks and clients.

The Plot: Steve Gilder is a young attorney in the employ of Stone & Macullar. Although a clever and promising young lawyer, he has an annoying habit of being absent for two days at a time and then turning up red-eyed and with ragged nerves, which convinces both partners in the firm that he drinks. As a matter of fact Steve has a bad habit of buying first editions and rare books, which he piles on the shelves in his bachelor apartment. Into this vice goes all his money, so that his bills begin to accumulate and he is threatened with dire action upon the part of his creditors. Steve is so harassed by these creditors that he finally gets up his nerve to approach Eben Burnett, the old bookkeeper of the firm and ask him to advance him $450.00 with which to pay his debts. After some argument and much admonition Burnett agrees to do this and gives Steve the money. Steve goes to an auction where he finds there is offered a choice specimen known as the Whitehall Bible. He bids for this. A young girl on the opposite side of the room is the only bidder who keeps up with him and she clings to the last when the book is finally knocked down to him at $430.00. Forgetting his creditors Steve goes home to his room, telephones the office and says that he will not be down the next day. Then he builds a fire in the grate, takes the telephone receiver off the hook to make sure that he will not be disturbed and settles down to examine his treasure. Macullar misses Steve and decides that he has gone on another tear. Macullar is entirely in favor of firing him, especially as some of his creditors have come in trying to attach his salary. Stone takes a more kindly view of the matter and says that he believes that Steve has good stuff in him if he could only be made to settle down. The next day when Steve comes in Burnett warns him that he must settle his bills at once since the firm will not stand for anything more; certain parties have been in the office telling tales about him. He receives a summons to Stone's office and goes in fully expecting to be discharged. To his surprise Stone tells him that he understands that Steve is about to be married. This is a step which the firm approves and, as is their custom, they will make him a wedding present. Stone gives Steve $500.00. Steve sees that this will save his situation but does not know what to do about the marriage. He pays his bills and decides to sell some of his books to pay back Burnett. Casting about for a likely girl, he recalls the one at the auction. Looking her up he finds she is Macullar's daughter. He calls upon her to show her the Whitehall Bible. They become friends at once being enthusiasts on the same subject. He confesses his predicament and she agrees to help him out. Macullar receives a wire stating that they are married and all ends well.

Locale: New York.

Picture High Lights: In view of the plot a better title would seem to be "Collectors."

The Shyster-At-Law

By George Allan England

Character of Story: Crook story.
Theme: Shyster law practices.
Characters: John Hartwell, machinist; Ethel, his daughter; Everett Syme, manufacturer; Norriston Wolfe, attorney; Frederick Higgins, his assistant; Egbert Stevens, an attorney; Brenton Hastings; Pendleton, contractor; Gross, a gambler; "Bricky," a thief.

The Plot: John Hartwell, machinist in the factory of Everett Syme, is arrested for assault upon his employer who has insulted his daughter, Ethel. While in jail he falls into the hands of Norriston Wolfe, a shyster lawyer, who bleeds him for all the ready cash he has and finally obtains his freedom after blackmailing Syme with some pretended affidavits of girls whose names were secured through Hartwell. Wolfe employs Ethel as stenographer in his offices. Pretending to act as his friend and attorney, Wolfe blackmails Brenton Hastings who is in danger of arrest on a charge of conversion of funds. Hastings has gotten into the clutches of Gross a gambler and partner of Wolfe's. Hastings meets Ethel and falls in love with her. Warned by Pendleton, a contractor, that Wolfe is robbing him, Hastings endeavors to warn Ethel and her father but her father will not, at first, listen to anything against the man whom he regards as his benefactor. Hastings discovers that Wolfe has stolen from the library of the apartment which Hartwell rents, two valuable books and substituted other books in their place. Bricky, a thief, whom Hastings has befriended, steals the books from Wolfe and thus secures the evidence against him. Hastings threatens Wolfe with exposure. Wolfe suspects Ethel of complicity in the plot against him and locks her in his office where he attacks her. She is rescued by Pendleton who declares that he will make Wolfe pay back every cent he has blackmailed from others and that he will not let him get away. Wolfe makes two attempts to escape but is caught by Pendleton and forced to return and continued to disgorge his ill-gotten gains. Even Frederick, his clerk, gets evidence that he has no legal right to practice law and makes Wolfe sign over to him his law practice and motor car. Gross refuses to aid him and tells him that Frederick is now his attorney. The gambling house of Gross is raided and while Gross is attempting to escape, Wolfe shoots and kills him, afterward shooting himself. Frederick is arrested with the other persons found in the raid. Hastings and Ethel are married with the blessings of her father whose property has been restored to him.

Tired

By Edgar Franklin

Character of Story:
Theme:
Characters: Bradley Rush; E. Prentiss Merriam, financier; Blossom, Merriam's secretary; John Foale; Fay Ronalds; Ronalds, her father; Beatrice Stanton; Arthur Stanton; Stevens, a butler; Henry, footman; Dr. Forrest.

The Plot: Bradley Rush, a once rich young man who has tried to be a wizard of Wall Street, has his last forty thousand dollars in International Boat stock and has been bothering E. Prentiss Merriam, the heaviest stockholder as to whether or not the latter will stay with the stock while it weathers a storm. Merriam, eccentric and with other things on his mind, declares that if Rush does not stop bothering him he will intentionally knock the bottom out of the stock if it costs him a fortune to do it. Rush is warned by Merriam's secretary to stay away. A friend tells him of a Western millionaire who wants to buy a car and who wants to take a three day trip to try it out. This man will pay $2,500 for Rush's $7,000 car if it suits. Rush down to his last $90 and forced to pay that out as soon as he gets it on a forgotten race wager, agrees to make the trip. Fay Ronalds, a beautiful girl is in the party and Rush falls in love with her at first sight. Foale insists upon trying to pass a fast gray car on the road. At Albany Rush learns this car belongs to Merriam and that if Merriam sees him he will be ruined. He persuades the party to drive on to take dinner in the country. His tires are practically worn out and he has no money for new ones. Foale insists upon trying rough roads and they have two blow-outs, landing squarely in front of Merriam's country residence—a new one, just opened. Foale is mistaken for Merriam by the new butler. He tells Rush he intends posing as Merriam. Rush protests and Foale says Merriam beat him out of $50,000 once and that now he will have his revenge and take it out of Merriam's hide. The butler confesses that he has taken in two young people who said they were friends of Merriam's and whose car has broken down. These two, Henry and Beatrice Stanton greet Foale as Merriam and evidently do not know the substitution has taken place. The servants appear nervous and declare there has been a ghost in the house. Miss Stanton insists upon a champagne night cap. All drink but Rush and Fay. Rush finds spare tires in the basement and plans to get away and warn Merriam. He finds himself locked in. Fay is also locked in. Rush takes off the hinges of his door, and releases Fay. He surprises the Stantons and Henry the second man escaping in an auto. The others are all drugged. Merriam arrives to find Rush limping into the house after the fight with a bag which fell out of the car, the three having escaped in the motor. This bag contains Merriam's family jewels and he promises Rush a reward of $50,000 and also tells him his stock has earned him another $40,000. Merriam says he will be far away when Foale awakes. Fay regrets that Miss Stanton was a crook since Foale was flirting with her and Fay wants Foale to get over the idea of marrying her. Rush decides to take the advice of Merriam: "When you see what you want, grab it and hang on." He does so.

Lostman's Key

By Perley Poore Sheehan

Character of story: Adventure.
Theme: Love.
Characters: Alice Arden, a swamp maiden; Wade Benjamin, society man; Cicely Gorth, his fiancee; Jimmie Harjis, his rival; Hockey Tom, Alice's Uncle; Sam Taylor, guide; Tobe, sheriff; Mrs. Benjamin, Wade's mother; Benjamin, his father; Gorth, Cicely's father; a minister.

The Plot: Wade Benjamin, society man, is lost in the Florida Everglades while hunting. He is bitten by a moccasin just before he is discovered by Alice Arden, a daughter of the swamps, who is on her way to Lostman's Key—an ancient haunt of pirates, supposed by the natives to be haunted. Alice gives Wade first aid to the injured and brings him to a cabin nearby where she nurses him. She tells him that she is the ward of Hockey Tom who is a sort of uncle to her and an Indian trader. Hockey Tom, meanwhile, has been robbing a bank in a nearby city to get the means to send Alice away to college and arrives at the cabin wounded mortally. Jimmie Harjis, another society man, reading of Wade's disappearance makes love to the girl to whom Wade was engaged and spurred by her contempt when she learns of Wade's situation, he organizes a rescue party. Posses meanwhile are tracking Hockey Tom to the cabin. Wade and the girl find a skeleton locked away in one of the upper chambers of the cabin. This Wade knows is the skeleton of the girl's mother who had been locked in the room and left there to starve. When Hockey Tom comes, he explains to Wade that he has been wounded in the raid on the bank and tells him the story of Alice and her mother. Alice's father had come to Florida from Honolulu where he had known them. Arden was a missionary with a young wife and baby. Hockey Tom, was, or had been, a pirate, belonging to a band headed by a Spaniard named Gomez. The band had been broken up by the loss of their ship and the treasure buried on Lostman's Key by Gomez. Arden died suddenly of sunstroke and Gomez made love to the widow, finally carrying her away leaving a letter for Hockey Tom which broke the latter's heart. Tom followed and killed Gomez. He went to the cabin and called the woman but when she did not answer, went back to care for the abandoned child whom he made his ward. This story has just been told when the first posse, headed by the sheriff arrives. Wade warns them that they must not disturb Hockey Tom who is dying. One of the possee attempts to shoot Wade in the back and is himself wounded. The sheriff agrees to hold off his party but another posse arrives and the first posse joins them with the exception of the sheriff who decides to help Wade keep the old man's last hours free from intrusion. Then come motors carrying Wade's family and the Gorths, Jimmie Harjis and others. When the old man is dead, Wade tells them that he will marry Alice. His family protests and she tries to dissuade him but he insists and they are married by the family clergyman who has come with the party.

Picture High Lights: By playing both mother and daughter a part would be made for an actress of some ability in this.

A Man Named Jones
By Charles B. Stilson

Character of Story: Romance.

Theme: South Sea adventure and love.

Characters: Robert Lauriston Jones, idle rich; the mad Martian; Grimshaw, a sea captain; Kinsella, dealer in curios; Katherine Manning, Queen of Zaumouti; Foyara, Queen of Bomanvalu; Nambe, an interpreter; sailors, savages, etc.

The Plot: Jones, a rich and idle young man, entertains at his apartment a friend named Cooper who tells strange tales of South Sea islands and of emerald mines in Mexico. Jones awakens after a night of drinking to find Cooper dead on the floor with a strange kind of dog keeping guard over his body. The coroner declares that Cooper died of exhaustion and turns over his effects to Jones as the dead man's only friend. Jones finds one emerald worth $10,000 and a photograph of a South Sea island with a white girl surrounded by native warriors. He falls in love with the girl in the picture. He finds a mad man who declares that he is an immortal inhabitant of Mars and decides to take him along on a journey of discovery. Arriving at San Francisco Jones tries to find the location of the island of Zaumouti—the name on the back of the photograph—and is finally lured to a water front dive and attacked by sailors who pretend to have the information in order to rob him. Jones beats them off. He is next approached by Kinsella, a dealer in Oriental curios who says his partner, an old sea captain, knows the location of the island. Kinsella proposes a joint expedition in search of it and they set out taking the Martian along. At the island of Bomanvalu the Queen, Foyara, falls in love with the Martian and it is agreed that on the return trip he will stop and marry her. The ship arrives at Zaumouti and the white girl is on the beach. She is the daughter of a naval officer who came to the island on a scientific expedition. She has been stranded there and has become the ruler of the natives. She warns the party off, declaring that she knows Captain Grimshaw and his wickedness of old. Jones hears old Grimshaw plotting with the mate to do away with him and escape by jumping overboard and swimming to the island. He is attacked by a native but overcomes his assailant and reaches a cliff above the village. He witnesses the attack of Captain Grimshaw on the village—the Captain bringing ashore a cannon and machine gun. Jones picks off some of the attacking party from his point of vantage and is recognized as a friend by the natives and the white girl. He is permitted to come into their camp. His party is forced to retire to a cave and he is wounded. The Captain lures Katherine out with a flag of truce and takes her prisoner. Jones attempts to rescue her and is also taken prisoner. The Martian, left on board with two other sailors, seizes the ship and runs back to Bomanvalu where the Queen provides him with a small army of warriors. He returns and rescues Katherine and Jones. Grimshaw is left marooned on the island with the promise that his partner shall be notified. The partner prefers the business without Grimshaw and leaves him there. The Martian marries the Queen of Bomanvalu. Jones marries Katherine and though they learn the whereabouts of the emerald mines they are too busy being happy to trouble to hunt them up.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN"
A NEW MARK TWAIN
Scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers
by Arrangement with the Mark Twain Company

YET a picture that entertains delightfully, that makes you laugh, that brings back your childhood, that makes of you a boy or a girl again for a day, that brings to real life the beloved Huckleberry Finn and the other immortals of Mark Twain's quaint humor.

Do you know anybody that doesn't like Mark Twain? Well, here's a picture with an irresistible appeal for all lovers of Mark Twain—and that means just about the whole United States!

* " Persons attempting to find a motive in this narrative will be prosecuted; persons attempting to find a moral in it will be banished; persons attempting to find a plot in it will be shot."—Mark Twain.

Who Was the Man?

For him Milt Shanks gave up his honor, his freedom, the love of his wife, the respect of his dearly loved son and lived among the people he loved as a thing unclean. Why?

And in his hour of bitterest trial not one human soul spoke to him, and in all the United States just one man wrote to him.

Who Was the Man?

Dear Milt: Lee's surrender ends it all. I cannot think of you without a sense of guilt, but it had to be. I alone know what you did and what you endured. I send you a flag. It is not new but you will prize it the more for that. I hope to shake your hand some day.

Your friend,

—its punch is a thousand-heart throbs! Its beauty smiles through tears!

As long as human emotion shall endure—such is the life of "The Copperhead," a dramatic entertainment as eternal as time itself. Such an entertainment as made audience after audience rise to its feet in cheers at the end of the stage play. And, without exaggeration, this picture drama contains the finest piece of acting ever seen on the screen!

It is the one great American picture of today!

Founded on the play of the same name by Augustus Thomas.

A THOS H. INCE PRODUCTION

The discoverer of stars picked a winning combination of untold box-office value in his two new stars. But he went further than that. He picked stories of amazing popularity. "What's Your Husband Doing?" is a shining example.

"WHAT'S YOUR HUSBAND DOING?"

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

To exhibitors and public

"WE'RE as glad as you are that '23½ Hours Leave' was the big popular success it proved to be, and that many exhibitors found it the biggest box-office draw they've had. It's a pleasure to make a bow in a picture like that.

"We hope you'll find 'What's Your Husband Doing?' just as big a success. And we firmly believe you will. Mr. Ince has put in it the same spirit of youth, rollicking good humor and comedy that made our first starring venture so complete a success. We believe it'll make many a laugh sprout where there was only a smile before."

The intrigues in the tower home of a typical New Yorker.

The unclothed grace of the masked dancer.

The revenge of a jilted light-o'-love.

The escapades of a butterfly wife.

The sensational scenes in an " after hours " dancing palace. The shot at a revel that ends the " dance."

The wife's startling confession in court to save her husband.

The most wonderful night scenes of New York ever taken. A New York picture—taken in New York—with a wonderful New York cast—directed by a man who knows New York inside out.

"Too Much Johnson"

"My Name's Johnson"

Here's a "laughing-room-only" picture such as you don't meet up with in a month of holidays. It's just about as legitimate, bona-fide, unadulterated, full-ply comedy as the screen has been able to accomplish so far. And it came from a story that the last generation used to roar at regularly at least once a year. William Gillette's "Too Much Johnson" has been a synonym for the perfect stage farce for many years. And it hasn't lost an inch in pictures. It's all there and a lot funnier. It's full five reels of laughter without a let-down from beginning to end. You can go the limit with "Too Much Johnson." It's a box-office winner if ever there was one!

13th Thou shalt not spend

DO you know any man who spends more than he earns? Or any wife who spends more than her husband earns?

DO you know any women who resent being merely a "salaried slave" of a husband who earns?

DO you know any married couples who have to keep both eyes open to fight the high cost of living?

DO you know any folks who are struggling—to keep the modern "Thirteenth Commandment?"

DO you know anybody who wants to know just what it is that ruins so many marriages today?

DO you know any man or woman who is interested in the great American vice of today?

DO you know any persons who are interested mainly in life as it's lived today—right now—January, 1920?

—Well, if you do—then book "The Thirteenth Commandment." It's a picture that was made for Mr. and Mrs. Everybody in the United States today. And Mr. and Mrs. Everybody in your town will thank you for having shown it to them.

Pollyanna says:

"Most generally there is something about everything that you can be glad about, if you keep hunting long enough to find it."

Do you remember how the world welcomed "Pollyanna"—the Glad Book—and then "Pollyanna"—the Glad Play?

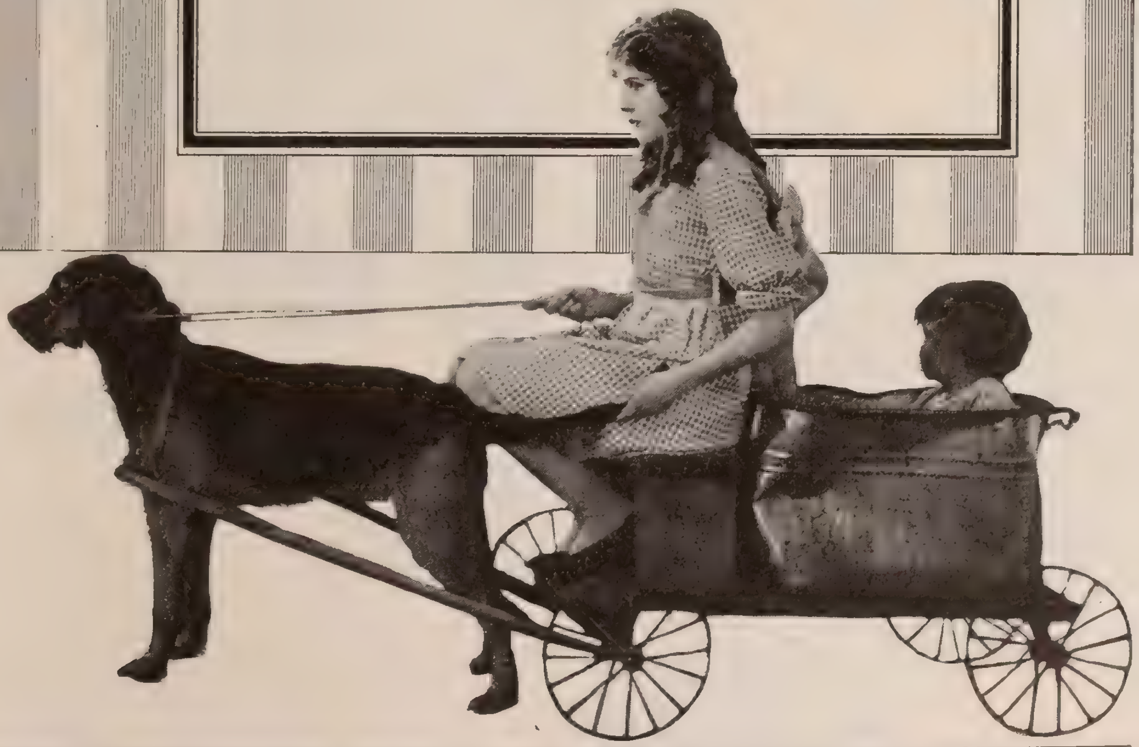
And was ever the weary world in greater need of the tonic of Gladness than now—on the eve of the release of the Glad Picture—"Pollyanna"?

And think! Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna"! What a vision of ineffable charm, of exquisite art, the mere words bring.

A story that flows straight from the great common heart of humanity, an answer to the world-old yearning for sunshine and laughter and gladness, enacted by an artiste at whose bidding the eyes of the multitude dim with the mists of Life's shadows or sparkle with the very joy of living.

Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna"—a gospel of Gladness, a miracle play, if ever there was one.

Released January Eighteenth



"Speaking of features, we must tell you that without doubt Doug's latest is about the best thing he has ever released . . . . take it from us that 'WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY' is a winner from every angle . . . . a picture which will stand as a masterpiece of its kind for many a day."

—Motion Picture News.

"For continuous and unalloyed good fun, it is in the front rank of Fairbanks' releases."

—Moving Picture World.

"A sure-fire attraction . . . . the audience rocks in one gale of laughter after another . . . . it is a real Fairbanks success . . . . exhibitors cannot afford to overlook its drawing possibilities."

—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"Douglas Fairbanks has come through with a blue ribbon winner in 'WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY' . . . . this is certainly going to get every audience and there is not a disappointment in all its footage."

—Wid's.

"'WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY' should be booked for a long run, advertised to the limit and presented as the best Fairbanks production to date. Audiences will pronounce it that. It will make box-office history. It is a picture that will cause talk . . . . the sort of talk that makes for bigger business each day, until the territory from which the patronage is drawn yields maximum returns."

—Exhibitors' Herald and Motography.

"It is one of the best films in which Fairbanks has indulged."

—New York Sun.

"It is a typical Fairbanks offering . . . . typical of his best days."

—New York American.

"Douglas Fairbanks is a delight all through the picture."

—New York Evening Mail.

"The picture is the best that Fairbanks has done since the early days when he used to have 'his picture in the paper' and get 'in again, out again.' You feel like exclaiming 'You have come back to us, Douglas, Douglas!'"

—New York Tribune.

"The reviewer boldly proclaims this the best Fairbanks picture since his debut as a screen star."

—Tom Hamlin's Newspaper Review Service.

"The whole picture is full of Fairbanks' fun and will greatly please the legion with whom the acrobatic actor is a favorite."

—New York Times.

"'WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY' is an excellent picture and presents Douglas Fairbanks at his best."

—New York Evening Sun.

"The energetic comedian certainly rolls by any clouds of gloom that may be hovering over the spectator."

—New York Telegram.

"'WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY' is Fairbanks at his best and that is what slangy persons are wont to call 'considerable plenty' best."

YOU KNOW—

You know the sort of gripping human interest plots and strong dramatic situations that AMELIE RIVES (Princess Troubetzkoy) devises!

You know the style of sturdy romance in which ALICE BRADY excels!

And you know Realart!

THE DOTTED LINE

There are dotted lines at the end of every contract. The important thing for you to know is what the name stands for that accompanies yours.

This name represents the company you are pledged to keep, and it's the company you keep that determines the measure of your success.

Realart's idea is that a contract involves partnership. And partnerships are successful only when they are mutually satisfactory—when there is team work.

Realart always will do its full share!

"The Sagebrusher" is a Tremendous Story of Heart-Grip and Humanness

Here is another hand-made Benjamin B. Hampton special production conceived for Great Authors' Pictures, Inc.— one of the great selective productions bearing the W. W. Hodkinson distribution imprint.

In work for more than six months, it has received the care and assistance in every stage of production of its author, Emerson Hough, who autographs its main title as the stamp of his approval of this faithful picturization of his novel.

Now ready for pre-release special engagements in the large cities and distributed exclusively by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"The Sagebrusher"

is an all-star cast production so filled with emotional and heart interest that it makes you gulp violently and rub the corners of your eyes to hold back the tears.

A story of sublime faith. A story that makes you realize that this is a good world to live in.

The story of a rough diamond who wouldn't kiss his beautiful bride, yet died to save her.

The utmost in a love story.

Made with the sympathy and tenderness of a woman by an organization of specialists that ranks the story always as the first consideration.

EMERSON HOUGH

"Only thoughts of you remain
In my heart where they have lain;
Perfumed the nights of you, remaining,
A hid sweetness, in my brain.
Others leave me; all things leave me;
You remain."

—ARTHUR SYMONS

Sure to be Advertised by all Exhibitors as "The Picture You Will Always Remember."

"Give the public tears and laughter," the greatest showmen of all times have said. "It is the public's great prescription on the screen or in the theatre."

"The Sagebrusher" has these elements and still others.

It has warmth, color, love, romance, cleanliness. It is filled with the honest passion of very human people.

Herbert Kaufman's WEEKLY

THE four following pages contain reproductions of the four-page advertisement on Herbert Kaufman's Weekly that appeared in the December 27th issue of the Saturday Evening Post and in the January number of McClure's. Every exhibitor owes it to his business to read them for information—and for profit.

> Sir Arthur Pearson
> England's great publisher and philanthropist

> "Herbert Kaufman entered the Great War when Belgium did—and he has been in it ever since. He dedicated his pen to the service of Democracy. No man has fought harder or longer for the cause of human right."
> Frederick L. Collins
> Publisher of McClure's Magazine

I am undertaking a momentous service to the American theatre and to American journalism.

I am bringing America's highest-paid and widest-read author to the screen.

I am bringing to the motion picture theatre the largest audience commanded by any living personality.

Herbert Kaufman is the one writer of our generation who has everything essential to success on the screen.

He puts an epic in a couplet. He dramatizes Opportunity. He writes prose-poems like "The Dreamers" and "The Man Who Sneered at Santa Claus"—and little things like these!—

"Take a risk or take the count."

"Some men would get in oftener if they'd get out sooner."

"Christmas gifts don't count if they aren't brought down the chimney."

"Most roosters wear their crows too long and their spurs too short."

He can cram Plato and Mrs. Humphry Ward and Mark Twain and Santa Claus and the Russian Soviet and Mary Donovan's love affair into a few reels of fast-moving, interest-attracting, attention-holding motion picture entertainment!

And that's the kind of thing he will do as only he can do it—in Herbert Kaufman's Weekly.

Herbert Kaufman's Weekly will appear in every motion picture theatre that is fortunate enough to secure a Herbert Kaufman franchise.

To the millions of Herbert Kaufman admirers who will want to see Herbert Kaufman's Weekly—I say "Ask your theatre manager, and ask him now!"

To the thousands of exhibitors who will want to show Herbert Kaufman's Weekly—I say "See the nearest Select exchange man to-day—or wire."

SAN FRANCISCO CALL

"Kaufman's editorials have made him famous wherever men of our speech hire or are hired. They seem to me of the finest, strongest, most helpful deliverances that have been penned 'since spoken word man's spirit stirred beyond his belly's need.'"

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT

"Sympathy with mankind in all its lowest and highest manifestations is the keynote of Mr. Kaufman's writings. He sees into the heart of the man to whom he writes. He is keen and clear eyed."

AUSTRALASIAN NATION

"He will be the pathfinder for an army of conquerors."

DULUTH HERALD

"He writes with a sword."

OTTAWA CITIZEN, CANADA

"His dynamic word has revealed the greatness of human power. * * * He has seen the sins and injustice of life and has realized the power inherent in man to conquer environment, both individually now and socially ultimately."

LONDON DAILY EXPRESS

"The spirit of America is in his pages."

CATHOLIC HERALD, LONDON

"His message is very much to the point, straight from the shoulder, epigrammatic and brilliant. * * *"

NEW ORLEANS PICAYUNE

"As an editorial writer of international influence, Herbert Kaufman is perhaps the greatest individual force in shaping the world thought currents of today."

Herbert Kaufman's Weekly Page, published simultaneously by a nation-wide chain of newspapers, including the Philadelphia Public Ledger, the New York American, the Washington Star, the Boston Herald, the Indianapolis News and the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, has reached the largest audience in America.

And now—he brings this vast audience to the motion picture theatre.

"It may be doubted," says the Chicago Tribune, "if any man before him ever had so many readers in his own time."

The millions who have followed Herbert Kaufman during the past decade, subscribing to magazines and weeklies for his writings—searching through the great Sunday newspapers for his scathing indictments of social and national wrongs and his messages of inspiration and encouragement—will now find concentrated in their local theatre the full range of his unique genius.

BINGHAMTON PRESS

"There is the love of mankind in all of them—that is why Mr. Kaufman writes, and that is what makes his writings popular; also, it is that which makes him one of the great influences in the world."

LONDON STANDARD

"A master of epigram, a cunning weaver of words, playing with their color and rhythm, glowing, militant, courageous, energetic and red-blooded by turns, this hater of humbug, cant, idlers and cowards has leapt to the forefront in a very few years."

PORTLAND OREGONIAN

Lost in this vale of death,

In mine
Tells more than living breath
That you
And I will spend

All that we sought

Hand"

ITS THRILLS—

Underground tunnels and secret vaults under the bay, chests of jewels and disappearing walls, submarine dips and airplane flights—these are just a few of the thousands of thrills that sprinkle the action of "The Invisible Hand." The fact that it is DIFFERENT is responsible for its having been booked by many exhibitors who never before ran a serial.

"A perfect gem of a picture, strong in dramatic power, excellent in characterization, superb in atmosphere, clean and wholesome.... I have heard people who saw every other feature picture on Broadway this week say quite emphatically that they prefer this play to any of the others. Very close to 100% entertainment.... DIRECTED BY EDGAR LEWIS

The governing board of the church had just about decided to let him go, for, they said, "He lacks backbone!" But what marvelous change was this? He faced the board, overwhelmed all opposition and reduced his enemies to silence; he met a wife-beater and thrashed him in a fair fight!... "Of all fighting parsons he was the...... fightingest!"..................................

It has always been my policy to play only the best of pictures procurable at my Strand and New Orpheum Theatres, but in your Harold Lloyds "Bumping into Broadway" I believe that I have obtained not only the very best from a comedy point of view but the very best from the box office stand point as well.

From present indications the New Lloyd Comedies are going to be as big a box office attraction as any star in dramatic or comedy acting upon the screen today. This is my opinion based on the business we are doing on "Bumping into Broadway" and I do not hesitate in recommending the New Harold Lloyd Comedies to all exhibitors.

Hand-Picked

With nine thousand, four hundred and seventy-two paid subscriptions (last week's report and jumping up every week), MOTION PICTURE NEWS reaches the highwater mark of paid subscription circulation in this field.

And the quality of this subscription circulation is as remarkable as its quantity.

It is hand-picked.

Every single subscriber has to do, prominently, with the trade. We force the new subscriber to indicate and prove this connection; otherwise the subscription money is promptly returned. We return several hundred of these subscriptions every year.

Just so with our newsstand circulation. We have reduced it to a minimum. We spend money to guard it, so that it will be restricted to the trade. Even so we don't guarantee, nor can any trade journal guarantee, a single copy of this newsstand circulation as being of any value to its advertiser.

Subscriptions alone tell a paper's readers and its circulation value; the rest is waste.

Our circulation books are open to any advertiser.

The "NEWS," in 1919 carried 790 more pages of paid advertising than its nearest competitor (including professional advertising in the Studio Directory).

The "NEWS" subscription circulation (handpicked, from the trade only) jumping fast toward 10,000, is already 9,472.

The "NEWS" serves this industry further by serving the newspapers. In conjunction with the Studio Directory the "NEWS" reaches 8,843,560 of the public through 315 newspapers in 129 cities.

Dear Mr. McAvoy:-

After screening the first two releases of the new Martin Johnson Series 'ON THE BORDERLAND OF CIVILIZATION, I decided that they would fill a long felt want on the programs at the Newman. This type of picture is not only unique and unusual, but combines all of the elements of a scenic and magazine reel. The fact that they are out of the ordinary and entirely different from any other single reel release make them most desirable.

I look forward to this single reel release adding considerable drawing power to our regular program, and it is my opinion that Martin Johnson has given us a single reel release of genuine merit.

Fair Play To Newspapers

¶ Are we as fair to the newspapers as we ask and expect the newspapers to be fair to us? This is a question highly important to the business. No one will question for a moment the argument that the newspaper is a prime essential to the photoplay.

It is not an argument; it is an accepted fact—accepted, however, in too large and vague a manner.

We expect the newspapers to run photoplay departments—the larger the better. We use the old argument that the photoplay has more devotees than baseball, and that consequently the paper owes it to its readers to specialize, equally at least, in photoplay news; that, regardless of advertising support from the film companies, the newspaper will acquire and hold circulation by telling its readers all about motion pictures, etc., etc.

And then we turn right about and deal out large advertising appropriations to the billboards and magazines.

Baseball, be it remembered, doesn't advertise in magazines and on billboards, doesn't advertise at all, so, just so long as the motion picture is advertised nationally—and it will be on an ever increasing scale—we cannot blame the hard headed business office of the newspaper for refusing to see both amusements through exactly the same eyes.

We don't send press notices to the billboards and magazines. Naturally, we have a newsy product and these are not news mediums. But on the other hand there is not a picture maker in our business, however infrequently he produces, but who immediately sees fit to have a press representative who will get him space in the newspapers.

We lean heavily on the newspapers. We have to.

We could eliminate all other forms of advertising—billboards, electric signs, magazines—all except that newspaper notice, however small, which says that a certain picture with a certain cast and a certain star will be shown at a certain theatre in a certain town at a certain time.

That is what sells the picture. All other forms of national advertising are supplemental to this direct selling force.

We sell pictures through the exhibitor.

Very well. How? How are the crowds made?

Right here is the direct answer to national advertising.

The exhibitor turns first to the newspaper. There's his most direct and quickest appeal to the largest number of possible customers.

He adds posters: feature advertising in the way of novel lobby display, cooperative window displays, street stunts, throw aways, etc.

He also adds what Mr. Clemmer of Seattle rightly calls an advertising feature, namely good music which together with house management, comfort and artistic effects holds old customers and makes new ones through word of mouth advertising.

There in a nutshell is the direct and potent advertising and selling force behind the picture today in every worth while theatre in the country.

There collectively is the national advertising that is selling pictures. Does anyone doubt it?

And right in the center of this national selling campaign day by day, in and out, is the indispensable newspaper.

We make no criticism here of magazine advertising, realizing fully its large constructive force in a supplemented way, and the prominence it has given the motion picture in the eyes of the public.

Speaking Editorially

MOTION PICTURE NEWS announces, in this issue, a raise in advertising rates, effective with the issue date of March 6th. This announcement would have been made in October last had the printers' strike not intervened. The rate affects all advertisers.

This new rate is a reasonable charge for the quantity and quality of the circulation of Motion Picture News. It is lower than the "circulation price" of other publications in other trade fields. It is furthermore made necessary by and fixed upon the present costs of printing, paper, postage and overhead.

These costs have been advancing for the past two years and have now reached a percentage of increase over twice as great as the advertising rate increase now announced.

The rate increase is an inevitable and logical element in our aim to maintain this publication as an economical and efficient factor in the trade.

Bed Rock Facts on Advertising

A HEATED controversy has been in progress between exhibitor organizations over advertising rights to the screen.

We speak of it in the past tense, hoping and believing that it is past—the printed part of it at least.

The infusion of personalities and insinuations was an uncalled for and regrettable step.

Knowing, as we do, the men at the head of each organization we know that their motives are wholly unselfish and directed only toward the upbuilding of exhibitor organization.

Exhibitor organization is a worthy and important project and the revenue from screen advertising is an immediate and generous means of establishing the much needed organization treasury.

The paramount issue here, however, is not an organization treasury; it is the ways and means of handling this screen advertising so the screen itself may be thoroughly safeguarded.

* * * * *

The Public Comes First

SCREEN advertising or no screen advertising, or by whom and for whom, we must play fair to the public else we'll sadly impair, if not destroy the fountain head from which all motion picture revenue flows.

We are tackling a very grave proposition.

Mr. Bullock, of Cleveland, hits the nail on the head when he says that the exhibitors' screen is the exhibitors' publication.

We trust that every exhibitor appreciates just what this means We have previously referred to the parallel responsibility here.

A publication holds highest the confidence of its readers. Without this confidence it is nothing. To this end the publication indicates clearly what is advertising and what is not. It is particularly careful to see that nothing enters its reading columns which in stealthy fashion advertises a product for sale.

Such a "slip-over" would be a direct betrayal of the readers' confidence; its additional result is to excite his indignation and disgust.

When this is done on the screen; when advertising is "slipped over," through scenes or subtitles in an entertainment film; when the exhibitor, himself, consciously runs an advertising or commercial propaganda picture without telling his audience in advance just what it is then he can exactly measure the feelings of his audience by his own should he have concealed advertising jump forth at him from the reading pages of his magazine and newspaper.

The Distinction and the Difference

LET us make a clear distinction here between two kinds of advertising; one is the "slipped over" subtitle or scene dramatic offering; the other is the straight out and strai through advertising film, advertising a product, a process, an ind trial plant, a country, a business or what not.

The first form of advertising ought to be eliminated, complet and immediately from the motion picture. Producer and exhibi and trade paper, all forces must unite to this end. It is dishone it is bad advertising; but above all it is a knife in the back of the tion picture. It will hurt, seriously.

The other form of advertising is a different matter.

We have always believed that eventually the screen would ca advertising; not, however, until screen advertising reached quality of magazine and newspaper advertising, which advertisi today adds and by no means detracts from the entertainment va of the publication.

In this connection the exhibitor's screen should be treated his publication. He should be paid advertising rates based upon filled seats; he or some competent and responsible agency sho carefully censor this advertising;—and then, most importantly, should be plainly labelled advertising.

* * * * *

Merely a Suggestion

WE have thought, for instance, that this advertising could run in a "section" like the advertising section of a mag zine, after the regular show, and so plainly indicated to audience so that they can stay or go, as they please.

It is in this connection that we say that the paramount issue screen advertising is not how the revenue is directed but the w in which the advertising is directed.

It is the public and their attitude toward it which we must co sider.

And this is a matter demanding the thought, experience a ability of men of the same calibre as our greatest publishers.

Fair Play to the Newspapers

So far as the billboards are concerned, the waste at times seem prodigious. Space is purchased blindly on roofs and at corne remote from population centers where equally bad position in new papers would raise heated protest. We agree, furthermore, wit A. H. Woods, that the time when billboards helped a show is abo passed. And we emphatically believe that billboard advertising pictures without plenty of direct newspaper or other local adverti ing bearing directly upon the picture and its time and place of pre sentation is largely money thrown away.

There are many arguments in this connection; but we simpl point to two: First, that pictures differ in distribution from an other product advertised and consequently their advertising mus also differ in just this degree; and secondly, their general or sup plemental advertising is only generously used where direct adver tising is employed upon a very large scale.

But the purpose of this editorial is not critical. We wish simpl to point to the newspaper, to emphasize its essential position, sid by side with the picture—now and forever and to hazard the opinio that, as the distribution and the national advertising are more an more scientifically directed the newspaper appropriation will advanc in ever widening circles.

And this newspaper advertising will be the very basis of tha cooperation between producer and exhibitor which also is inevitabl in the progress of this industry.

Dealing in Personalities

WE didn't hear half as much buzzing and animated discussion of the Loew-Metro deal as we expected—or as the magnitude of the transaction warranted.

Which only goes to show that, in this film game as in all other new fields, advance "hints" can take considerable of the edge from any news story.

The fact that the enlarged Marcus Loew interests were considering taking over of a producing organization has been tossed around the rumor market for many months. In these columns and others it has gained print.

One week the rumor has been running strong, the next it has faded away. A few weeks ago the name of Metro began to be linked in the gossip. Two weeks ago we were confidentially told by a high authority, "The Loew-Metro deal is all off." And this week the news breaks.

Two points stand uppermost in the story: First, that there will be no change in the identity of Metro as a producing organization. Second, that the new capital secured will place Metro in a position to do things that will "keep them all watching."

Some were wondering whether either the Loew-Metro link-up or the society event that took place Tuesday afternoon would have any effect on the reported Loew attitude towards the product of a certain well known distributing organization. Here's a grim battle being staged with only the "wise ones" as spectators.

IT'S surprising that a lot of silence greeted that recent open letter from Carl Laemmle in which he attempted to tear the roof off the first run theatre situation.

Carl went so far as to say, "The present situation in regards to the booking of pictures in 'key cities' has approached the edge of bribery.

And not a chirp from one of the hundreds of film men who must have read every word of the article with more than avid interest!

Except a brief line of comment that has just come to our hand from Jolly Jones, Jr., manager of A. H. Blank's Palace Theatre, at Mason City, Iowa. Mr. Jones encloses a clipping from an exhibitor letter that we published on the same page with Mr. Laemmle's communication and underlines this sentence: "If the first runs play a picture that has no merit we generally find it out, if they play a real picture, we find it out and our patrons in some way find it out at the same time."

To this Mr. Jones adds: "Here is the true answer to Carl Laemmle's article. He's out in the first round."

And not a word from the ranks of the producers! Nor from the big first run managers!

Yet, as we said the week the letter ran, Mr. Laemmle isn't the only producer who has expressed rabid opinions to us regarding the first run situation in a few cities.

¶An announcement of importance to all advertisers will be found on Page 823.

He is the only one who has had the courage to put the chip on his shoulder and issue a challenge.

I. Wolper, president of Mayflower, is expected back in New York Monday. Bre'er Wolper, who thought he was dodging all of the usual producer troubles by playing "directors" rather than "stars," arrives just in time to meet George Loane Tucker in a courtroom setting.

WE had expected that exhibitor row over industrials to reach a breaking point this week with Frank Rembusch's meeting scheduled at the Astor for Wednesday.

But the meeting didn't materialize in time for this week's news columns so the pot merely continues to simmer. The Astor was no place for a fillum man this week. All the "magnuts" were dispossessed by the auto men in town for the "big show," and those who didn't leave were put to shame by being "out-millioned" in conversation.

It's grating on the sensibilities of a fillum man who has held undisputed possession of the Astor tablecloths for the purpose of million-dollar calculations to have his privileges pre-empted by the motor show crowd. It's tough on a "magnut" whose tongue has tossed millions around recklessly to find a game that can give us cards and spades at the conversational act.

S. L. Barnhard, general manager of the Capitol Film Company, and Live Wire Eccles, were two visitors to the News sanctum this week. Both wore smiles as broad as the success that has come to Capitol during the past year. And both had good words to say about the News' Chicago representative, L. H. Mason, and concerning our handling of the Mid-West territory.

There's interesting reading aplenty for you in this issue of the NEWS—especially if you delight in arguments and scrappy letters.

On Page 824 the "Reader Has His Say" department will be found—and with it any amount of dynamite. Two exhibitors give expression to their opinions on Percentage booking—and in neither case does the suggestion of Percentage meet with any enthusiastic greeting.

Exhibitor Bleich, of Owensboro, Kentucky, favors us with the first disinterested word we have heard since the beginning of the exhibitor wrangle over industrial pictures. Exhibitor Bleich wants to know just why he should give the right to control his screen to anyone. There are numerous theatre owners who will agree with him.

Aside from the Loew-Metro deal the principal news of the week concerns the formation of "Exceptional Pictures." Starting out with contracts for "Grumpy" and Chic Sale, Exceptional will bear watching.

Reports from England that American film producers are suspected of carrying on a subtle "dry" propaganda have brought forth an interesting statement from R. H. Cochrane. Mr. Cochrane realizes the harm that can be done to American pictures in the foreign market by any suspicion of nationalistic or partisan propaganda.

If there is any man in the American film market who knows foreign film productions and their handling in this country better than Harry Raver we have yet to meet him. George Kleine is the only film man whose importing experience rivals Raver's. An interesting study by Harry Raver of the handicaps and possibilities of film importing will be found on Page 825.

DID THE NAUGHTY BIG MAN STEP ON THE LITTLE DARLING'S TOOTSIE-WOOTSIE TOES?

We are terribly sorry that we hurt your feelings, Leslie. After this we won't be quite so rough.

The next time you print news that isn't news—

We'll borrow a word from your issue of January 10th and say you had a MISUNDERSTANDING.

It must be wonderful to possess a sepia-tinted vocabulary. A choice of delicate words that breathe not of the "shorter and uglier" things but charm with the faint hues of—"MISUNDERSTANDING."

We confess to our rude and unrefined disregard for your crepe-de-chine feelings. We're sorry, Leslie.—

We're sorry we made you cry.

Yours "coveringly,"

BOB WELSH.

TEXAS EXHIBITORS IN TIE-UP

THE Texas Exhibitors' Circuit, comprising eight exhibitors in Texas, at a meeting of the Board of Governors on November 4, voted to tie up with the Motion Picture Owners of America for the membership of the Southwest.

It also voted to include in its membership exhibitors in South Oklahoma and South Arkansas served by the Dallas Exchange.

It is thought this move will make the circuit self sustaining.

Thomas Hancock Now With Producers' Security

Los Angeles, (Special) — Thomas Hancock, who for more than two years has served as Los Angeles manager of The World Film Exchange, has resigned this position to accept the western special representativeship of Producers' Security Corporation of New York. In his new work it will be Mr. Hancock's duty to negotiate with local producers and take care of all the western business for this new corporation. Haddon Stephens, formerly of the Los Angeles World Exchange and more recently manager of the Salt Lake World Exchange, succeeds Mr. Hancock as Manager of the Los Angeles branch.

Preliminary Flights Held for Ince's Contest

To determine the birdmen who will represent the Ince Aviation Field in the Trans-Pacific flight which is to start in February for a prize of $50,000 offered by Thomas H. Ince, noted sportsman and motion picture producer, preliminary flights were held at the Ince Field in Venice, before a crowd estimated at 10,000 persons, Sunday, December 28th.

Interest was divided between the fliers and two dainty Ince stars, Enid Bennett and Doris May, who acted as starters for the various events on the program.

Harry Roth Returns with Big European Business

Mr. Harry Roth, secretary and treasurer of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., of 110 West 40th street, has just returned from an extensive trip through Europe where he is said to have closed several large contracts for representation of foreign distributors in this country.

Tom Hamlin Leaves News; Edits State Journal

Tom Hamlin, for two years on the reviewing staff of Motion Picture News, has left to become editor and publisher of the Motion Picture Journal, a publication designed to serve the New York state and Northern New Jersey exhibitors.

Geo. Loane Tucker in Court

Producer of " Miracle Man " Alleges Contract with F. P.-Lasky Was Not Fulfilled

WHEN George Loane Tucker registered at the Claridge Hotel in time for Thanksgiving Day dinner, after spending some months at Los Angeles, making "The Miracle Man", same was duly noted by the trade and public press as is fitting when one of the veteran directors of the screen drama takes up either temporary or permanent residence in our midst. It is presumed that most people looked on Mr. Tucker's visit as a little recreation trip for the purpose of spending some of the money his latest motion picture had made for him, but such is not the case.

Business brings Mr. Tucker to New York. Legal business, to be exact. Through his attorneys, O'Brien, Malvinsky and Driscoll, suit is being brought on the equity calendar of the Supreme Court of New York County against The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in which the plaintiff seeks to have a cantract entered into with the two defendants in which Mr. Tucker agreed to make a series of six motion pictures for distribution by Famous Players-Lasky Corp., with the Mayflower Corp. as a subsidiary party to the agreement inasmuch as this firm was to be interested in financing the productions, abrogated. Mr. Tucker also seeks to restrain the defendants from interfering with the completion of the second picture of the series mentioned and of which "The Miracle Man" was the first and from further distribution of "The Miracle Man" (this latter applying specifically against the Famous Players-Lasky Corp.) except in accordance with the exact terms of a contract entered into with this firm, whereby certain provisions in relation to the billing of the picture are carried out.

It seems that Mr. Tucker agreed to make six pictures for the Mayflower Corporation and did make "The Miracle Man". Later arrangements were made whereby these pictures were to be released through Paramount.

A provision in the contract is claimed to have called for the billing of Mr. Tuckers name in type the same size as the production title, and three times as large as that of the Mayflower Company, also that all publicity must carry the announcement that the picture was a "George Loane Tucker Production."

Mr. Tucker's object in requiring this provision was that he wished to reap the benefit of the fame derived from the showing of the picture and thereby establish a trade mark of professional and financial value to himself.

It is alleged in Mr. Tucker's summons and complaint that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has not fulfilled its obligation in this respect and that the plaintiff is being deprived of benefits which should accrue to him.

It is also alleged that the Mayflower Corporation has unlawfully seized the unfinished negative of a picture made by Mr. Tucker at Los Angeles titled "Ladies Must Live" and is preventing the plaintiff from completing said picture thereby causing him further financial loss and interfering with his professional vocation.

The case is set down for trial Jan. 13th, the summons and complaint having been served Jan. 8th. No answer to the complaint has as yet been filed by the defendants.

There are many minor allegations of violation of the terms of the contracts previously referred to, one of which is the manner of paying over of the plaintiff's share of the receipts of the playing engagements of "The Miracle Man". In this connection it is interesting to note that the total gross receipts from the booking of the feature in the first eleven weeks is reported to have amounted to $538,891.00

FOX TAKES OVER FOREIGN POWER AGENCIES

THAT there is an unprecedented movement in exportation of American-made motion picture equipment there can be no doubt. Especially in view of the recent announcement by Mr. Edward Earl, president of Nicholas Power Co., stating that the Fox Film Corporation has taken over the agency for Powers Machines in France, Belgium and Switzerland. With this assignment of territory these machines are actively represented in every part of the world.

Since Mr. Earl has been president of the Nicholas Power Co., it has been his policy to develop intensively the export side of the industry. As a proof of his success may be mentioned the sale of over 1200 machines to the Walturdaw Company of England.

George Eastman Honored by N.A.M.P.I.

A morocco-bound, gold mounted album was presented to George Eastman of Rochester during the Christmas season, through the couriership of J. E. Brulatour, acting as vicarious Santa Claus for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The text of the lettering was a resolution expressing appreciation of the invaluable contributions made by Mr. Eastman to the progress and development of photography and motion pictures.

Norbert Lusk Appointed Agent of Ince Studio

Los Angeles, (Special) — Norbert Lusk, formerly West Coast publicity director for Goldwyn, has been appointed Eastern press representative of the Thos. H. Ince Studios by Hunt Stromberg, Director of Publicity and Advertising. He will make his headquarters in New York.

MOORE BUYS OUT A STOCKHOLDER

TOM MOORE, President of Moore's Theatres Corporation, this week announced the purchase from J. A. Muehleisen of the entire block of stock held by the latter in the Moore Enterprises, consisting of 1633 shares common stock and 1633 shares preferred.

Mr. Muehleisen was formerly Secretary-Treasurer of Moore's Theatres Corporation and resigned to take up a new enterprise in the automobile field.

Zukor-Loew Wedding is Solemnized

In the presence of 350 guests assembled in the Crystal Room of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Miss Mildred Harriet Zukor, daughter of Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Arthur Marcus Loew, son of Marcus Loew, president of the Loew Circuit of theatres, were united in marriage, Jan. 6. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise.

The room where the ceremony took place was artistically decorated under the supervision of artists from the Famous Players-Lasky studio on Fifty-sixth street and a motion picture camera recorded the nuptials from the moment when Miss Lucille Goldstein, flower girl, started strewing rose petals down the steps of the Crystal Room in the path of the bridal party. The marriage was solemnized under a canopy of pink and white lilies.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by Misses Frances Kaufman, Myrtle Deutsch, Beulah Kohn, Sylvia Cahn, Rose Bloom and Corine Rosenheim. Eugene Zukor, brother of the bride, was best man for the bridegroom.

Garretson-Smith Publicity Firm Launched

Two widely known Chicago publicity men, Ben Garretson and Paul Gerard Smith, have joined forces and formed an advertising organization for the handling of advertising, publicity and exploitation campaigns for motion picture producers, exhibitors and exchanges. The new firm will be known as The Garretson-Smith, and its offices will be located at 39 W. Adams street.

Ben Garretson has been connected with motion picture enterprises in Chicago, New York, Cleveland, Kansas City and other large picture centers for 15 years. His efforts aided the success of Clune's big picture, " The Eyes of the World," in the middle west and for many other like pictures. At the present he is general press representative for the Linick-Jacoby Enterprises.

Paul Smith has been engaged in motion picture, editorial and advertising work for 5 years, with the exception of 18 months which he spent with the 6th Regiment of Marines in France and Germany. He was the founder of Screen Opinions, which he edited up to the day he left for military service.

Marcus Loew Buys Interest in Metro

Marcus Loew, "the new vaudeville king," who is now affiliated with Metro-Pictures Corporation

Important Deal Results in Acquisition of Stock by Big Theatre Man; Mutual Benefit and Expansion to Grow Out of the Affiliation

THE extensive expansion of the Marcus Loew, Inc., interests culminated last week in a business affiliation with the Metro Pictures Corporation. The deal effected is said to have involved several millions of dollars. Through the purchase by Loew of Metro stock, the theatre man's circuit of houses and the picture company start the new year under conditions which have been planned to lend to mutual expansion.

Marcus Loew, head of the Loew enterprises, and Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, in announcing the deal, declare it to have been the outcome of negotiations that have extended over a period of several months, during which every detail has been most carefully considered and worked out. It unites the business interests of the largest exhibiting chain in the United States, which is increasing every day in strength and scope, with those of one of the strongest producing and distributing organizations in the industry.

Market for Metro Films

The final papers in the arrangement have been signed by the chief executives of the two organizations. They let it be known that the business merger will mean the closest sort of cooperation between Loew and Metro, with the Loew houses on the one hand furnishing a certain and permanent market for the Metro product, and Metro on the other providing a permanent source of motion picture material.

"This arrangement with Loew, Inc.," says an explanatory statement by Mr. Rowland, "cements a friendship of long standing between Metro and the Loew enterprises. For several years the closest relations have existed between the two companies. The present union of interests is the logical development of the constantly growing good will on both sides. It means that we will each be of greater strength to the other.

"The Loew Theatres, comprising an imposing circuit, will assure continuous and adequate representation for the Screen Classics, Inc., special productions of the 'fewer and better' sort originated by Metro and already sweeping the country. It will also assure the highest quality of motion picture entertainment for the Loew Theatres, entertainment of a quality, we think, that will make the Loew Theatres even more powerful factors in the communities they serve than they now are.

"The arrangement will in no sense interfere with our established policy towards the independent exhibitors. The independent showman will receive the same service and be accorded the same zealous effort on Metro's part to give him quality productions, as has characterized Metro's past dealings with the owners of these houses.

"The independent theatre man, for instance, will always be able to obtain Metro pictures in fair competition in the open market, as heretofore, and benefit by their pulling power. This association with Loew, Inc., will also enable Metro to go the limit in its

Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League Holds Busy Session

THE Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League the State of New York held an imrtant session on January 2nd at the oquois Hotel at the city of Buffalo. he meeting of the committee was preded by an informal luncheon.

The meeting was called to order by e chairman, Jules Michaels, of the cademy Theatre of Buffalo. Reports ere received on the successful Suny campaign in Schenectady, and on e question of screen advertising. The port on the latter subject was made Charles L. O'Reilly, who went into e subject exhaustively and who was tened to with great interest. The o reports were approved unaniously.

It was decided to start without delay campaign for either the repeal or the odification of the 5 per cent. film renl tax. The League will at once get to touch with other states and in connction with them will get to work on e proposition. In describing Execuve Secretary Berman's report on his visit to Washington, the statement from the Motion Picture Exhibitors League reads: "Executive Secretary Berman reported on his visits to Washington and on the dismal failure of the Black organization to get even the slightest relief or concession from Congress. He also reported on his visit to Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, on the question of aiding in the Americanization work which is to be undertaken in response to a joint resolution of the House and Senate Committee on Education. Mr. Berman's report was adopted unanimously."

The question of legislation at the coming session of the state legislature received much consideration at the hands of the Executive Committee. A special committee, in conjunction with the officers of the League, was designated to meet at Albany next week to discuss the legislative program as affecting the exhibitors of the State of New York.

Shallenberger on Coast

W. E. Shallenberger of the Arrow Film Corporation has arrived in Los Angeles where he will remain for the next two weeks negotiating new releasing contracts with Independent Producers for 1920.

Upon his arrival at the Morris Schlank Studios, Mr. Shallenberger immediately screened the first three of the 1920 series of the Hank Mann Comedies and immediately wired an excellent report on them.

COVERING THE FIELD

"THE New Year started off immense; with one exception—have not received the December 27th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Had looked forward to this number in happy anticipation and the disappointment at not having it arrive was in consequence doubled. Miss it. Need it. Must have it. Send it. Please. What more could one say?"

Al Kaufman in East but Returns to West Soon

LOS ANGELES, (Special)—Al Kaufman of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation organization has returned to New York after spending a week on the coast, but will return West shortly where he will be identified with the production field. While here, he purchased a very attractive residence in the fashionable Wilshire district and expects to make this his permanent home. This was Mr. Kaufman's first visit to the coast since 1914, when he was west with the Famous Players-Lasky Company, as manager, and filmed two subjects starring Miss Pickford.

Realart Will Build Los Angeles Exchange

LOS ANGELES, (Special) — Realart Pictures Corporation, through its local branch manager, Oren Freeland Woody, has just signed a ten year lease on the property 812 South Olive street, Los Angeles, for the erection of an exchange building to cost approximately $100,000 it is said. It is anticipated that the building will be ready for occupancy March first, when Realart will move from its present location, 209 Knickerbocker Building. The quarters will be jointly occupied by Pathe, it is stated.

M.P.D.A. OFFICERS

THE following are the newly elected officers of the Motion Picture Directors' Association: Director, James Vincent; Asst. Director, Paul Scardon; Technical Director, George B. Seitz; Treasurer, C. Jay Williams; Secretary, Travers Vale; Inner Guard, John Joseph Harvey; Outer Guard, William F. Haddock; Trustee, 3 years, J. Searle Dawley.

Mr. Vincent's last picture was "The Woman in Grey"; Serico; Paul Scardon "Partners of the Night", Goldwyn; George B. Seitz, "Pirate's Gold", Pathe; C. Jay Williams reelected from last year; and J. Searle Dawley, "The Harvest Moon", Artco. now in the making.

Agreement Settles Chicago Operators' Troubles

The threatened trouble in Chicago over the demands of motion picture operators has been averted by a new agreement on wages and working conditions made between Operators Union 110 and a committee of the Allied Amusements Association representing the exhibitors.

The basic wage rate was fixed at $1.12½ per hour, which marks an advance of twenty five per cent. Minimum working week of thirty two hours and a maximum one of forty four is provided. The agreement was unanimously approved at a meeting of the Amusement Association members Jan. 6.

Exhibitors who are not members of the association must pay $1.25 per hour.

Film Folk to Aid Actor Fund Benefit

The management of the Royal Ponciana Hotel, Palm Beach, Florida, desiring to aid the Actors' Fund of America's campaign to secure a $2,000,000 endowment to sustain the charity, have offered to Daniel Frohman all the resources of the hotel and the grounds, for an entertainment and a ball on February 27th.

Mr. Frohman immediately accepted the offer, and will manage the affair personally. The performance will be made up of the visiting theatrical people there at the time. Mr. Frohman already has the promised assistance of Irving Berlin, Lieutenant Gitz Rice, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Alma Gluck and Efram Zimbalist.

Adds House to Chain

W. W. Watts sprang a surprise on New Year's Day when he announced that he had taken a long term lease on the Lyric theatre building, to take effect July 1, 1920. Watts had just completed arrangements whereby the Princess theatre comes under his management on February 15. This will give him the Gaiety, Princess and Lyric theatres and make him one of the biggest exhibitors in the middle west.

Watts is now occupying the Vaudette theatre, but will give it up March 1.

Felix Feist Touring Country

Vice-President of Goldwyn Will Meet Exhibitors on Two-Month Tour to Coast

FELIX FEIST, vice-president and manager of sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, left New York Monday, January 5th, for a tour of the country which will last through January and February and during which he will visit the most important motion picture centers in the far west, the middle west and the south. The object of Mr. Feist's trip is to talk with exhibitors, among whom he probably has a wider personal acquaintance than any other executive in the business, and to make a close study of conditions as they exist in various sections of the country.

Since Mr. Feist made his last tour of the Goldwyn branches, there have been many vital changes in the Goldwyn organization, due to the inclusion of new financial and producing interests that have made it possible for the company to realize its ideals in the making of photoplays. In his transcontinental tour, Mr. Feist plans to deliver personally the Goldwyn message for the year 1920, and to explain to every exhibitor that he meets the exact nature of the policy under which pictures now are being made and distributed.

All of Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges are in smooth running order at the present time, so that instead of devoting his time to the details of office business, Mr. Feist will be able to spend most of the hours passed in each city to meeting exhibitors and getting first hand information about conditions in their territory.

Before leaving New York, the Goldwyn vice-president said that the importance of the coming season, which is liable to see many changes of great moment to the industry is recognized, and that the opinion of the exhibitor is bound to carry more weight in guiding the policies of producing companies than it ever has in the past.

Felix Feist, vice-president and sales manager of the Goldwyn Pictures Corp.

"Many of the country's most far-sighted showmen are too busy conducting their own affairs to come to New York to talk things over," he stated, "yet it is necessary to receive from them a candid expression of opinion, if the executives of a producing organization are to have a thorough knowledge of the trend of feeling in the country at large."

Mr. Feist will get in touch with managers of theatres, large and small; he will learn just what type of pictures they are counting upon to draw business during the coming months, and if there are any defects in the present system of distribution, he will be on hand to rectify them.

Following is the approximate itinerary announced by Mr. Feist: Chicago, January 6, 7, 8; St. Louis, 12, 13, 14; Kansas City, 15, 16, 17; Omaha, 18, 19, 20; Denver, 21, 22, 23; Salt Lake, 24, 25, 26; Seattle, 29, 30, 31; February 1; San Francisco, 2, 3, 4, 5; Los Angeles, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10; Dallas, 13, 14, 15; New Orleans, 16, 17, 18; Atlanta, 19, 20, 21; Cincinnati, 22, 23, 24.

Educational Sales Head on State Wide Tour

Sales Manager John J. Iris, of the Educational Films Corporation's New York Exchange, leaves this week to begin a trip through up-state cities in the interest of "Educational" short-subjects.

For some time, Vice-President E. W. Hammons has been planning an extensive sales campaign to begin with the New Year, and Mr. Iris' trip is to start the ball rolling in New York State.

The trip will make it possible to get in personal touch with the up-state exhibitors, and will lead to a better understanding of their requirements, which will govern the future plans of the New York exchange.

The Robert Bruce Scenics; Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement; Black-and-White Comedies; the Red Cross Travel Series and numerous "Educational" special releases are to receive the additional exploitation.

Appointments of Note in Canadian Field

Several appointments of exceptional interest in the Canadian moving picture field have occurred during the past few days. Mr. Will M. Elliott, manager of the fine Regent theatre, Toronto, who is rated as one of the outstanding moving picture theatre managers in the Dominion, resigned on Dec. 13 to become manager of the new Allen theatre at Winnipeg, Manitoba, which was scheduled to open on Christmas Day.

A few weeks ago announcement was made that Oral D. Cloakey, one of the principal Allen figures in the Canadian West, would become manager of the new Allen theatre at Winnipeg, but it now develops that Cloakey has taken the management of the Walker theatre, Winnipeg, which accommodates high class road shows as well as moving picture attractions from time to time. Cloakey succeeds Charles Spink, who has gone to New York to take up new theatrical work there.

constant endeavor to improve the ar tistic quality of its productions, wit the guaranty that there will be a de pendable market for them, not only i the Loew houses, but in the great man other high-class theatres where the have in the past proved so acceptabl as entertainment and so sound as com mercial assets when measured by th returns at the box-office.

"Furthermore, it will greatly enlarg the field for the independent, or 'free lance' director-producer. Metro wi be in the market to buy independer productions for distribution by or large and highly specialized exchang system. Any man who has made good picture may bring it to Metro."

Announcement of the Loew-Metro tran action also makes it plain that each organ zation will retain its individual identit There will be harmonious and helpful c operation between the two, but Metro is remain, of course, as primarily a producir company and the Loew, Inc., enterpris hold to their function as purveyors of m tion picture and vaudeville entertainment.

With regard to the measure of co-oper tion between the two organizations, it is a nounced that the executives of each will in close touch, notwithstanding the arrang ment providing for maintenance of separa identities. In addition, the Metro board directors will be reorganized with membe of the Loew, Inc., directorate represented it. This is expected to establish the mc harmonious business relations, as the pro lems of one organization will necessarily pa take of some of the problems of the other.

"We have been reminding the trade fro time to time that we intended to expand a expand and then expand some more," ad the statement of the Metro president. "O promises have not been idle words, as th arrangement just entered into will atte The same is true of the Loew enterpris It is now our plan to grow together; ea to profit and grow stronger through t strength of the other.

"This arrangement will enable us to the great things we have planned and aspi to. Relieving us of a great measure of co cern about the market for our product, a infusing not only new and vigorous ide but additional financial reserves as well, leaves us free to devote our major energ to pictures that are ever better in all spects.

"Meanwhile, we wish again to reass our friends, the exhibitors, that they as as we are to benefit by this union of bu ness interests on the part of Loew, Inc., Metro. Affiliations such as these are ine able, in view of the present-day trend of industry. But they will help rather th embarrass the man who owns his own tion picture theatre and seeks to bring to patrons photoplays of the better sort."

As part of the preliminaries to the co pletion of the affiliation the Loew organ tion has already established closest relati with Metro's extensive distribution syst The Metro exchanges, numbering thirty, situated in strategic centres throughout United States from Maine to California from Canada to the Gulf.

In Greater New York there are thi seven Loew theatres, while the ch throughout the country is being added every day. These theatres will be in foundation of a constant and permanent m ket for the Metro-Screen Classics.

Marcus Loew's previous dealings Metro have demonstrated to him the popularity of the Metro stars and the office value of the special production which their talents are displayed.

REVISED PERCENTAGE CHART

A. P. WAXMAN of the Rialto theatre, Passaic, N. J., who last week contributed an article on " Percentages " together with a Chart showing how his suggestion worked out, this week contributed a corrected chart, finding a matter of $500 had gone astray in his initial one.

A comparison of the chart published last week and the one appended, will make clear the manner in which Mr. Waxman believes the exhibitor and distributor should share:

Gross	Exhibitor.	Distributor.
First $500 Pays to normal film rental to distribution..		$500
Next $500 Returns the normal film rental to exhibitor	$500
Next $500 Pays the normal overhead of exhibitor....	$500
Next $500 Pays the normal profit of the exhibitor..	$500
Next $1,000 (Here's where the "Special" begins to go above normal and distributor gets 65% of it)	$350	$650
Next $500 And here's where said "Special" goes over unquestionably on its own merits and distributor gets 70%..............................	$150	$350

irst Run Shifts in Chicago

Purchase of Interests By Balaban and Katz Changes Complexion of Situation

PORTANT changes in the complexion of the first run theatre sition in Chicago and throughout nois are expected to follow the purse by Balaban and Katz of the fifty cent. interest owned by Jones, ick and Schaefer in the First Nanal Exhibitors' Circuit franchise that territory, exclusively reported last week's issue of the NEWS.

The transfer of the half interest in franchise, said to be at a cost to laban and Katz of $250,000, gives t firm an equal main franchise partship with Ascher Brothers for all st National releases in the state. is carries with it the first run privges for the Riviera and the Central rk Theatres, owned and operated by laban and Katz, and credited by ntral Western exhibitors as two of finest motion picture houses been the two coasts.

Heretofore, the downtown theatres, luding the Randolph, McVicker's the Rialto, owned and operated by nes, Linick and Schaefer, have given t run presentations to the Circuit's ractions. Whether this will conue to be the case until the Capitol, th five thousand seats, is completed Balaban and Katz as their first vene in the so-called loop district, is t explained by them. The Capitol, hich is being built at the intersection State and Lake streets, will be the gest motion picture theatre in the ntral west, and will have a capacity ualled only by one other theatre in country.

Meantime, it is freely predicted that re is every possibility of a change the downtown first run showings of rst National attractions which will e this preference jointly to the viera and the Central Park, with the eatres controlled by Ascher Brothers ining in an equitable arrangement of tes which will give even honors to e houses controlled by both interests.

The Tivoli will seat about 4,500, and e Capitol, to be located at State and ke streets, near Marshall Field's store, will seat about 5,000. These houses will, if plans do not miscarry, be completed before the close of the present year, possibly early in the autumn. Balaban and Katz, who are never given to rash statements, confidently state that these theatres will far surpass even the brilliant Riviera and that the proposed Capitol will rival the famed opera houses of the great European cities.

The purchase of the large interest in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit marks the entrance of this firm into the distributing field. While they state that they will continue to give most of their attention to their exhibitor activities, they are already co-operating with the local First National exchange, especially in the exploitation of the pictures.

Exhibitors in Six States Band for Protection

The exhibitors of the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Northern Michigan have organized under the name of Exhibitors' Protective League to safeguard their individual and collective interests against unfair legislation, censor committees, producers who are going into the exhibitor's end of the business and producers and advertisers who are attempting to snipe their screens without their consent.

Charles W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D., is the president; A. L. Robarge, Wausau, Wis., is vice-president; F. E. Nemeo, St. Cloud, Minn., is secretary and S. G. Latta, Fergus Falls, Minn., is treasurer. A. L. Picker, Ironwood, Mich., is chairman of the board of directors. Other directors are Mr. Philip W. Meyers, Minot, N. D., J. C. Collins, Berry, Iowa; Fred Larkins and Jay Gould, of Minnesota.

They have appointed H. L. Mitchell their executive secretary and have opened up a temporary headquarters and office at 251 Plymouth building, Minneapolis.

Exception Pictures Backed by New York and Boston Capital Will Produce for Robertson-Cole; " Grumpy " Bought; Chic Sale Signs

ONE of the most important announcements of the many which mark the beginning of the new year in the motion picture industry is that of the formation of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation which has already completed plans for the production of several big features in the coming twelve months. At a single bound the new company leaps to an established place in the business for co-incident with the announcement of its formation comes the news that it will be one of the producing allies of Robertson-Cole.

The first production news of the new organization was the purchase of " Grumpy," the theatrical play. Irvin Cobb's well known story " A Smart Aleck " has also been purchased and " Chic " Sale, vaudeville and Winter Garden favorite, will make his screen debut in it.

Chic Sale, to be seen in Exceptional Pictures

Eastern Capital Backing

Robertson-Cole acted for the new organization in the acquisition of these early plays and in the signing of "Chic" Sale and for this reason the activities of Exceptional were kept from public discussion. It was desired to have the company well organized before announcing it and this has now been achieved. The organization, complete in every detail, is about to start on the actual work of producing and the first Exceptional picture, "Chic" Sale in "A Smart Aleck".will be commenced within the next two weeks.

The financial interests backing the new enterprise have not been revealed, but it is understod that Boston and New York capital is interested, in addition to some of the men who backed the Martin Johnson South Sea Pictures, which were among the big money makers of 1919. The company is a Delaware corporation, capitalized at $1,200,000. Clifford L. Lyall, Vice-President and Treasurer of the State Street Trust Co., of Boston, one of Massachusetts' most substantial financial institutions, is President of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation.

Announcement will be made shortly of the Executive Staff of the new corporation. The scenario and production units have been organized and will be assembled in the California studios. For the immediate future the company will utilize leased studios.

In securing "Grumpy" it was explained that the desire was to acquire a stage production of proven merit and financial strength and to put it out as one of the most elaborate screen productions of the day. A big price was paid for the motion picture rights and no expense will be spared in bringing out every strong feature of the play in the most artistic and masterly way. A noted star, peculiarly well adapted to play the part of "Grumpy", will be selected for this stellar role and will be supported by a cast of undisputed ability.

"Chic" Sale was engaged after the most exacting tests of his remarkable characterizations had demonstrated that the screen intensified his comic appearance and accentuated his dramatic ability. He has for several years been

Sunday Opening Is to Stand in Spokane

No concerted effort on the part of the clergymen of Spokane, Wash., will be made to close the theatres on Sunday, for the present. Sunday closing of theatres was wiped off the city's ordinance records recently through the passage of Commissioner Tilsley's new ordinance repealing the old Sunday "blue law,' passed nearly 30 years ago. The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Episcopal bishop for the Spokane diocese and the Rev. George W. Knepper were present as representatives of the ministerial association and expressed their approval of the new ordinance.

Wells Syndicate Formulates Bigger Plans

Thousands of dollars are to be expended by the Wells Amusement Syndicate, Inc., on improving old theatres and building new ones in Richmond and in Norfolk, Va., according to an announcement made by Otto Wells, general manager of the corporation, whose headquarters are in Norfolk. Jake Wells, his brother, is president of the company and maintains offices in Richmond.

Sam Harris Leases Site for Big Theatre

A telegram from the Coast conveys the information that Sam Harris of the Ackerman and Harris combine, which owns the Hippodrome vaudeville circuit, has just concluded negotiations for the lease of a piece of high-priced property at Seventh Street and Broadway, Los Angeles, which is to be used as the site of a new theatre and office-building estimated to cost two-million dollars. The theatre, which will have a seating capacity of three thousand, is to be devoted exclusively to the showing of motion pictures.

It is also reported in the same telegram that S. L. Rothapfel, managing-director of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, leaves the West shortly for New York. Robert Poole will manage the California house.

Fire at Tampa Causes Close-Down of Shows

On Tuesday, December 30th, at 4 P. M., fire broke out along the waterfront in Tampa, Fla., which soon had two city blocks blazing like an inferno. Eventually the fire spread to the cable house of the electric power company supplying the city, and Tampa was left in darkness. Candles and lamps were called into service, and some efforts were made to stage vaudeville and picture performances at various local houses.

The Prince Theatre, where vaudeville is given in addition to the pictures, Manager McLaughlin was able to find enough candles to light up one corner of the stage, and a show was presented, it is said. After a futile search for lighting equipment, the Sans Souci had to abandon all hopes of staging a performance. The Alcazar, too, where the picture "Everywoman" is being shown, was obliged to close down. Electric lights and street cars remained out of commission until ten in the evening, when connection with the power plant was re-established.

Coast Banquets Arthur Kane

Woody, Los Angeles Realart Manager, Arranges Testimonial; Notables There

OREN FREELAND WOODY, Los Angeles Branch Manager for Realart Pictures Corporation, gave an elaborate dinner recently in the Alexandria Hotel to Arthur S. Kane, the recently retired President of Realart. Mr. Woody gave the dinner as his personal testimonial to a man and friend with whom he has been identified for twelve years.

Mr. Kane has arrived on the coast from New York, to renew old acquaintances in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

One of the largest assemblages of representatives of the press, theatres and trade papers ever attending a similar affair was present at this function. Meredith P. Snyder, Mayor of Los Angeles, and his wife, were among the thirty-five dignitaries present. Mayor Snyder, in his speech, dwelt upon the immense importance of the film industry to this city. No mayor or official of any city has ever accentuated the value of an industry to a municipality more than did the Los Angeles head in crediting the motion picture industry.

Mr. Arthur S. Kane, one of the deepest students of film affairs of this era, spoke at length upon his identification with this accepted industry. He told of his creation and formulation of Realart, which Mr. Kane was entirely responsible for.

Other speakers were Wm. Desmond Taylor, the Realart Director; Edwin R. Collins, Wesley M. Barr, Henry Dougherty, J. E. Rickards, Leete Brown, Darwin Karr, J. C. Jessen, A. H. Giebler and Fred Miller.

R. H. Clark, Manager, New York Exchange of First National, Attacks Alleged Inserts of "Convenient" Ads in Entertainment Films

"AMERICAN exhibitors have been deliberately betrayed by certain producers and distributors at a profit to the latter, for their unscrupulous breaches of faith and confidence, amounting to hundreds of thousand of dollars from the sale of 'convenient' advertising possibilities in strictly entertainment film to national advertisers, and for which exhibitors have been charged high rentals. This practice has grown to amazing proportions. It has become a stealthy, secret method of 'playing both ends against the middle,' a violation of all ethics, written or unwritten, which govern relations between manufacturers and consumers, and a dangerous form of capitalizing exhibitor confidence without regard for the exhibitor's moral rights."

This is the keynote of a statement said to be authorized this week by R. H. Clark, general manager of the New York Exchange for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and a member of the Board of Directors for the national organization.

R. H. Clark, General Manager of the First National Exchange of N. Y. and a Member of the Board of Directors of the Circuit

Claims Wide Information

In the statement Mr. Clark attacks the alleged injection of "convenient" advertising into productions which he reports are sold to exhibitors by producers and distributors as being exclusively entertainment film, and for which exhibitors are reported to pay the usual service rentals. The material which he outlines, and the allegations he makes are said to be the results of information, which he declares has been imparted to him by exhibitors in his particular territory, and which, according to his statement, has been submitted to the Home Office of First National by theatre owners in practically all sections of the country.

"It is a miserable, petty trespass on conditions which compel the majority of exhibitors to book productions without screen examination," he continues. "Cashing in without regard for obligation seems to be the actuating impulse. These same producers and distributors bellow mightily in the columns of the trade journals whenever a group of exhibitors in any territory proposes to meet an issue by joint action. In the same stenographer note books that contain the plaints against exhibitors you'll find letters to national advertisers, soliciting money in exchange for 'convenient' ad values in pictures they release to exhibitors on regular service contracts.

"It is time that a few more organizations like the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for New York State took steps to prevent a continuation of the practice. There may be exhibitors who do not care, but they are very few. In this territory I know of more than a score of instances where exhibitors have complained to exchanges, after showing entertainment films booked at high rentals, about the flagrant advertising attempts in various scenes. Invariably, they tell me, they have been laughed at, in an obviously 'if you don't like it go to' manner.

New Million-Dollar House to Be Erected in Springfield, Mass., on Old Site

NNOUNCEMENT has just been made by William Fox, through . Kempner, real estate representa- of the Fox Theatrical Enterprises, the Fox interests are to build a theatre in Springfield, Mass. The ture will be erected on the site of present Fox theatre at Main and pden streets.

Representing an expenditure of 0,000 the new theatre will have a ng capacity of 3,500," asserts the announcement.

sides including the site of the ent playhouse, the plans for the Fox theatre in Springfield call for ge additional plot of ground. The ent entrance is to be replaced by a lobby with marble columns. This be specially illuminated.

he lobby and interior of the new tre will be in the Italian Renais- style, with marble pilasters and mns and vaulted ceilings. In the theatre proper will be marble decorations and special lighting fixtures and color effects. There will also be installed a new ventilating system, which will be a decided improvement on the systems now in use. This new system was specially designed for the Springfield theatre, it is stated.

The main entrance of the new Fox theatre will be at No. 254 Main street. The auditorium will have a frontage on Hampden street. The new playhouse will have special sloping entrances leading from the ground direct to the balcony. It is claimed that by means of these ramps, it will be possible to empty the theatre within three minutes. C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, is the architect of the structure. The new Springfield theatre is one of many elaborate playhouses which are to be erected throughout the country by the Fox Theatrical Enterprises, it is stated.

at'l Picture Theatres Iakes Announcement

further advancing the interests of ional Picture Theatres, Incorpor- . Lewis J. Selznick announces this k the names of six more vice- idents of the organization, and s that several of the most im- ant theatrical circuits have con- ted to present National Pictures in r theatres.

he six men named include Harry Crandall, of the Crandall interests Washington; Charles Olson, of In- apolis; Hector Pasmezoglu, of St. is; Ike Libson, of Cincinnati; John rris, of Pittsburgh; and Jake Wells Richmond.

Harry M. Crandall controls six of leading theatres in the District of umbia. Charles Olson is the largest ividual theatre owner in Indian- lis. Hector Pasmezoglu is one of largest theatre owners in the country. Ike Libson is another successful and leading motion-picture exhibitor and is associated in the ownership of practically all the downtown theatres in Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton.

Jake Wells practically controls all of the theatre interests in the vicinity of Richmond. In addition to the men mentioned, it is announced that J. A. Ackerman, of Cincinnati, has endorsed National Picture Theatres, and has taken a franchise for his string of houses.

Activities in Great Britain

Theatre Building Banned; Homes First

Although new kinema companies are being formed daily throughout England, building operations so far as picture houses are concerned are practically at a standstill owing to the fact that Dr. Addison, head of the National Department of Health, is fostering a project in Parliament which seeks to prohibit the erection of "places of amusement" until such time as a sufficient number of dwellings to accommodate the thousands of English families who lack homes of their own, are erected. Dr. Addison says that picture houses should not consume valuable materials urgently needed for homes.

Opponents of his scheme, who include renters and exhibitors all over the country, state that the erection of hundreds of kinemas—the need for which is universally admitted—would give employment to thousands of men at present dependent upon the government for even the bare necessities of life.

The "movie" Members of Parliament, who include T. P. O'Connor, president of the British Board of Film Censors; A. E. Newbould, of the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., and J. E. Seddon are working hard against the measure, but the outcome seems doubtful at present.

Firm Seeking to Handle American Films

Harry R. Smith, managing director of the Smith Film Sales Company, one of the newer British film agencies whose offices are at 29a Charing Cross road, London, has announced that he is in the market for any good American films, either to handle on a straight cash or percentage business. Although the concern has been in operation but a few months, it has handled several British films of note, and is British agent for the Hollandia Film Company of Haarlem, Holland.

Mr. Smith is well known in the English trade, having been identified with Reuffell's recently purchased by the Vitagraph company, and with the Edison company.

Second Largest London House Takes Pictures

The Alhambra, London's biggest theatre next to the Opera House—built by the late Oscar Hammerstein—has joined the ranks of the movie, and was opened late in December with "Tarzan of the Apes" and "Daddy Long-Legs," which will run for a month. The Alhambra seats 4,000 people. The charges are from 1.3 (25 cents) to five shillings ($1.00).

"Eastward Ho!" produced by Oscar Asche, was the last legitimate play at the Alhambra, but it did not prove a popular attraction and so it was taken off the boards in favor of the movies.

Echoes From The British Trade

English producers today are striving to reproduce the work of well-known authors, rather than attempting to employ modern scenarios. The Hepworth Company is a leader in this movement.

England has gone "Mary Pickford mad," for both the first and second First National productions have been booked more than any other film ever produced here or imported. In London alone nearly sixty houses booked "Daddy-Long-Legs."

Sir Ernest Shackleton, the explorer, who sailed from Buenos Ayres on the "Endurance," October 26, 1914, and was lost with all hands in the endless wastes in the Antarctic for many months, screened his pictures recently at the Royal Albert Hall for the benefit of the Middlesex Hospital, London.

Oatlands Lodge, which the Hepworth Picture Plays have purchased with twenty acres of land, was once a royal residence, King James I., in 1611, granting the Manor House to his queen.

The Stoll Film Company, which has been renting the Goldwyn productions in England up to a short time ago, and which now is producing on its own account, has shown to the trade Maurice Elvey's version of "The Swindler." The story itself was written by Ethel M. Dell, and deserved better photographic treatment than it received at the hands of the Stoll Company.

Gives Employees Theatre; Makes Own Pictures

Ben Priest, an iron manufacturer of the midlands, employing hundreds of men has built a cinema theatre particularly for their use. In addition he is producing his own pictures.

The first one "Bladys of the Stewponey" was shown in London recently and was well received despite its non-euphonious title.

Queen at Picture House for First Time

The first official appearance of Her Majesty Queen Mary at any picture house occurred recently when she attended a benefit performance at the New Gallery Cinema, Regent street. She was accompanied by the Princess Mary and Prince George. The queen sat in a special box in the balcony surrounded by flowers.

The benefit was for the Women's Service, and the principal film was "Women Who Win," prepared especially for the society.

SELZNICK INCORPORATES IN LONDON

SELZNICK PRODUCTIONS, LTD., has been registered in London with a capital stock of a hundred pounds ($500), in one pound ($5) shares. The secretary is Chester A. Clegg, who has been connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Company for some time.

Mr. Clegg recently paid a visit to the United States, and the trade summarized that there shortly would be "something doing." But the bare fact of the above registration is all that is known for neither Mr. Clegg or Max Meider, here as Selznick's representative, will talk.

First Production of Holland Company Seen

The first production of the Anglo-Hollandia Film Company, of Haarlem, Holland, to be screened in England was given a recent trade showing and scored a signal success. It features "Little Rénee", who is claimed to be a remarkable child actress. As "Joy"—the title—she was well received, as was the entire picture. "Joy" is most remarkable for its cosmopolitan character. The story is from the pen of Mrs. Sair, an American, the leading male is a native of Chili, the heroine is Dutch. Rénee is French and one of the actors and the director are English. The action is laid in England, and the production ranks among the best continental work.

Motor Film Delivery System Planned

The Kinematograph Renters' Society, the British exchange association, is considering a plan whereby motor transport will supplant railroad delivery of films. Such a scheme, while more practical here than in the United States on account of the less distance between large centers, is being opposed by some renters who say it is impossible.

"Convenient" Advertising Assailed

permit any author who produces a short story or serial for him, to specifically mention Stutz cars because the heroine had to drive an automobile? Would he tolerate the publication of an illustration in which the hero stages a fight before a twenty-four sheet stand covered with a poster advertising George Washington Coffee? Would Mr. H. O. Davis, erstwhile executive and producer in the motion picture business, permit, in his present capacity as editor of The Ladies' Home Journel, the use of a line beneath the name of a prominent author, to the effect that the author used Pompean Massage Cream

"Reputable publishers would not tolerate things of this kind at any price. Still, film producers and distributors continously 'sell out' their exhibitor accounts by getting as much in many instances for convenient advertising as entire entertainment pictures cost, th charge the exhibitor fancy prices f bookings, and expect him to charge h patrons. Clearly, these facts, and th are provable, indicate that executi responsibility in this industry has be poorly vested in certain quarters, men who have no scruple or rega for the moral and business rights exhibitors. If theatre-owners are run advertising matter on their scree they are entitled to payment for and the public has a right to know th it is going to see industrial subjects a part of a program. Imagine the ve unwholesome opinion certain of the b national advertisers must have of m and organizations who 'sell out' the customers without a qualm.

"There are at least two concerns the industry that should be tak severely to task by exhibitors for t advertising tricks they have delibe ately slipped over in special featu productions. One of them is yellin now, at what it charges is an unfa exhibitor practice and a studied di crimination against its productions. have before me a report by an exhit tor organization in which it specifical charges this concern with the ve practices I have cited. The report co tinues: 'They are now crying and be ging you to run their films, and off them to you free.' This, the repo states, is the result of co-operative e hibitor organization.

"An exhibitor told me, yesterday, th twice within a week he has shown pictur featuring well known stars, and released special productions, which contained co venient advertising by big concerns. A other theatre owner showed me a slide, se him by an exchange as part of the advan work on a special he had booked with popular star. At the bottom of the slide, arranged that it could not be cut off, was line stating that the star used a certa brand of coffee, which is regularly advertis in the national magazines.

"Nerve! It is more than that. It is a other phase of the 'to-hell-with-the-publi attitude of men who seek authority, jurisd tion and confidence for the sake of explo ing it by means that are worse than uneth cal. And exhibitors are confidently expect to accept the bludgeon without a murmu It would behoove the trade papers to instru their reviewers to watch every producti they see for purposes of criticism, and state, in their reviews, whether or not t pictures contain any form of unfair advert ing. This, at least, would serve to wa exhibitors in advance, and it would put effectual check on the practice. There are number of exhibitors in New York State wl would subscribe to any medium whi would tell them, honestly, whether vario releases, classified as entertainment, h been sold out to advertisers.

"What this practice needs is a thorou expose, which will name firms, production advertisers, and back up its charge with r productions of advertising pages in whi pictures that pay producers and distributo both ways have been offered to exhibito with 'the virile star Soandso, in an epoch drama taken from the famous story By A Author Who Didn't Know the Advertisi Angle.' There are enough exhibitors wi courage and utter disregard of the reprisa the incriminated producers and distributo would be certain to practice on them f publicly charging unfairness, who would ta frankly, and prove their contentions wi cut-outs, to make a campaign against th malicious system of double revenue a clea ing one."

The Aero Club of Illinois in a body and a number of widely known aviators who were here for the big Aeroplane Exposition at the Coliseum, attended a complimentary showing of "The Great Air Robbery" at the Universal Exchange Tuesday. The flying men were greatly interested in the feats of Lieut. Omar Locklear, the daredevil of the sky, as shown on the screen.

The first showing of the Mickey Film Company's Carmen Revue, coupled up with Charlie Chaplin's big picture comedy, "Carmen," was a big success at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Rialto in the Chicago loop last week. The Revue is a pretentious offering, using fourteen people and a Jazz Band of five pieces. The scenery and settings also are sumptuous. Following the week's run at the Rialto, the picture and revue, which is used as a prologue, will appear at the Hippodrome for a week and following these two loop showings, the Mickey Film Company, which controls the rights for Illinois and Indiana for the Carmen picture, will put the revue and photo comedy out in their territory as a road show.

F. L. Smith and Harry Owens, who recently obtained the world rights to the Doubleday Production Company's pictures, announced that they have closed with the Wholesome Film Company for the U. S. rights to 8 5-reel productions and with the Ebony Film Company for 15 2- and single-reel comedies. Mr. Smith is in the east this week establishing an office in New York, after which he will make a swing around the circle, visiting Boston, Philadelphia and many eastern and southern cities during his booking trip.

Publicity representative Banks Winter, of the Universal Chicago office, is greatly interested in the coming release of "The Great Air Robbery," featuring Lieutenant Omar Locklear, and promises some exceptional exploitation stunts to aid local exhibitors in putting the picture over.

B. Edelman, live wire salesman, who is well known to the Chicago territory for his work with Universal and Hallmark, has joined the staff of Vitagraph's Chicago office and will have Illinois for his territory.

Among the important transactions closed by the Capital Film Company last week was the contract disposing of the rights for the entire Neal Hart series of two-reelers for Uruguay, Paruguay and Argentine to Joe Lamy.

District Manager O. R. Hanson, of Robertson-Cole, has returned to Chicago from New York, where he went for a conference with Mr. Cole and the two other Robertson-Cole district managers. Mr. Cole has outlined plans for the new year which greatly enthused his staff.

Joseph Abrams, formerly city man for the Universal, is now road man for the Universal's Industrial Department out of Chicago.

Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is going to New York this week, where he will remain for a few days previous to making a trip to the west coast moving picture centers.

"The Beloved Cheater" will open for a two-week's run at the Rose Theatre beginning January 11th and Manager Deneen is planning some special exploitation stunts in connection with the picture and the song, "That Beloved Cheater of Mine." Besides putting in a special orchestra and having a soloist to sing the song, he has arranged tie-ups for window displays with Woolworths and Kresges, big State street stores, which will exploit the feature picture and the song.

David A. Kohn has joined the Hyman Attractions sales forces and will have charge of the Ohio territory with headquarters at Cleveland. Mr. Kohn is well known in picture circles and recently has been city man for the Universal in Chicago.

The Central Park Theatre, Balaban & Katz's big west side house, will be the first Chicago theatre to install the new Barton, "18-carat" pipe organ. Work of putting in the splendid new instrument, which, according to Manager Abrams, of the Bartola Company, is a 3-manual organ with 1,037 pipes, will be started this week.

Exhibitors in forty-four counties of northern Indiana and southern Michigan are enthusiastic over the outlook for continued big business throughout the winter and coming spring, according to "Dad" Humphrey, Vitagraph's veteran sales manager in that territory. "Serials go strong in this district," says Mr. Humphrey, "and the managers are eagerly awaiting Bill Duncan's new million dollar serial."

Charles M. Spray, lessee of the Grand Theatre, Bluffton, Indiana, has disposed of the lease and all his interests to Miss Nettie A. Williams, of Indianapolis, who has assumed full charge and will continue Mr. Spray's successful policy of playing picture, vaudeville and road shows.

Fred S. Myer, part owner and director of the Palace Theatre, of Hamilton, Ohio, which is scheduled to open its doors on February 16th, was in Chicago this week, buying a Bartola for the new house. Mr. Myers, who is well known in Chicago, where he was connected with the American Film Company, and in Minneapolis, where for years he was engaged in the picture business, reports his new house cost $150,000 in real money and will be one of the handsomest theatres in the Ohio manufacturing center.

C. Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Capital Film Company, is in New York this week, seeking new pictures.

The Cropper Distributing Corporation has acquired the world rights to "Pointed Paragraph," which Mr. Cropper announces will appear once a week and will be a collection of the witty sparks thrown off by the world's brightest journalists and writers.

Picture salesmen of the Chicago district, headed by Henri Ellman and Morrie Salkin, are planning a movie ball to be held at the Coliseum on the night of February 27th, which they say will be a "humdinger" and will surpass anything of the kind ever put on in the Windy City.

Maurice A. Choynski and his associates, who already operate five theatres on Chicago's west side, are planning a two-story business block with a 2,000-seat theatre in the rear to be called the Biltmore, and have secured a lot 150 x 120 feet at 2032-46 West Division Street, upon which to build.

News from the Correspondents

CANADA

Hon. Peter Smith, the new Provincial treasurer for the Province of Ontario, has carried out his promise to appoint a woman to the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, Toronto, by adding Miss Caroline Cassels to the personnel of the Board. Her appointment took effect on January 1 and her salary is to be $1,300 per year or $25 per week.

Allen's St. Clair theatre, St. Clair avenue and Westmount street, Toronto, the latest of the handsome new Allen theatres to be finished, is scheduled to open January 12. With the opening of this house, Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen have only two more luxurious suburban theatres to complete before having an elaborate moving picture palace in every distinct section of the city.

James D. Murray of Ottawa, Ontario, one of the pioneers of the theatre world in the Canadian capital, died on December 29, after an illness of many weeks.

The Ottawa local of the Moving Picture Operators' Union practically re-elected its officers for 1920 at a recent meeting of the organization. The following were chosen: President, W. Hartnett, Dominion theatre; vice-president, John McCauley, Francais; secretary, William Maynard, Cinema theatre; treasurer, Charles Bamford, Imperial theatre, and business representative, William Lane, Winter Garden.

Announcement has been made that Allen's College theatre, College street and Dovercourt road, Toronto, Ontario, will be opened on Feb. 1 and in connection with this announcement shares of stock in the College theatre company are offered to the general public at par. Stock to the extent of $75,000 in the Allen's Parkdale theatre, Toronto, has also been offered and statements made indicate the success of Allen theatres in Toronto which are already in operation.

It is stated that common stock in Allen's Danforth theatre, a handsome suburban theatre of Toronto, is already paying one per cent per month, although the house was opened only last August. This common stock had been given as a bonus with 7 per cent preferred shares.

Preferred stock in the College and Parkdale theatres is being sold at 100 with a bonus of twenty-five per cent. common stock, the par value of which is 100.

The Allens are also opening the Allen's Beach theatre, in the East End of Toronto, at Christmas time, under the management of Harvey Williams, formerly manager of the Peter Pan theatre. The latter was a comparatively small house, on the site of which the new Beach theatre, with seats for 1,600, has been built.

A local union of moving picture operators has been established at Brantford, Ontario, and the jurisdiction of the new organization extends over several cities and towns of Western Ontario. Operators' unions are found at Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, Peterboro, Ottawa and other centres of Ontario.

New regulations to govern the operation of moving picture theatres and exchanges in the Province of Manitoba have been adopted by the Provincial Cabinet upon the recommendation of Edward McGrath, secretary of the Bureau of Labor for Manitoba, after the latter had held conferences with representative moving picture men of Winnipeg. The new regulations prescribe various rules for the guidance of projection machine operators, including a special daily inspection of all theatre equipment and the use of standardized equipment only in projection rooms. Sunday exhibitions or performances of any kind are prohibited unless a special permit is secured from the Provincial Treasurer, Hon. Edward Brown.

Special Organ Installed

One of the largest, finest and most expensive theatre organs in New England after more than six months' work and great expense, has been installed in the Gordon's Olympia, Washington street, Boston, Mass. It is a specially built instrument of the Wurlitzer-Hope Jones type and is constructed after plans laid down by Robert Hope Jones.

DETROIT

J. M. Duncan is now the film exchange manager who has been with one company in Detroit for the longest period. Mr. Duncan came to Detroit to handle the first V. L. S. E. exchange. He remains with Vitagraph. George De Bute, of Robertson-Cole, is next in point of service, and then comes H. A. Ross, of Paramount-Artcraft.

Every leading Detroit motion picture or vaudeville theatre, with one exception, offered pictures from the Paramount exchange last week, each for a full week's run.

All contracts have been let for the preliminary construction of the new Riveria theatre on Grand River avenue. The house will seat approximately 2,500 and has a frontage of 50 feet on Grand River avenue, extending backward in the form of a triangle. C. Howard Crane has prepared the plans. Walter C. Wuimby, of Fort Wayne, is president of the company and the directors include Claude E. Candy, of Lansing, and C. A. Kuhlman, of Jackson, both of whom operate theatres in their respective cities.

John H. Kunsky says that his circuit will number 12 theatres inside of a year.

Dr. R. M. Olin, state commissioner of health, has issued a public letter in which he flays disease films and asks co-operation in keeping them out of Michigan theatres.

The Detroit common council has passed a new theatre ordinance restricting the use of standing room in motion picture houses. Under the new law, one row of standees is permitted behind the last row of seats and if there is additional room, one more person to each square foot of space.

SEATTLE

The year of 1919 has been one of great prosperity to Seattle and adjoining motion picture men. The houses have been full all year round and the exchanges have also prospered. Good pictures have been shown and good music has been the specialty of the Clemmer, Coliseum, Liberty and Strand. A committee from the Municipal League that looked into the motion picture houses and their plays, reported that generally speaking the pictures shown were clean and much better than those shown in 1918.

John D. Callicott, well known Pacific Coast motion picture man, up till recently manager of "Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre" in Los Angeles, has severed his connections with that concern to become manager of the "Liberty" in Seattle.

The entire organization of the Seattle Boy Scouts was the guest of Manager Winekirk of the Strand at a performance of "Soldiers of Fortune."

CLEVELAND

The general upward trend of affairs was particularly noticeable in recent corporation notes from Columbus, Ohio, which listed the following increases of capitalization: Loew's Alhambra Theatre Company, from $1,000 to $5,000; Loew's Liberty Theatre Company, from $1,000 to $10,000; Loew's Mall Theatre Company, from $1,000 to $90,000; the Gordon Square Company, from $2,500 to $350,000. This increase in the amount of capital invested in motion pictures is the most convincing proof of the flourishing condition of the motion picture industry in Cleveland.

A fire in the projection room of the Buckingham theatre, 3007 Central avenue, Cleveland, one day this week, caused a loss of over $2,500 to H. J. Wade, owner of the theatre. During the showing of the Pearl White serial, "The Black Secret," the reel suddenly burst into flames. The audience was calm and walked out of the place without the least confusion.

Marcus Loew was in Cleveland last Tuesday. It is said that he is about to build a 4,000 seat motion picture theatre in Akron.

Robert McLaughlin, author, and Sam Brodsky, director, of the new film, "Hidden Charms," have just returned from New York, where they have been whipping the picture into shape for exhibition. A first screening is expected to take place early this week.

The recapitalization of the Sterling Service and Amusement Company is now an accomplished fact, after six months of patient endeavor on the part of the incorporators, the original capitalization of $1,000,000 being increased to $4,000,000. Of this amount, $200,000 is to be handled as preferred stock and $200,000 as common stock. The selling of stock is in the hands of the Professional Building Company, brokers, 314 Erie Building. The Sterling Service and Amusement Company proposes to distribute films and buy and build motion picture theatres all through Ohio.

Exhibitors and exchange managers of Cleveland have expressed themselves as delighted with the new service section recently inaugurated by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in which program reports of the leading first-run houses of the country are recorded.

SAN DIEGO

Another company, heretofore working in a Middle West city, has had representatives here looking over the ground with a view to establishing a studio, possibly in Balboa Park.

Henry Spiller, who was awarded a gold medal at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, is now the organist at the Superba, with Leonard H. Clark, recently with the California and Kinema theatres of Los Angeles, as his assistant.

E. H. Dowell, secretary of the Motion Picture Operators' Union here, has resigned and gone to Los Angeles and become connected with the Burbank theatre.

The Plaza management is making good use of the advance criticisms of its big features by making special slides carrying the words of praise which appear in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and other film publications. These are used during the week preceding the showing of the pictures mentioned.

INDIANAPOLIS

Indianapolis is to have a new $100,000 motion picture theatre somewhere in its downtown section, but Indianapolis does not know who is going to build it or exactly where it is to be. The proposed erection of the new movie house became public last week when R. W. McBride, Indianapolis attorney, filed with William A. Roach, Secretary of State, articles of incorporation for the "Star Amusement Company," which stated its capital to be $100,000 and its purpose the erection of the theatre.

To save print paper the Indianapolis newspapers have cut the length of reviews and advance notices of both photoplays and legitimate theatrical productions approximately one-third. No reduction in advertising space has been made, however.

Frank Rembusch's new Ohio photoplay theatre is beginning to occupy an important niche in the local theatrical world. Top notch films and two of the best feature orchestras in the city form the Ohio's successful bid for popularity.

BUFFALO

Jack Kelly, former secretary of the Federal League and International League baseball clubs, has been appointed manager of the Regent theatre, succeeding Billy West, who recently went to the Star theatre. Mr. Kelly is also a member of the Buffalo Evening Times reportorial staff.

Realart pictures will make their bow to Buffalo audiences at Shea's Hippodrome, Managing Director Harold B. Franklin having signed a contract for first run on this brand. The first picture, "Anne of Green Gables," will be shown as a Christmas attraction.

Herbert Kaufmann, formerly connected with the New York branch of Metro, has arrived in Buffalo to join the First National sales staff, according to an announcement by Manager P. H. Smith. Mr. Kaufmann has been in the film business several years.

J. H. Michael, manager of the Victoria theatre, urged his patrons to buy specially prepared books of tickets to the Victoria and present them to their friends as Christmas presents.

Henry E. Wilkinson, Realart manager, has been making an extensive tour of the Western New York territory and has closed contracts with many towns and cities. He has been particularly successful in Rochester and Syracuse. Lee Marcus, Realart booker, is kept busy until late each night keeping up with the schedule.

F. D. Lawlor, Hallmark manager, announces that R. E. Hussell and N. J. Marz have been engaged as salesmen on the local staff. That first name is a good one for a salesman.

R. H. Clark, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was in Buffalo Friday, December 12, for a conference with Manager P. H. Smith. It is planned to increase the sales staff at the local exchange.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

The Vaudette is now using the George Ovey and Hank Mann comedies.

The Majestic has put in Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day."

The year just closing has been one of the best the theatres of this city have ever had.

Ben Rovin had a party wanting to buy his Amuse-U recently. Ben was willing to sell, but the figure he quoted looked like the last census for Illinois. Ben still has his little old money-maker.

Every exhibitor in Springfield, with one exception probably, has an automobile. Whether it's a fad or a necessity has not been determined.

The Empress theatre is being remodeled, a new balcony being installed. Mrs. Duer says that busines is most satisfactory and that more seats are needed at times. With a balcony the Empress will be one of the biggest of local motion picture houses.

Thieves have been preying on the motion picture exhibitors here of late. Gus Kerasotes had a two-reel Texas Guinan feature stolen from the Savoy, and was lucky enough to get it back by paying a $50 reward. Someone the same week stole the drums from the Pekin theatre, leaving the orchestra without means to punctuate Bill Hart's shots and Chaplin's left-handed shoots. The drums are still absent.

PROVIDENCE

The Empire theatre, which has been devoted to motion pictures here for the past five years, closed on December 8 to give way to burlesque. Charles Westgate, manager of the Victory theatre, will go to the Empire as manager, while Matthey J. Reilly, present manager of the Empire, goes to the Victory.

Theatre ushers, ticket sellers, ticket takers, porters, police and firemen, in fact all classes of theatrical employees not connected with stage and musicians' unions in this city, have formed a union with 285 members.

Matthey J. Reilly has become manager of the Victory theatre. By doing so he returned to the house where thirty years ago this week he started on his theatrical career as a water boy. He gradually worked his way up until he became treasurer of the Keith interests here. When the Empire opened as a picture house he became manager. Now that the policy is being changed he will go to the Victory, while Francis J. Westgate leaves the Victory to go to the Empire.

George E. Pingle, owner of the Pastime moving picture theatre in Mansfield, died last week of heart disease. Born in Grand Rapids, Mich. sixty years ago, he came to Mansfield twelve years ago and soon after opened a moving picture house.

CINCINNATI

Oscar Doob, manager of exploitation and publicity for the Cincinnati office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been appointed director of publicity for the new Palace theatre. He holds the same office for the Family, Strand, Walnut, Star and Bijou, as well as 500 houses in the Paramount-Artcraft Cincinnati territory.

John Etzkorn, recently with the Cincinnati Hodkinson office, has been appointed special feature salesman on the local Pathe sales staff.

A new theatre will be constructed at the present site of Schuler's cafe, at 626 Vine street, acording to an announcement made at the sale of the property, which has a frontage of 70 feet. Although the name of the buyer was not disclosed, it is intimated that Marcus Loew is behind the project, as it is known that he is planning a house here. The deal involved $280,000, the purchaser to have possession in the spring.

Announcement:

Effective with the issue of March 6th the advertising rates of MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be as follows:

$110.00 per page, minimum rate
125.00 " " single insertion

For other rates see new rate cards.

9472 paid subscriptions to MOTION PICTURE NEWS to date. Total paid circulation 10,204.

790 more pages of paid advertising (much of it exclusive) carried by MOTION PICTURE NEWS in 1919 than by any other paper in the field.

The NEWS Covers the Field

The Reader Has His Say

"Percentage Won't Work for Me"

Wm. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I HAVE just finished reading your latest editorial "Why Not Percentage." Like the gentleman from Michigan our film rental is about one-sixth of our gross intake. While of course the picture is and always will be the PRINCIPAL factor in drawing in the business to a motion picture theatre it is not all. We employ a 20-piece orchestra of exceptional musicians, embracing among their number seven soloists and each show we allow the orchestra 15 minutes for their overture and a solo number of some sort. We have also all the latest lighting effects, we have in addition high class singers, dancers, entertainers of all sorts. Giving a two hour entertainment of diversity. You can readily see that when you add our tremendous light bills, advertising costs, etc., that we can not pay anything like 50/50 which is the only percentage that a film man ever thinks of when he talks percentage. I had one man out here who asked me $100 a day for an ordinary picture and when I told him it was too much he offered to play percent at 50/50. When I told him my expenses were in excess of $400 a day and that if we made expenses it would be equivalent to paying him $200 a day, he replied that he was taking chances and if we struck a bad night he would stand his share of the loss also.

I would be in favor of a percentage plan if it could be worked out fairly, but I much fear me that if a film man comes out here and asked me to play on per cent and I offered him 12½ per cent of the gross: he to furnish the picture and I the rest, he would laugh at me and yet he would sell me the picture for $50 or $75. We have never done a big enough business in this house of 2,000 seats that would warrant over 20 per cent of it going to the picture. What think you a fair per cent would be for a first class picture in this class house?

Respectfully,
HENRY E. NEWELL,
Howard Theatre,
1621 Howard Street,
Chicago.

A New Angle on the Advertising Proposition

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York.

Dear Sir:

What is the "Miami Valley Exhibitor's League"? It's a queer proposition that this organization presents to the exhibitor through the enclosed circular letter and Membership Contract and a criticism from you would be welcome.

You will note that the exhibitor is warned not to accept any films gratis from the Universal or Paramount or from any other concern unless first approved by a New York League, but is asked to sign a contract that takes away all his liberty in this direction and which would compel him to show one reel at least, weekly for each week in two years, and even ties his theater up even though he should dispose of same to others.

The writer does not think that either of the film distributors named above or any other distributor would have the nerve to ask for any exclusiveness such as this and so long as they merely offer films of the kindd free, with a right to accept or reject, what possible harm are they doing?

Set me right in the matter. I confess to an ignorance in the thing but one thing I know and that is I will have to have more light before I would sign over my screen to this exhibitor's organization or to anyone else. I wonder if other exhibitor's feel as I do about this or am I just too dumb to grasp the Miami Valley Exhibitor's League's idea?

Yours truly,
Geo. A. Bleich.

Another Exhibitor Who Opposes Percentage Suggestions

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I have read a great deal in your paper about the attractive side on the "percentage" method of playing pictures. The exhibitors have enough trouble with the Exchanges and the Producing end without inviting more trouble. I have a house playing both pictures and legitimate attractions. I regret to admit that the latter is the cleanest-cut and most fairest of the two. They furnish all advertising, pay all express or parcel post bills, share on all advertising as per terms, send one or two advance men in ahead of show, bring from twenty to fifty people into a town, who have to live, and who spend money with merchants, hotels, barbers, pool-rooms, restaurants, with the transfer-man, and in many instances leave more in a town than they take out, whereas the town gets nothing out of the film rentals except when an occasional representative comes along. The prices for the legitimate attractions are practically the same as they were twenty years ago, but note the advance in charges at picture shows. The average patrons don't believe all this stuff about heavy cost of productions, money paid stars, directors, and the rentals we pay. All they will admit is that the pictures are costing them from three to ten times more than what they did a few years ago.

I fail to see when it pays to allow an exchange to play a picture on percentage basis, play same up to the sky, exact increased admission prices, robbing several nights before and after said run. One simply robs Peter to pay Paul. Another objection is to turn our door over to some smart or wise chap to collect tickets, who often times does not have manners enough to respect our people by taking his hat off, or to thank the patrons for their tickets, nor to open the door for the patrons, especially ladies, and what's more I generally have to have a scrap with them to get them to avoid standing on the door with a cigarette or cigar in their mouth. Then again there are always more or less on the free list whom for various reasons we recognize on all pictures, whereas when a film concern may be playing their picture on a sharing basis it is not fair that we grant so many in free whereas the exchange is a part of the business that night, while on the other hand we do not care to embarrass ourselves by exacting pay.

This percentage scheme is calculated to further increase the admission charges, for when they play a picture on shares they have a say as regards to admission charges. Let them give us the benefit of all this saving in excessive use of the alleged 12½c. per sheet paper and the heavy expense incident to sending an advance man and a man to be back with show to protect their interest, which is absolutely essential, and let the exhibitor in return do everything in his power to keep his admission charges down, thereby keeping the pictures within the reach of the masses, rather than the continued advances and the consequent driving away of many who cannot afford to attend at the heavy prices charged.

A thing, to my view, for the betterment of the game would be the arranging of circuits booking their releases in consecutive order to houses in safe one day's shipments, thereby saving the exhibitor one-half in postage or express charges and enabling the exchange to play a print closer rather than lose so much time in shipping back to exchange and then reship back to a nearby exhibitor. This method would not only get the exchange their money out of their territory earlier but would enable the exhibitor to give his patrons the show while it is "live" and in lime-light, thereby getting us more money at the box office.

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I have been reading The News for some six years and have followed the different lines of thought advanced by the many exhibitors throughout the country.

I have thought many times of trying to express my thoughts through The News, but I always had an idea that they didn't amount to much any way, and also had an idea that they would peacefully repose in the waste basket if I did. But I have made up my mind to take a chance.

I have seen the good old days when we got our express paid one way and free paper pass to the great beyond; I watched the many arguments along about the time the war tax was hung on us, but all I have ever been able to get out of the whole thing was that we exhibitors finally became the right honorable William Goat.

Then along came the time when this bunch of high colored gentlemen took it into their heads to make us finance their productions and after many protests we are doing that and getting our film C.O.D., if we don't happen to pay in advance. Think of it, no matter how good our commercial rating—which governs the commerce of the world—we are treated as thieves.

Well that's not so bad after one gets used to it, but the last stroke, is this percentage plan. We have worked and built theatres all over the land, now this bunch of grafters want a half interest or whatever part they desire to dictate to us, by calling it a "Percentage Basis."

We have just witnessed what the labor unions are able to do because they organize and stick together, yet us exhibitors do little but fuss.

It seems to me that the salvation of the exhibitor lies in the right kind of an organization; I have watched for some big exhibitor to start this kind of a move.

I joined the exhibitors league, but I find that it don't get us anywhere. We should organize and each member put up a membership fee of say a hundred dollars, employ counsel and have a set rule to follow in each and every case and any exhibitor who fails to live up to it, call him a scab and refuse to buy film from any exchange who sells him. Take for instance a Paramount contract; I dare say that there is no commercial organization under the sun which would dare ask their customers to sign such a contract, outside of a film company, yet we are forced to swallow such as this because they have the stars bought up. But I dare say that if we had an organization in Oklahoma two hundred strong that would stand hitched we would make them sit up and take notice.

Exhibitors can cuss and discuss all the issues they like and as long as they like, but just so long as we are unorganized just that long we will be the goats.

Even our operators are organized, and our musicians are organized and they come around and tell Mr. Exhibitor just what they will stand for and I have yet to see an effective organization of the very life of the industry, the exhibitors.

I believe we should make the exchanges be good with their own medicine, which is organization.

I have been in the show business in a small way for the past eight years. Have built one of the best theatres in my state and have put all my earnings from other business enterprises in the business, but it seems that if we don't do something to stop this bunch of vultures, the time will soon come, when they will come to us and say, "If you want our pictures allright, we figure they are worth fifty per cent. of your receipts, we have made the picture with your deposit, we handle it through our exchanges with your deposit, we don't have to pay you any interest on this money, you pay all the taxes, do all the work, do all the advertising, take the 'Cussin' if the picture is no good. We are not there, so why should we worry about what your people think? We won't run that picture in that little old town but once anyway and last but not least we are organized, you can't get it from anybody else, so what are you going to do about it?"

Why isn't this a fair conclusion? Only recently I had a certain film exchange ship me out of Kansas City my film for six straight weeks, each week with a paper charge of $2.20, added to the C.O.D. I wrote them twice calling their attention without results, I also wired them without results, and asked them why they didn't ship me the paper inasmuch as they had taken my money from me "via" the C.O.D. route.

But this gentleman wouldn't even answer me, so I made up my mind that I would hear from him, so I just proceeded to keep each shipment of film, just threw it back in my vault, and in a few days he did write me and it was my time to refuse to answer, which I did. So in a few days he called me up and threatened me with the Film Board of Trade.

I proceeded to tell him that he would get his film when I had $13.20 of my money that he had stolen from me and not before; I got it by return mail.

There is but one salvation for the exhibitor, and it is an iron-bound organization along the union labor line that will hold water, and that will make each exhibitor carry his part of the load, or call him a scab and make it so strong that Mr. Film exchange won't be very anxious for his business.

Yours very truly,
The Sequoyah Theatre.

Two Springfield Houses Change Hands

The last weeks of 1919 brought to Springfield, Ill., the biggest shake-up in motion picture circles that the city has ever had. The Vaudette theatre building, which has been occupied by W. W. Watts for the past fourteen years, has been sold to H. T. Loper, owner of the Lyric, Springfield, and Kimbark theatre, Chicago. The price is reported to be $77,500. It is understood that the Lyric lease will expire about July 1 and will not be renewed, it being the intention of the Lopers to move across the street into the Vaudette building. Watts' lease on the Vaudette expires March 1. Following on the heels of this announcement comes the news that Watts has purchased the Princess theatre lease from Adolph, Joseph and Edward Kunz. The Kunz's will retire from the motion picture field and devote their entire time to other business which they own.

Director Signs a Long Term Contract

Harley Knoles, who Tuesday began directing Dorothy Dalton in "Half An Hour," Sir James M. Barrie's famous play, has signed a long term contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to direct Paramount Artcraft pictures. "Half An Hour" is the second Paramount Artcraft picture to be made by Mr. Knoles, the first having been David Graham Phillips's novel, "The Cost," featuring Violet Heming.

He it was who staged "Little Women," the picture of Louisa M. Alcott's story, released as a Paramount Artcraft special. He also directed "Stolen Orders," for William A. Brady, "Bought and Paid For," starring Alice Brady, and "Stolen Paradise," starring Ethel Clayton.

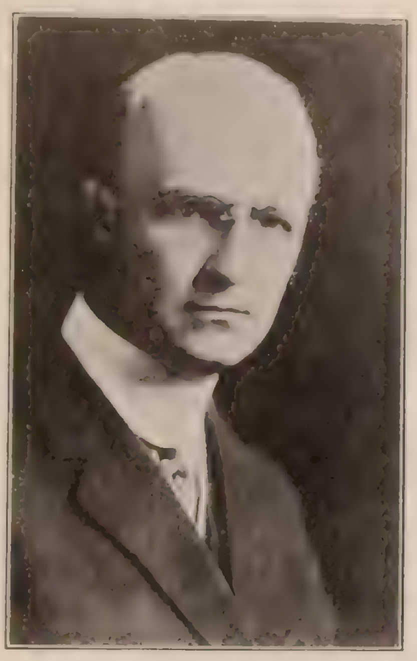
"No Propaganda," Says Cochrane

"MOVING picture producers are going to stay on the fence in the uor-prohibition fight," was the claration this week of H. Cochrane, epresident of the Universal Film nufacturing Company.

'I want to make myself plain on this nt," he said, "because there have n many complaints recently from ple who think they see in certain tures or scenes, propaganda one y or the other. To accuse the big n companies of lending themselves her to the liquor interests or to the ys' is utterly foolish. They are big iness firms manufacturing products all people, not for any one class creed.

'In all my experience in the moving ture field, I never have known of a n company being used for propaganda of this kind. In fact, I do not ow of but one case in which a film npany' even was approached conning the liquor question. That case s one in which the liquor interests ed that whenever a saloon scene was essary in film stories, they would e to supply the fixtures and fit up bar-room the way they thought oons should look. It is needless to that the film company which reved this offer refused it."

The feeling that American films conn "dry" propaganda rapidly is asming alarming proportions in forn countries, especially in England, t also in the wine drinking countries,



R. H. Cochrane, Vice-President of Universal

France, Italy, Spain and Portugal, as well as the Latin-American countries. Nothing could be more erroneous, of course, but it is a natural feeling grow- rons want to see. They know only too well that you can't cram propaganda down the throat of the average ing out of the antagonism felt towards "dry" America.

"As a matter of fact moving pictures are built from scenarios and stories written by accredited authors who never give a thought to propaganda of any kind. Sometimes they take advantage of the dramatic license which enables them to ridicule certain cases of over-indulgence in drinking. In doing this, they only portray true types, here and there, from life.

"I venture to say that a poll of the picture world would find film men about equally divided on the question of Prohibition. The sooner the picture-going public learns that the film companies are business organizations, bent upon the manufacture of products that will sell to all classes of people, the sooner it will generally be realized that the film world is not trying to "force" any particular style of picture or to insinuate propaganda into its reels.

"It is more or less natural that the two great opposing interests on the liquor question should be suspicious of propaganda on every hand. It is ridiculous, however, for them to intimate that the moving picture companies are permitting anyone to use them as tools.

"The film companies could not afford it, to begin with. They could not sell such one-sided pictures. The exhibitors would not buy them. The moving picture exhibitors of this country, the owners and operators of the thousands of photo-play houses, are shrewd business men. They form the back bone of the moving picture industry. They exhibit only those pictures their patrons want to see.

"I want to take occasion right here to silence that oft-repeated contention of the Anti-prohibitionists that film interests favor "dry" laws on the theory that closed saloons mean full moving picture theatres. That belief is a fallacy. Where the cafe haunting part of the population turned after last July, I do not know, but it is certain that the increase in photoplay-patrons in the last six months doesn't indicate they turned en masse to moving pictures for stimulation and excitement.

"The increase in moving picture attendance the latter part of last year, while it was exceptionally encouraging, was a natural increase due to postbellum causes and to the steady improvement in moving picture output.

"In conclusion, I challenge any Prohibitionist or any "wet" advocate, to produce concrete evidence that the Universal has permitted "wet" or "dry" propaganda to appear in any of its films. If any one wants to take me up on this, a neutral body of judges can be selected to pass on the pictures in question. If no one cares to take issue with me on this subject, let there be an immediate end to the carping criticism insidiously directed at the moving picture interests."

Why Foreign Films Fail

By Harry Raver

Ten Years an Importer of Foreign Films

The failure of foreign productions this country may be summed up two words: Poor Stories. No disedit need be cast upon the splendid assical and Historical productions ported from European studios and own here with marked success, for y were made from stories by great thors, stories well known to the nerican public. Exhibitors and exanges remember with pride the sucss of such notable pictures as "The ll of Troy," "Last Days of Pomii," "Quo Vadis," the immortal abiria," of which Karl Kitchen in New York World said "is still the gh-water mark of intelligent picture oduction." "Nero and the Fall of me," "Antony and Cleopatra," ulius Caesar," and, at least, a dozen hers, all produced at a time when e American studio had yet to make first ambitious picture. In fact no tempt to spend any great amount of ney on a production in this country s made until the introduction of abiria," at a two-dollar-top-scale en it was demonstrated by the New rk and other big-city runs that an pensively made production could be ofitably exhibited. Then followed he Birth of a Nation" and the rest common history to most of the prent-day followers of Motion Pictures. t, while England, France, Italy and Denmark have been turning out pictures for years their product has never been able to maintain a solid footing in America simply because they have fallen down badly on their stories. Technically, artistically, photographically, scenically and in production details generally, the foreign product—particularly Italian and French—is equal to the best of the American made product and superior to the average, but the stories are stupid, padded drivel. Among the foreign artists splendid acting talent is to be found but their ability is wasted and depreciated by the stories in which they appear. It has been said that "Mary Pickford in a poor story is a poor actress." The same thing applies to the foreign artist who is gradually beginning to realize the tremendous handicap under which they are working and are seeking new connections where only the highest type of stories are employed. The foreign producer, although he turns out a great quantity production for a limited market, is not consistent in his product. He may spend a year or more on one picture and then rush out a half dozen mediocre films in as many weeks, most of these of varied footage, although he knows from experience that America calls for productions of even quality and of approximately five reels. It is nothing unusual for an importer to receive from foreign producers a consignment of a dozen sample films ranging in length from 1,800 to 8,000 feet, no two of which were adaptable to the American standard of length. Most foreign producers build a long dramatic feature around a simple incident which the American producer would consider only a situation. Years of effort on the part of one or two importers have been spent in trying to educate the foreign producer to give the American market intelligent consideration when selecting stories and making productions. Correspondence files are filled with copies of letters pointing out in detail what America wants and will support but the foreign mind is slow to adjust itself to new conditions and it was not until the war came and our best men began to mingle with our Allied brethren that these advices of the years past began to take hold. Today, the foreign producer has a new understanding and is willing to co-operate in a way that would have been impossible two years ago. He is willing to make, and is making, productions from stories selected in America and will even stand for American supervision of these productions while in the making, realizing that the American market for good pictures is the greatest in the world and that, in order to realize from this market, the tastes of the American public must be given first consideration. We shall witness many splendid examples of this co-operative spirit in the productions made by foreign producers during the coming year.

Cincinnati Showmen to Combat "Monopoly"

Following closely the announcement last week by First National Exhibitors' Circuit of its new plan of operation, which includes the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the Associated First National Theatres, Inc., with an aggregate capital of $16,400,000, it becomes known that meeting of Cincinnati motion picture exhibitors, together with exhibitors from Dayton, Columbus and other nearby towns in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky was held at the Hotel Sinton, Cincinnati, early this week, to perfect an organization formed to combat the reported plans of the producing companies to operate theatres in which to present their own films.

The Cincinnati exhibitors pledged to co-operate with the out-of-town theatre owners to fight any current movement or any that may be started imposing unjust hardship on the exhibitors.

Photoplay Advertising History of Clevelan

By ELSIE LOEB

FIVE years isn't very long as time goes, but the past five years has been a lifetime to the motion picture business. The photoplay industry has spread out in as many directions as an octopus' tentacles. But nowhere has it advanced so rapidly and changed so radically as in its policies of publicity.

Take any newspaper of five years ago and see what proportion of space was devoted to motion pictures. Cleveland has been prominent as one of the biggest picture boosting towns in the country, and its newspapers are accredited with being first in their co-operation with the motion picture industry, but how long back was this co-operation started

Five years ago, THE CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER ran a short review of the leading picture of the week in the Sunday edition only. There were a few theatre advertisements, but not over eight or ten inches of space devoted to the announcements of programs.

"Why, when I first came to Cleveland," says Harlowe Hoyt, photoplay editor of THE PLAIN DEALER, it was a physical impossibility to get an advertisement from the exhibitor.' 'Why should we advertise,' said the exhibitor?

And in a measure he was right. Why should he advertise? The movie theatres, five years ago, were almost all down town on the main streets where people were constantly passing. It was easy for everyone to know what was being played by reading the notices in front of the theatres. They all saw them. And anyhow, the programs were changed every day, and the public couldn't be expected to scan the pages of the daily paper to find out what was being played. Another reason for NOT advertising was that the people who dropped into the movies, in those days, were not the people who followed the papers or any other reading matter very closely.

"When I took over the photoplay editorship of the paper, I reasoned that pictures were on the climb and that if we all got together and pushed together, we should all climb together. Working on this theory, I went to the exchanges and tried to get them to see the advantages of publicity. The exchanges were worse than the exhibitors. They didn't want any publicity. All they wanted was to sell pictures. Their business was with the exhibitor. Not with the newspapers. And they weren't shy about saying so, either.

"'Another stumbling block that the producers put into the publicity path of pictures, was their refusal to give out any information about their stars. In the old Biograph days, we knew of Biograph pictures, but not a thing about the people who made them. So it was a physical impossibility to give the pictures any space in the papers, when the producers wouldn't tell us anything to print that would interest the readers.

"Gradually, however, as motion picture houses began to be built in the outskirts of Cleveland, the exhibitors came over to our side. They began to advertise their programs in modest fashion early in 1915. It was the exhibitor who made the first step toward general co-operation by advertising.

When the producers saw the advantages gained by exploitation they loosened up a bit with their information and realizing that motion picture stars are like stock players—sort of intimate, family friends whose comings and goings were of interest, then they met the exhibitor half way."

Compare that attitude, with the present day attitude, and you will see how far the industry has progressed through harmonious co-operation.

It was in 1915 that George Cole, in command of THE CLEVELAND LEADER photoplay section, decided to devote a whole page to the movies on Sunday. For two weeks he worked and worried, trying to get enough advertisements to warrant giving the movies a full page every Sunday. "It looked like a hopeless job." Cole was reminiscing recently, "and I was about ready to give it up, when one day I came back to the office with enough ads to fill four whole pages. That gave us a start, and soon after we got out the first Sunday full page devoted to motion pictures in the United States. The page went so well that we followed it with a six sheet Movie Supplement, also the first of its kind in the country, and now they're all doing it on a greater or lesser scale. But five years ago, when Sam Bullock and Louis Becht were running the Dreamland, after knocking out the store fixings and putting in a few seats and fitting up a screen, we were lucky to get ten inches of motion picture advertising in our Sunday editions."

Harlowe Hoyt has built up his photoplay section on a very healthy plan. "Let's help the exhibitor first," he says. "By helping him, we naturally help the producer, because when we advertise a picture, we can't help boosting the fellow or the firm who made it. And, this all-around boosting has to reflect back upon the newspaper operating on this policy, in the way of circulation."

We have been criticized, upon occasion, for devoting a whole page of our Sunday supplement to a closely printed director of program releases of more than seventy-five per cent. of the motion picture theatres in Cleveland. But that page brings us a larger share of circulation that does the advertising. Do you know what happens to that page? Why, people buy the paper just to read it. They clip out of it the week's program at their favorite movie house. They paste it in their notebooks, or put it in a conspicuous place at home, and consult it daily. It's a recurrent advertisement for the theatre, for every member of the family sees it every day. It's the best circulation getter, and the best exploitation policy that we have introduced into our comprehensive co-operative plan.

The producers may have been the last ones to get together with the exhibitor and the newspaper, but when they did realize the advantages of all working together, they went at it right. The present Goldwyn campaign is the best example of the modern method of co-operation as opposed to the independent, aloof attitude of five years ago. The Goldwyn company is spending large sums of money to advertise big pictures in conjunction with the theatres running those pictures. Boosting the picture and boosting the theatre at the same time works to the advantage of each, as well as helping the medium of the co-operative policy—the newspaper.

Hoyt's attitude of whatever helps the exhibitor helps the producer and the newspaper as well, is the right idea. The exhibitor is the main guy in the business. When his receipts are on the right side of the ledger, then the producer can go on making pictures, and the newspapers can continue to exploit them. But when the exhibitor isn't making money, then it's a sad day for all the other fellows in the game.

Publicity that Reached Richmond Homes

Ken E. Finley Ties-Up with Boy Scouts, Orphans' Homes and Club Women and Smashes Records on the "Jonah" Monday Before Christmas

SMASHING records is one thing, but smashing them Monday before Christmas is an- er."

Which is a quotation from the buoyant telegram Kenneth E. Finley, manager of the Broadway eatre, Richmond, Va., telling of the utter rout the time-worn theatrical notion of pre-holiday pression. Mr. Finley went into the home life of chmond through the agency of every available cial organization and tied up not only little Wil- , the Boy Scout, but also mother and father, the cial lights, with the showing at his theatre of Soldiers of Fortune."

Despite the fact that he was facing "the worst eek in the amusement season," to quote Mr. Fin- y, the admission price was raised to "fifty cents r first time in history of theatre."

When the results of Mr. Finley's splendid ex- itation efforts took definite shape, he had the common sensation of watching "managers of her houses standing in front of my theatre won- ring what it's all about."

First of all the Richmond manager picked the tstanding tie-up possibility of Richard Harding avis' story of American adventure. The Boy couts of this city are a progressive and ever-ac- e body of young Americans and their response the invitation to help in the publicizing of the m was unanimous. In fact when Mr. Finley an- ounced the private showing of the picture to the ganization in connection with patriotic talks by presentatives of the National Security League, it as necessary to limit the attendance to those who ere actually accredited members at that time,' ich was the response.

In order to accommodate the crowds, the city thorities allowed the use of the John Marshall igh School auditorium for the showing of the icture. The endorsement of the photoplay by rominent Richmond citizens, and the advocacy the National Security League, and the fact that was to be shown in a municipal educational in- titution all lent the picture a dignified tone.

Preceding the screening of "Soldiers of For- ne" there were stirring five-minute talks by cout Executive Weaver of Richmond, by Albert Vinton Perkins, the well-known managing editor of the Richmond Virginian, and a ten-minute address by Wyndham R. Meredith.

MUSIC
RECORDS

Another of Mr. Roth's tie-ups with the music stores of San Francisco, a feature of the California's advertising

Leaving no important leads out of the reckoning, Mr. Finley made arrangements with the National Security League for the presence of a prominent speaker at the private showing of the American story. The address by H. Manning Carpenter, representing the League, was a feature of the occasion. Mr. Manning is a New Yorker, and the head of a well-known preparatory school.

Mr. Henry Wise Wood, of the National Security League, who had been expected to attend the affair, was detained at the last moment. The extensive arrangements were concluded by Mr. Finley through the courtesy of John Stewart Bryan and Dr. Douglas Freemen, both prominent residents of Richmond.

The parade of the Boy Scouts to the High School auditorium was very similar to the one which took place in New York City, when a Richard Harding Davis memorial was held at the Capitol theatre prior to the run of the film there. The benefits of this tie-up were said to have been as fine in the southern city as they proved on Broadway.

Richard Harding Davis, twenty years ago, was the guest of honor at the wedding of Charles Dana Gibson, the artist, in Richmond, and this was made the subject of a story printed, as part of the film exploitation, in the Richmond Virginian and other local newspapers.

A second far-reaching tie-up on the film was arranged by Mr. Finley with the social organization of Richmond, and in this way the astute showman figured that he would reach almost every one who had not been touched by the Boy Scout event. Mr. Finley made arrangements with the Social Service Federation of the city, whereby that body agreed to furnish transportation for the inmates of four big children's homes to the Broadway theatre for a special holiday showing of the Mayflower photoplay to the poor children.

This arrangement, a worthy act from the human point of view, put Mr. Finley in touch with the most prominent women's clubs in Richmond, and gave the film at his theatre a great amount of publicity.

The Social Service Federation includes all the big and active charitable organizations of the southern city, and its sponsoring of the holiday showing created an amount of mouth-to-mouth advertising which was too great to begin to estimate, according to Manager Finley.

Through the generosity of Mrs. Georgia N. Jobson, the Social Federation of Richmond and Thomas S. Wheelwright, all expenses of transportation were defrayed and by the showing of the film during an off-hour, the vastly beneficial exploitation stunt was pulled by Mr. Finley at practically no expense.

The holiday showing of the film was attended by the inmates of St. Paul's Church Home, the Masonic Home, the Male Orphan Asylum and the Methodist Home.

Edits Photoplay Section Gratis and Calls It His Best Paying Job

PAUL J. SCHLOSSMAN, owner of the Regent, Majestic, Rialto and Elite theatres in Muskegon, Mich., was always interested in the motion picture section of the Muskegon Chronicle, the only daily paper published in the city, and recently his sense of news values became so keen that he signed a contract with the paper to become its photoplay editor.

Now if you happen to go to Muskegon on a Friday to call on Mr. Schlossman you may be notified that he is in the editorial department of his office, writing copy, heads and supervising the makeup of his section over a "dummy."

One might judge from this that Mr. Schlossman—owner of all of Muskegon's stage and picture entertainment places—either was paid a handsome salary by the newspaper for his work, or that he was entertaining a hobby.

Neither, however, is true. There is a real practicability backed by years of successful showmanship behind Mr. Schlossman's newspaper plan and the best part of it is that it is succeeding beyond his fondest anticipations.

In advertising the attractions at his four theatres, Mr. Schlossman each week buys a full page or more in the Muskegon Chronicle. He lays out a conservative amount of advertising and the proceeds to fill the remaining space with motion picture reading matter and that is judicially chosen, properly edited and made up with the skill of a veteran news editor. Cuts are liberally sprinkled about the section and it is so attractive in appearance that the Chronicle looks upon it as one of its strongest weekly features and one that is getting them considerable money.

"There is nothing that the general public desires more to read up on than motion pictures," says Mr. Schlossman. "My idea of purchasing a full page for the use of my theatres each week is by no means a new one—several are now doing it throughout the country—but I am aiming to give the people of my city a real motion picture section at the same time, one that will make them read everything through to the last line.

"This can easily be done and at the same time I can advertise my coming and current attractions. All it takes is a little skill at editing, because it is surprising just how much reading matter the motion picture fans will consume. They can't seem to get enough of it.

"Such a section gives the theatre operator a certain amount of independence also. For instance, if I had a big attraction booked a couple of months ahead, I wouldn't need to worry about how much editorial backing my newspaper was going to give me. I have a page myself and can start in boosting that show any time I get ready.

It is a very poor policy, according to Mr. Schlossman, to over-advertise in such sections. He says he has found it advisable to play his advertising and reading matter on his attractions with as few superlatives as possible. He saves them, he says, for the attractions that fit them.

Mr. Schlossman, as editor, introduced many novel little touches into his section. One of these, during the recent fuel shortage, was an editorial urging the people of Mushegon to check their fires, go to any of his theatres, and thus they would be patriotically helping to conserve fuel.

Uses Three Gigantic Paintings from Production as Exploitation Aids

ONE of the most beautiful displays ever seen i the lobby of an Omaha theatre was devised l H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto, for a week run of the James Oliver Curwood picture, " Bac to God's Country." Three gigantic half-circ paintings, suggested by the picture, decorated t lobby interior. Each was fifteen feet across at t bottom and seven feet high at the center. One d picted an Arctic landscape of pine trees, mountain and a lake, the second a snowbound picture with dog team in the foreground and the third a lo cabin, in pine woods, with bears in the foregroun The glass front display frames at each side of th lobby each contained a painting of similar desig and at other opportune places other paintings an photographs from the production were hung.

The inside of the theatre was festooned wit autumn leaves, strands of yellow and black crep papers and jack-o-lanterns.

Mr. Thomas also used an unique newspape teaser campaign. Small inch ads containing a c of animal foot prints were used on every page o the newspapers directing the reader to some othe page. On an inside page to which the smaller ad directed the reader, he used larger space to as the reader to watch the same space the next day Two days before the run commenced he used th larger space for an announcement of the feature.

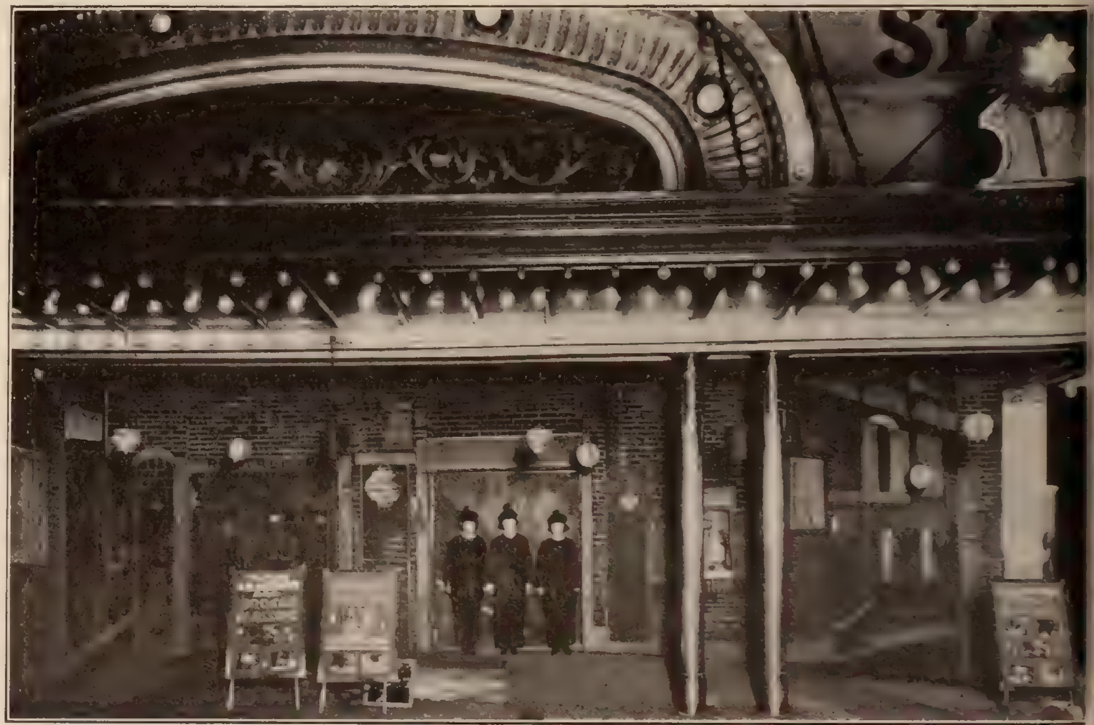
CHARACTERISTIC of any of the houses in th "Lime" district was the lobby designed b Frank Lacey for the Star theatre during the wee that " Broken Blossoms " was there for its secon run in Portland. Mr. Lacey is manager of th Majestic theatre where " Broken Blossoms showed for the first time in Portland. In the Majestic lobby a different note was struck. It savore of the artistic, cherry blossoms and wisteria bein used as background for art posters. A differen type of audience was to be appealed to at the Sta according to Mr. Lacey. A fac simile of the slum district was created in the Star lobby. A few Japanese lanterns gave the oriental touch. The pictur shows three of the Star ushers in orange and blac costumes made along the Japanese clothing styles.



The lobby display Manager Frank Lacey constructed for "Broken Blossoms" when the film played Portland, Ore.

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

Real Black Cats Are Caged in Theatre Lobby as Part of "Jinx" Exploitation

THE hunting of black felines, which has now attained quite a vogue in a number of communities, is directly traceable to an exploitation tunt put over at the Moon theatre, Omaha, Nebraska, in conjunction with the showing of Mabel Normand in "Jinx."

The Moon management offered free tickets to very youngster who succeeded in stalking a black at and presenting it at the office of the Omaha News. The net results of the stunt was a substantial volume of free publicity for "Jinx" and gratifying returns at the box-office throughout the engagement.

The most recent example of an exhibitor proving hat even a cat may be used to exploit a picture s that of W. B. Taylor who guides the destinies of he Princess theatre, Hopkinsville, Kentucky. By means of newspaper publicity and a special herald, Mr. Taylor announced that the first hundred children bringing black cats to the box-office of the Princess on the day "Jinx" was presented would receive free tickets.

Mr. Taylor gave an ingenious twist to the stunt by tagging the cats with the names of their various sponsors and caging them in the lobby where a contest was held to determine which was the best behaved and most pulchritudinous pussy. The cat that received the greatest number of votes was awarded a blue ribbon and its owner was given a cash prize.

The local newspaper extended its co-operation in putting the stunt over and devoted considerable space in its news columns to announcements of the contest. A humorous and unexpected incident came when the cats were caged in the lobby of the Princess and some miscreant threw a bunch of cat nip into the cage. Right then and there Mr. Taylor decided that it was going to be rather difficult, not to say impossible, to get a photograph of his cat exhibit.

The commotion that resulted drew a crowd to the lobby and to avoid getting in bad with the local police authorities for blocking the streets, Mr. Taylor released the cats, but attracted a full house for the opening performance. The Princess packed 'em in throughout his engagement of "Jinx" which was of three days' duration.

Stuffed animal lobby display which drew crowds to the Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J., breaking the house record

Inexpensive Exploitation Which Made Possible Breaking of a House Record

A REMARKABLY inexpensive exploitation campaign with a record result in box-office receipts was launched recently by Charles Dooley and A. Gordon Reid, house managers of the Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J., in the face of the strongest opposition ever aligned in that city against any one amusement enterprise.

Attractions for the week in Paterson embraced almost everything in the entire gamut of entertainment. There was a burlesque troupe, shaking its meanest shimmy for the tired business man; there was drama for the club woman; a minstrel show for the young blood, and a vampire picture for the high school girls.

It was against this competition that Messrs. Dooley and Reid, entrusted with the success of the Garden theatre by the Jacob Fabian interests in New Jersey, decided that the time for thinking-caps had arrived.

Mr. Reid tells what happened when the firm began using its gray matter.

Our idea of showmanship told us that we needed a lobby display. We secured green stuff from the woods. We borrowed or rented stuffed animals.

Perhaps one of the most striking features of the lobby display used by the Garden was a good-natured grizzly bear (stuffed, of course), that cunningly seemed to support himself by holding to a tree stump. A patch of artificial greensward seemed to give the natural forest touch to the mounting.

Asked where he found the stuffed bear, and how other exhibitors might obtain a bear, he replied:

"That was the simplest thing imaginable. It would be hard to find a furrier who, in some section of his store, doesn't display a bear. This bear hadn't been used for ten years. It was in a cellar (however, it wasn't keeping company with a blind tiger) and the furrier gladly loaned it to us."

One of the best features of the display was the fact that it was not overdone. Stuffed pheasants, robin red-breasts and other birds perched nimbly on pictures on the ceiling and in other places where the casual gaze of the theatregoer happened to wander.

"We got our elks' heads from the local Elks' Club," said Mr. Dooley. "The moose head came from a local order here. No matter how small a town may be, there is some local devotee of the hunting art that will be glad to loan his treasures to the exhibitor so that others may feast their eyes on his captures."

Another innovation in showmanship in Paterson was practiced in connection with the exploitation of this production. For considerable time there has been a ban on Sunday amusements in New Jersey. The most popular pastime for Sunday afternoons and evenings is strolling the boulevards.

Messrs. Dooley and Reid worked industriously late Saturday night and all Sunday morning in order to be able to open the lobby on Sunday afternoon. Crowds returning from afternoon services found that the lobby was set in order and that every indication showed the Garden was going to open for regular performances. The managers took care to keep out of sight. Within an hour after the doors had opened a crowd had gathered to admire the lobby and to wonder whether there would be a showing.

Sunday night marked another event in Paterson's history. The foyer of the Garden theatre was a blaze of lights. People were heard to remark that the lobby seemed much brighter that Sunday night than on any other night. Little did the townsfolk know that brighter lights had been substituted. Mr. Dooley estimates that 2,000 men, women and children entered the lobby Sunday night. Many came to offer their moral encouragement for a Sunday show, others came because they thought it was a fire and the officials came to make arrests.

But there was no excitement. The grizzly looked mockingly when someone suggested that even displaying a theatre light might be a violation of the Sunday closing law.

An Effective Jinx Lobby

THE management of the Crystal theatre, Greenville, Texas, certainly made the most of the lobby possibilities in connection with the presentation of Mabel Normand in "Jinx." The outstanding feature of the display, as indicated by the accompanying photograph, was a cut-out of the comedienne as a circus performer walking a tight-rope. Over the box office there appeared a large head of Miss Normand above the title "Jinx."

McCormick ana B. P. O. E. Entertain

Circle Manager and Elks Bring Yule Tide Happiness to Indianapolis Little Shavers Who Live in "Homes"

A SEASONAL exploitation campaign which, in addition to showing one of the best box office esponses to S. Barrett McCormick's showmanship, rned the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, into a cozy uletide spot for the "children Santa forgot," tands out as one of the most brilliant achievements f Mr. McCormick's career, and is worthy of filing y exhibitors generally for emulation in other cities n Christmas, 1920.

While various other commercial enterprises, in-luding motion picture interests, went about wish-ng hearty season's greetings, it was S. Barrett Mc-ormick who planned to provide a joyous Christ-astide for those unthought of in the natural order f things. Usually, it is a newspaper that undertakes to bring joy to the unfortunate children of a arge city. In this instance the Circle had its cam-aign planned and its feature attraction—"A Day's Pleasure," booked long before the ding-a-ling of Salvation Army bells resounded on each street corner.

The Circle's Christmas tree and prologue number

The rich and the prosperous weren't the only happy persons in Indianapolis on Christmas day. Look at this crowd of youngsters who were entertained at the Circle theatre

It was Mr. McCormick's intention to provide Christmas cheer for the poor children of Indianapolis—not just enough children to carry out the idea and make a showing but for every child in the city, every boy and girl for whom the spirit of Santa Claus would be lacking, because of poverty and poor parental circumstances.

Through his membership in the Elk's Club, Mr. McCormick appealed to his "brothers" to assist him in the plan. Committees were appointed, it was decided that the children desiring to attend the party should gather at the respective schools where they would be called for by generous-hearted automobile owners, and that thousands of stockings filled with things that made Santa Claus famous be provided.

With all plans for the entertainment of his guests set, Mr. McCormick then arranged his program—the program that has surpassed all previous efforts—so the public and press of Indianapolis maintain.

A giant Christmas tree, stretching thirty-five feet from base to tip, was erected on a portable platform. Hundreds of colored electric lights, and uncounted yards of tinsel, and those toys that would best sparkle when played upon by vari-colored lights combined to make the tree a dazzling symbol of a beautiful Christmas.

A specially painted back drop, representing fir trees touched by the hand of the snowman set off the tree with great effect. And as an opening for the program, a fantastic ballet staged by Mlle. Theora Hewez and a number of her pupils, and entitled the "Dance of the Snowflakes" was most appropriate.

A short musical program featuring Christmas numbers was followed by "A Day's Pleasure."

Christmas week prologue number which engaged the attention of all Milwaukee

Milwaukee Famous for Something Besides What It Used to Be

MANY are the good lobby displays which Manager George Fischer of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, has originated to help put over his bills. The lobby display is always a part of the Alhambra's exploitation and is held in high esteem by Mr. Fischer. We are now able to reproduce for you his Christmas decorations, which, while not of much use until another Dec. 25th, are well worth making note of both in memory and book for next year's holiday week.

The lobby of the Alhambra is narrow, about fifteen feet, with a long foyer running into the auditorium. Along the side walls Mr. Fischer does most of his decorating. For his Christmas week show, "It Pays to Advertise," Manager Fischer went to unusual pains to have something pleasing to the eye. On each side of the foyer he built two large frames of colonial fireplace design which were enameled in white. The center of these were filled in with plaited cloth in colors, while at the bottom of the "fireplaces" neat decorative lattice work was built with a potted palm in a box of design to go with the "fireplaces" set at the side of each pillar. Decorations in green and many wreaths were strung up and down the foyer. In the center of the plaited cloth mentioned the coming attraction, "The Beauty Market," was advertised, same being placed in a neat frame.

In the foyer inside the entrance doors a fireplace was erected with a large cutout lithographed form of Santa Claus nearby. In Santa's bag and in the stocking hanging from the fireplace were announcements of what features the Alhambra had in store for its patrons as Christmas week gifts.

Backing for the fireplace was formed by beaver board walls, covered with wall paper of nice design and the room thus formed was given a small furniture setting which included an electric lamp, a table and chair. On the table was a telephone connected up and ready for use.

On the walls of the "room" Mr. Fischer advertised his program uniquely. The billing of Washburn in "It Pays to Advertise" was within a Christmas wreath, while "A Day's Pleasure," the comedy on the bill, was in the form of a calendar, the decorative part being a cutout of Chaplin's head with the month page of an ordinary calendar under it, on which was printed the title of the comedy and the star's name. Around the dates of the showing on the calendar card was drawn a line which ended in an arrow pointing to the attraction. This idea is one which will be good at any time as a novelty way of billing a picture.

Mr. Fischer's Christmas decorations did not end with his lobby display, but were carried into the theatre. A special prologue, one of the most lavish entertainments ever staged in the Middle West at a photoplay theatre, was a feature on the bill. It consisted of a ballet of twenty-six youngsters, members of a Milwaukee ballet school, who appeared in a specially arranged number called "A Christmas Fantasie."

Settings on either side of the stage represented a tenement bedroom with four children in a poor bed and four wealthy youngsters in a well furnished nursery. In the center is shown their dream, the setting revealing a giant Christmas tree and two fireplaces, out of which poured dainty fairies.

The entire number presented the thought that the spirit of Christmas was enjoyed by both rich and poor and the act proved a big success. Those taking part were children of society folks and proved a big drawing card.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

The Cash Value of Co-operative Exploitation

The cash value of active co-operation by local merchants in the exploitation of a picture was strikingly demonstrated recently by the Strand theatre of Billings, Mont., in connection with the showing of "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana. As the result of an advertising campaign in which Billings tradesmen "tied up" with the Strand theatre, Manager Rankin filled his house to capacity for two days and expected to break all house records for the third day of the run, when all the theatres in Billings were closed temporarily at the coal-conservation order of the Federal Fuel Adminstration.

The advertising campaign responsible for the tremendous business done by "Please Get Married" was the result of a suggestion by B. F. Rosenberg, manager of Metro's Salt Lake City exchange, and the vigorous manner in which Manager Rankin carried out Mr. Rosenberg's suggestion. The Strand theatre had booked the Viola Dana special, and the theatre management decided to conduct an advertising campaign that would yield the best results in lengthening the line at the box office.

Mr. Rankin wired Mr. Rosenberg for his advice. Mr. Rosenberg immediately took train for Billings, and volunteered to give the exploitation of the picture his personal supervision. He was eager to establish a box-office record for the Strand during the three days' showing of "Please Get Married" by intensive advertising.

Mr. Rosenberg conferred with Manager Rankin and outlined his plans for exploiting "Please Get Married." The catchy nature of the title, he pointed out, offered unusual opportunities for publicity, and it was decided to take advantage of this.

Mr. Rosenberg and Manager Rankin got in touch with Joseph Markham, the advertising man of the Billings Gazette, and suggested that he interview the leading merchants of the city, and induce them to run "Please Get Married" ads in the Gazette prior to and during the showing. Mr. Rosenberg even wrote out the ads himself, so that the merchants' consent was all that was needed in putting the plan into execution.

As a result of the scheme, the Gazette appeared the day following with a full page devoted to "Please Get Married" in which the leading merchants of Billings were represented by ads bearing the caption, "Please Get Married." The Rowe Furniture Co. carried a four-column ad with "Please Get Married" at the top in large type, and below "But—before doing so, come in and give us the pleasure of showing you the proper way to furnish a home." Following which was shown a cut of model furnished rooms, and beneath in bold face, "Special—'Please Get Married' prices for Tuesday—Wednesday—Thursday."

The Chambers Hardware Co. furnished a two-column ad, containing the cut of a patent washing machine, with the lettering above it of "Please Get Married"—and come to us for the convenience of your home." Four six-inch one-column ads followed, including an ingenious layout of the Ideal Bakery. This ad bore the amusing caption "Please Get Married," and beneath, "——and we will save your wife the embarrassment of burning the first biscuit."

The Northern Barber Shop offered "Please Get Married"—and send Hubby to us for a good shave and all the trimmings," while O. O. Nelson, the jeweler, and the Curtin Music House, each presented the caption of "Please Get Married" with some clever advertising phrase that tied up the nature of their business with the title of the production.

Competition for Verse Writers

FOLLOWING a suggestion of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's exploitation department, C. C. Deardourff, press and service representative at the Cleveland exchange, enlisted the co-operation of the Cleveland Plain Dealer in conducting a contest that is securing much newspaper space and arousing keen interest among motion picture fans in the Ohio city. The announcement of the contest in connection with the showing of Tom Moore in "The Gay Lord Quex" at the Metropolitan theatre brought half a column in the featured position on the photoplay page. It read in part: "Here's the proposition. Tom Moore is the star in the picture, 'The Gay Lord Quex,' which comes to the Metropolitan next week. Tom is the man with many loves in this picture. His favorite expression is, 'Did anyone ever tell you what beautiful eyes you have?'

"Don't you remember 'Tom, Tom, the piper's son,' that old ditty from nursery days? Well, write a verse in the same style, two stanzas—only weave it around the film.

"The following is a sample of the kind of verse you are expected to turn in:

Tom, Tom, the famous Moore,
Always plays in the hits that's "sure."
He's proved the public's worry cure.
Tom, Tom, the famous Moore.

The strongest of the stronger sex
Has made a hit in "The Gay Lord Quex."
His brilliant acting will endure—
Tom, Tom, the famous Moore.

"This is merely a sample and the thought contained in your verse need not be along the lines of exploitation. Use description, use one of the loves of Tom, use any subject you may find in the story of it.

Hold "Love Letter" Contest as Exploitation Stunt

An example of how exhibitor and exchange representative, be he exploitation man or just plain manager, is hereby chronicled in a story of how the Folly theatre of Oklahoma City, Okla., and T. R. Richards, branch manager of the Robertson Cole offices at Oklahoma City put over a love letter contest at the Folly, using as the basis for public interest the National love letter contest which is being held for Lew Cody, star of "The Beloved Cheater."

Following out the general idea of the big contest, the Folly and Mr. Richards held their contest at the Folly on Dec. 17. Twenty-five dollars in prize money was offered and awarded to the writers of the four best love letters. The first prize was $10.00 and the other three graduated down to $2.50. In addition to the cash awards fifteen persons won free passes to the Folly shows for the rest of 1919.

The event was widely advertised and much interest was aroused in it. Several hundred letters were received and the awards made. The winner of the first prize was Berta M. Coombs of Oklahoma City. Her epistle is herewith appended. It is a fine piece of literature. A sweetheart who can write such letters surely would not disappoint as a wife:

Oh! My Dear, My Dear:—

Your letter came by Special tonight. I am so glad, so very, very glad for you. There is no real joy in Life except in achievement or service.

I think I loved you first because you seemed to me to be trying to carry the torch of progress forward. I love you doubly tonight because you have lifted it high enough to become a beacon that the gaze of all the world is on. My "Dream Man" has made his dreams come true. May mine be the task of clearing the way and steadying your burdened hands.

Oh! My Dear, if I have doubted you forgive me. It was only that success comes so rarely to the blazer of trails usually only a grave in the wilderness for the one who comes behind to place a cross upon.

With my thoughts, I say to you "Courage" and "Onward."

Sincerely, (Signed)
Berta M. Coombs,
4 Dale Ave., Oklahoma City.

The Jumbo Sign Board of Them All

EVEN in the multitude of billboards and advertising signs which rest on the roofs of the multitude of buildings nesting about Times Square one claimed to be the largest in New York and perhaps in the world, is attracting the attention of even the people who spend their time during business hours in the vicinity of Forty-ninth street.

The sign in question is one devoted to the charms of Priscilla Dean, who is soon to appear in a new picture after a rather prolonged absence from the screen.

It was originally planned to have a sign of the usual size painted on the building where this sign is located. After the sign painter had looked at Priscilla's likeness he threw up his hands and struck—struck for more space!

"I like to do things in a big way," he said. "I couldn't do justice to those eyes and that smile and the dimples and—oh—I want more space, or I won't paint the sign."

"Paint the sign—and take your own space," he was told. Little did the man giving the order realize what this meant. The painter took his own space.

As a result there is a sign which reaches from the fifth floor to the roof of the ten-story Mecca Building at Broadway and Forty-ninth street. The sign extends the full width of the building which runs through from Broadway to Seventh avenue.

The largest sign in the world, according to Dame Rumor, on the Forty-ninth street side of the building at 1600 Broadway

Exploitation Idea Used for "Right to Happiness"

Below is an illustration of how some good exploitation was pulled during the New York showing of "The Right to Happiness." The two persons in evening dress shown in the illustration, professional actors were engaged by the Universal Publicity Department to walk up and down in front of the Circle theatre where the film was running and politely stop people whom they thought would not resent it, and at the same time hand out a little card which explained the "Right to Happiness" engagement and extolled it's merits. In view of the fact that from appearance the passerby would expect an inquiry of some importance, many persons stopped willingly and after so doing listened to the actor's story of "The Right to Happiness," etc.

The stunt went over for much attention.

"Leather Necks" Aid in Milwaukee Exploitation

THE way of Manager Frank Cook of the New Strand theatre, Milwaukee, and Selznick's publicity representative, Smith, from the Chicago office, went after business for the Strand's showing of "A Regular Girl" made Milwaukee used to exploitation stunts by the picture houses sit up and take notice

Among the stunts pulled for the picture was that of inducing ten U. S. Marines on an open automobile truck raising toy balloons with tags attached good for a season's pass to the Strand theatre. This went over for a lot of publicity. The streets were crowded for two hours with people amused at the antics of the marines, who were having the time of their lives and also hoping to grab a balloon with one of the admission tags attached.

The idea that clothes of appearance count was adapted to the exploitation of "Right to Happiness" in New York

Newspaper and Exchange Men Put Over a New One

THE most successful bit of co-operative moving picture advertising ever put on in Cincinnati was that promoted by the Cincinnati Post, recently in connection with the "rainy day ad" of the Paramount-Artcraft national newspaper campaign. Ralph Chandler, advertising manager, and Walter Going, of the advertising staff of the Post put forth strenuous efforts to interest Cincinnati exhibitors in "tieing-up" with the big Paramount-Artcraft ad and the results were beyond expectations. Each of nearly a score of exhibitors contracted to have their theatres advertised for twelve months in connection with the monthly advertising of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. To help the newspapers sell this advertising, the Famous Players-Lasky office in Cincinnati established a desk for signing newspaper space contracts and signed up the exhibitors when they went into the office instead of making the newspaper solicitors work nights to find the showmen at their theatres. Reports from several exhibitors are that the novel "rainy day ad" brought immediate results and appealed to the sense of humor of patrons, drawing them to the theatre despite the rain. The ad was run on a day when it poured and the clouds wrapped Cincinnati in more than its usual rainy-day gloom.

The tie-up ads are cleverly framed, the newspaper making extra casts of the original border of the center ad and using it to make a well-balanced lay-out. This is much neater than just tacking on a lot of ads without regard to the general appearance of the whole.

Making a Cold Snap Work for You

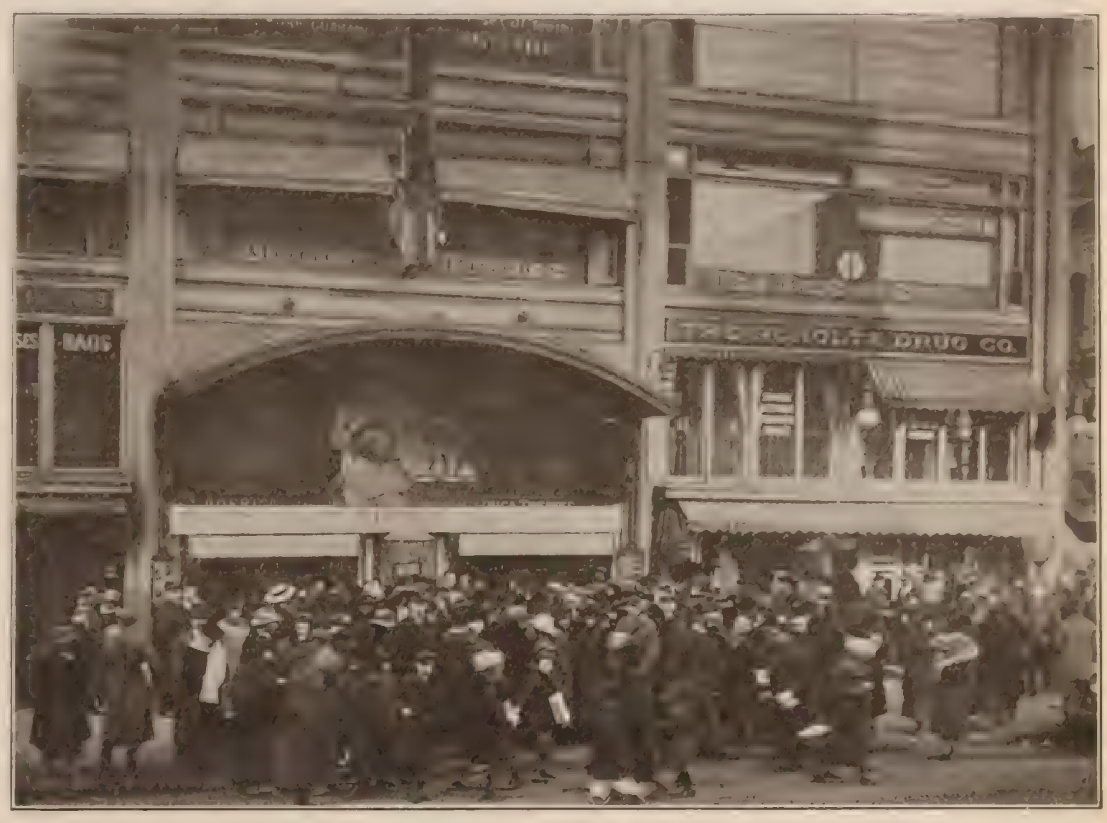
"IF you think you are cold, drop into the Liberty and see Miss Nell Shipman bathing in the open air at 40 below zero."

This was the heading of an advertisement used by W. C. Clavier, manager of the Liberty theatre, at Fargo, N. D., on the opening day of a run of "Back to God's Country." Fargo was in the grip of a cold spell with the thermometer registering 16 degrees below zero.

Despite the cold Mr. Clavier says the production broke house records, and that people stood out in the freezing weather waiting for room inside the theatre.

The Book Store as an Advertising Medium

" Anne of Green Gables " Gets Window Display Publicity of Great Value to the Run



Crowds which answered the display tie-up obtained for the showing of " Anne of Green Gables " at the American theatre, Denver

DENVER may be the abode of many "lungers" and others afflicted with pulmonary diseases which its high altitude benefits, but it is also " high " in some other things besides altitudes and one of these is the rating the theatres of the city are entitled to for the exploitation methods employed.

Perhaps the recent cold weather over the Middle West has stirred the blood of the Denver showmen, for of late there seems to be even more activity and enthusiasm in putting over pictures than previously.

One of the campaigns which has just closed which registers high in efficiency and the pulling of unusual stunts is that conducted by the America theatre, for the showing of Mary Miles Minter in " Anne of Green Gables."

The America began its exploitation early on this picture. Knowing the vogue the books from which the novel was adapted had in the city, it therefore bought extra large space in the newspapers and featured the novels from which the play was taken well up in its billing. Miss Minter, of course, was well known to Denver theatregoers and consequently easily sold so far as she herself was concerned. For that reason the principal stress was laid on the unusualness of the vehicle she was appearing in. Having told Denver about " Anne " in the papers the America publicity men next gave their attention to the other angles of exploitation the feature possesses. The tie-up possibilities for window displays with book stores was fully appreciated and it was along these lines that the America force outdid themselves.

On one of the principal streets of Denver is the Herrick Book and Stationery Company's store. To the Herrick Company manager the proposition of a display in the store's best show window sounded so good that he joined forces with the theatre gang and between them a window display of co-operative design where the " Anne of Green Gables " books and the " Anne of Green Gables " picture advertising were featured, was constructed which equals anything of its kind ever recorded in these pages. Further description of the display is unnecessary since we are able to reproduce it for you.

The America men were not satisfied with this big display we have described, but also went after a window in the Denver department store and got it. This display was not so elaborate as the one arranged in the Herrick Company's window, but it was tasty and refined. In this display only the " Anne of Green Gables " novels and the photoplay advertising in the shape of scene stills with an announcement card giving the dates and the theatre where the attraction was playing were used. The Denver store made mention of the tie-up in its advertising which aided in arousing interest.

When the show opened business was all that could be expected even by optimistic exploitation men and during the run it held up well in spite of extremely cold weather.

A photograph was taken on the last day of the run, a cut of which is herewith shown which will prove whether the booking could be considered a success.

All of which goes to prove that intensive exploitation of pictures pays. Denver is not always a week run town to even good pictures, but this one held up so it is fair to assume that it was quite a lot of publicity which did it.

Gives Free Admissions as Interest Builder

OUT in Washington, Ind., there resides an exhibitor, Ernest Stellings, manager of the Grand Theatre, who knows that people like to get something for nothing and often times will make a great effort to obtain a prize, when the value of the gift is really not large, measured in terms of finance.

Recently Mr. Stellings used an advertising stunt to stimulate business through the "prize" medium. He distributed a numbered card which stated that certain numbers would entitle the holder to a free admission to the Grand theatre to see Anita Stewart in " Human Desire." The stunt brought out a lot of extra business, much of which probably was attracted to the theatre lobby out of curiosity.

Interesting Discussion on the Theory of Advertising by Julius K. Johnson

AN interesting dissertation on the theories of advertising emanates from Julius K. Johnson, Advertising Manager of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis.

It is a discussion of when it is good policy to advertise a star without laying any particular stress on the production regardless of the fact that the story has undenied exploitation angles perhaps unequaled in any picture the player has even appeared in.

Involved is in a way the same principle as that in the salesmanship idiom of "Don't ask a man if he wants to buy something. Assume that he does."

In the treatise forthcoming Manager Johnson assumed that all of Minneapolis wanted to see Mary Pickford's "Heart of the Hills." Assumed so because he had a standard product to sell in the star. Because Minneapolis had seen and liked "Daddy Long Legs" and "The Hoodlum" and the numbers of other Pickford pictures which have made her famous.

The underlying thought of Mr. Johnson's whole exploitation campaign is, in brief, the problem of whether the promise of "something new" as an appeal for patronage is as strong as the thoroughly-founded previous successes of the star exploited.

Exploitation, according to Mr. Johnson, that offers the popular phrases of "never seen before," "something new," "entirely different" and related words, is nothing more than a promise, when cut down to the bone. And, so he contends, a promise is never as much of an inducement for a person to spend money as a fact, backed up solidly by past performances.

It was with this idea in view that Mr. Johnson outlined his campaign for "Heart O' the Hills." Eschewing for a time, the many story angles of this latest Pickford production, and the various novelties that could well have been worked into the promotion of this attraction, Mr. Johnson, exploited "Heart O' the Hills" from the standpoint of "Daddy Long Legs," and "The Hoodlum," both of which had meant fine results for the New Garrick box office.

Thus it happened that when the New Garrick was showing "Heart O' the Hills," the Minneapolis public was reached with exploitation that did not treat this picture as an unknown product, but as another triumph by the same popular star who had entertained them with her portrayal of Judy in "Daddy Long Legs," and Amy Burke in "The Hoodlum." Advertisements which featured the display sections of the local newspapers were continual reminders of the fact that:

"You adored her as Judy in 'Daddy Long Legs;' You loved her as Amy in 'The Hoodlum;' You'll idolize her as Mavis in 'Heart o' the Hills.'"

Another basic element in the chemical formation of Mr. Johnson's exploitation justified his departure from the routine path of confining all promotion matter to the picture on the screen. This is his claim that every motion picture star has an individual following. And probably the star with the greatest following of box office patrons is Mary Pickford. Just as every exhibitor in every city knows, there is a certain percentage of theatregoers who will never fail to see a Mary Pickford attraction, so did Mr. Johnson realize that those same patrons who packed the houses for "Daddy Long Legs" and "The Hoodlum" would be more tempted to see "Heart O' the Hills," provided they recalled Miss Pickford in her past successes.

The art work used with the ads was another conception of the proper way to sell a picture, according to Mr. Johnson's ideas. The suggestion of "everybody's sweetheart," which was used generally in all advertising matter was carried out by means of a heart in which Miss Pickford's picture was enclosed. A background of hills carried out the title of the story.

Employing the "Sale" Idea for Pictures

THE Saenger Amusement Company has quit some string of motion picture houses in Louisiana's metropolis, New Orleans, but it doesn't own all the theatres which are alive and stirring and among these is the Escorial, a neighborhood house of ample seating capacity managed by D. Ludmann.

Mr. Ludmann does not go in for elaborate lobby displays but he does believe in the use of good paper for his front and in plenty of it. Recently Mr. Ludmann contracted for a week's supply of al Pathe pictures among which he booked "The Thirteenth Chair," and "Impossible Catherine" and decided to advertise them all at once. This he did on both the inside and outside of his house.

The screen was used for the announcement of the week's bills and in the lobby Mr. Ludmann placed several sheets of paper with the date the picture would be shown for every bill up for the week.

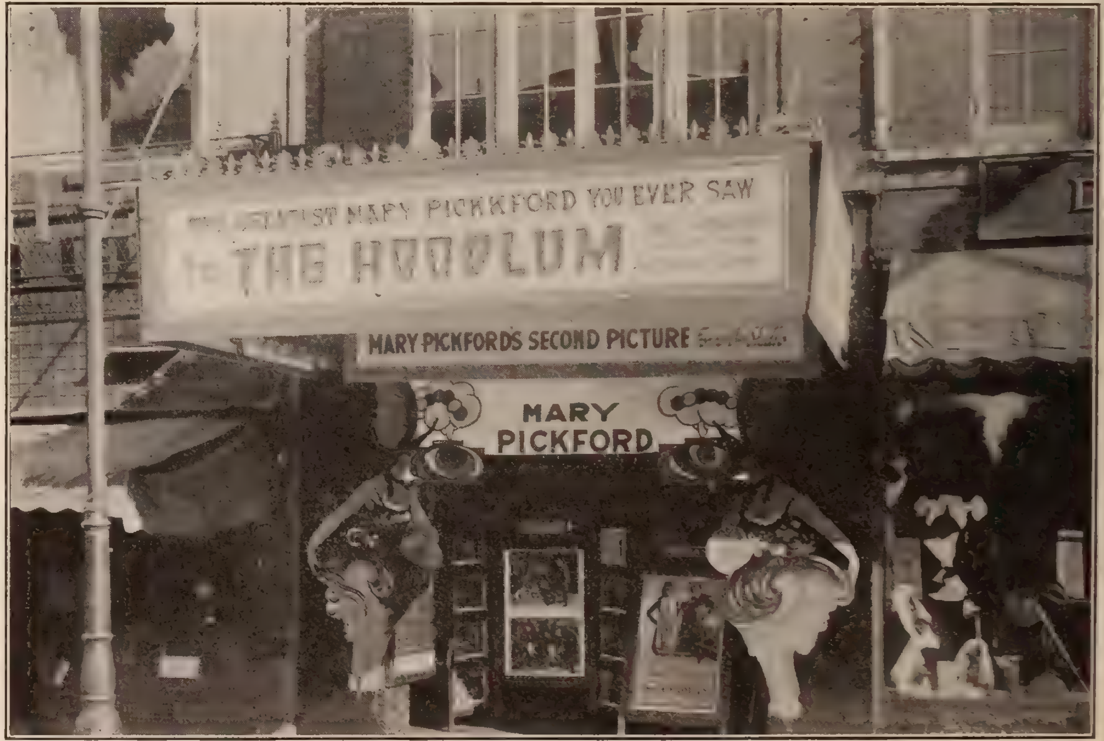
The result was gratifying according to his report. People coming and seeing a good picture and knowing that a drive was being made for the whole week with the same firm's pictures all of which were being touted as of assured standard were induced to come back again for the other nights. It was sort of a "sale" as other mercantile business would term it and like a sale it brought extra business because the efforts were concentrated.

Not New, But Still Good Is This Stunt of the Bannon Theatre

THE Bannon Theatre of Elyria, O., has tried out an old stunt in advertising with very successful results. In preparing the banner for the front of the theatre for a run of Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum," the painter was instructed to put two "K's" in the star's last name.

It resulted in a great number of people stopping at the box office to call attention to the misspelling, and others dragged friends blocks out of their way to test their sense of observation by asking what was wrong with the sign.

The manager of the Bannon said that never had any other form of advertisement attracted so much attention, and that the resulting business was far beyond expectations. He intends to try the same stunt again when he hooks another picture by a star whose name is as familiar as that of Mary Pickford.



The High Lights of Broadway's Shows

DURING the war the U-boat lent itself well to the production of screen drama even if the public was aware that the dramatic thrills were but the clever tricks of the camera man and hat the giant liners an audience saw plunge beneath the water were only miniature ships, but it has remained for the enactment of the real thing as recorded by the cameras aboard German submarines to bring to the world a full idea of what happened when the submarine singled out its prey and methodically went about its mission of sending the craft to its watery grave.

Such scenes were first brought before American eyes some few weeks ago in a film released by nternational. Another now makes its appearance on Broadway as a part of the program at the Strand and Capitol theatres for this week. This latest contribution to history and entertainment is titled the "Log of U-35," being what purports to be and necessarily must be motion pictures taken on board a German submarine while she was at her work of destroying Allied marine service.

Before your eyes and with all the realism of the actual happening made especially effective by good camera work both in the sharpness of the picture and for steadiness of the image, considering the fact that the camera was necessarily located on the rolling back of the sub, the audience sees in detail five big steamers and one schooner receive their death wounds and views each one lift either prow or stern high in the air before plunging beneath the waves. The reels, there are two, are sponsored by C. B. Price and Co. Any exhibitor who does not avail himself of the opportunity presented of billing these reels as a feature is letting real money get away from his box-office.

Second on the list of "high lights" is a strip of news weekly released by International titled "Defying Death a Mile in the Air," same being the daredevil deeds of Lieut. Locklear on, over and under an aeroplane a mile from earth, as photographed from another plane speeding along in a parallel direction. For thrills this bit of film can scarcely be surpassed. Locklear performs amazing feats that nothing short of a sheer disregard for his life would induce any man to do. In bringing these thrills to the screen, some extra fine camera work has been accomplished. You look at the picture as if the actual happenings were but a few rods away, and it is seldom that the stunts get out of the vision of the camera and then but for a fraction of a second. This strip is good for special billing and the promise of something new in death defying deeds.

Several of the numbers on Ned Wayburn's Revue at the Capitol would be worth while describing if they were of the character which picture theatres are using, but we therefore pass them for a novelty which should prove interesting to all managers who go in for elaborate vocal selections with settings. This is to be found in the first scene of the Wayburn presentation and consists of a pretty and effective way of introducing soloists and dancers for a special number, words and music of which are the work of Cora Mac Greachy, under the title of "The Seven Wonders of the World."

The stage setting is a giant double "inkwell," with a fancy "back." In the center of the "back" is "a calendar pad," in reality a sliding door. Seven girls enter on cues from the song as the doors are changed, beginning with "Monday." All are in costumes which for the Capitol presentation were designed by Miss MacGeachy. The setting was devised by Ned Wayburn. The "inkwells" are probably four feet high and are painted to show red ink in one and a blue ink in the other. From one protrudes a "quill pen" about six feet long. The "calendar" doors are about three and one-half by six feet. A scroll work design is worked out in the backing of the "inkwell." The soloists, two males, appear after the curtain is parted. The act runs about fifteen minutes and appears to be especially suitable for photoplay theatre presentation. Back of the "inkwell" set are curtains. The set is dimly lighted with spots focused on the "calendar" when the girls enter. The particular designs in costume used at the Capitol are not essential to the act.

Timely Tips on Short Subjects

The Log of the U-35—C. B. Price and Co.

THIS is described as the official log of the German undersea raider, U-35, made by the commander on the deck of his craft as it pursued its work of wanton destruction, tendered to the German administration of war times and later seized by the Allies when that government collapsed. The film has been submitted to the naval authorities at Washington and shown at the U. S. submarine base at New London, Conn., but hitherto has not been exhibited to the public. Besides showing in detail how ships were sunk, it presents some interesting highlights of what life aboard a submarine really is and has considerable scenic value showing the ocean a thousand miles from land.

It's merits are made plain under "highlights" on this page.

Unusual Strips in This Weeks Current Events

WINTER on the Shores of Lake Erie—International. This is some extra fine snow stuff taken while the storm still held. A squirrel which had ventured out for a meal, is caught by the lens in the crotch of a tree as it nibbles away at a nut.

In the Northwest—Pathe. A fine view of the big rotary snow plows used on the railroads in the Northwest as they eat their way through big drifts of snow.

Welding a Great Ship Casting—Kinograms. There is much educational value in this strip which explains itself. How such without detachment from the ship is a piece of knowledge worth possessing.

Defying Death a Mile in the Air—International. This is the camera's record of what Lieutenant Locklear did recently at Los Angeles in the way of crawling about an aeroplane and performing such stunts as hanging by one leg, one arm and standing erect without support, while the machine was in motion many thousand feet above the earth. A real thrill in this for the most hardened spectator.

grams. There is much educational value in Mummers Outdazzle Former Years—Pathe. Scenes from the annual New Year's parade in costume at Philadelphia. Many novel stunts were in evidence and some unique floats were exhibited. A feature of this year's parade was the "Death of John Barleycorn" contingent, being for the most part many persons inside huge bottle-like costumes labeled for the departed beverage.

On Life Saving Duty—International. This is a view of the Coast Life Guards rescuing people from a wrecked ship by aid of the breeches buoy. It is not a demonstration but scenes from an actual rescue.

From Hand to Mouth

Harold Lloyd—Pathe

HAROLD LLOYD is on the programs of both the Rialto and Strand theatre this week in a new two-reel comedy titled "From Hand to Mouth."

To our mind this is even better than "Bumping Into Broadway," which was generally accepted as a new highwater mark for Lloyd. There is a lot of "new stuff" in the picture and what is more to be commended, the pulling of "old stuff" in a new way or with clever additions to the business which makes it register as if it was original. For instance, there is the usual chase of the "cops," but it is not just a chase without reason with the usual tumbling about. Lloyd wants to be pursued by the police so he can rescue the "girl," so deliberately invites pursuit by bumping into the cops where they are on duty, hitting them with bricks, etc.

The comedian is shown this time as a "busted" young man who is behind on his board bill, and hungry. His attempts to side step his landlady after being served with "the third notice" are extremely funny. Considerable business about the stage entrance of a theatre goes over big. Another scene with a cute little girl who is also hungry also registers. All in all, it is one of the best slap stick hits of the season and further establishes Lloyd's reputation as one of the most consistent of screen comedians. When one stops to count the number of really good comedies this actor has produced in the past few months, it is the highest compliment we can pay him when we say that "From Hand to Mouth" is the best picture he has yet made. As are all Lloyd comedies, this is released by Pathe.

Dames and Dentists

Vitagraph

"JIMMY" AUBREY, Vitagraph's screen comedian is the central figure in this, a slap stick production which, while presenting nothing particularly new in business or idea, does keep up its tempo of farce comedy action and will command interest and earn a good many laughs.

The excuse of a "plot" common to low comedy pictures, is in this instance a dentist's office where much burlesque of the treating and extracting of various patients' teeth is used to a fair degree of success. Some very good camera work is in evidence and several of the sequences may be termed to be original. One is a strip where three men chase themselves about under a large rug. A lot of good freak types have been assembled for minor roles and Aubrey does not allow the action to lag at any point. We would call the picture considerably above the average of its kind.

Capitol Theatre Colorland Review

THIS is a Prizma offering of the usual type which has for its principal entertainment feature, a most decided apppeal in the beauties of the photographic tintings. There is no story but many of the strips register as exceptional in their colorings. On the Capitol theatre program.

Hy Mayer Travelaugh

HY MAYOR'S latest cartoon comedy will amuse those who are partial to cartoonic antics of Mr. Mayor's famous characters. It is of usual length and the subject is of timely interest. On the Capitol theatre bill.

Novelty Advertising Idea for "The Miracle Man" Originated by Laurie

A. J. Laurie, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Toronto, Can., is the originator of one of the most effective little "Miracle Man" advertising ideas which have come to our attention.

The advertising medium is a little multiple page booklet, entitled "Faith." With only a few sentences on each page and set in very narrow measure, a little sermon is printed on the factor the quality of faith is in every one's life. No mention of advertising is hinted at until the very last page where the announcement of "The Miracle Man" as a feature picture founded on the theme of the booklet is made.

Being well written and nicely printed the booklet is read for its literary merit, and it is not until one reaches the end of the story that it is discovered that the person has been the victim of an advertising stunt. Of course there is no "kick" to this "teaser" method idea since the booklet is valuable for the reasons first mentioned.

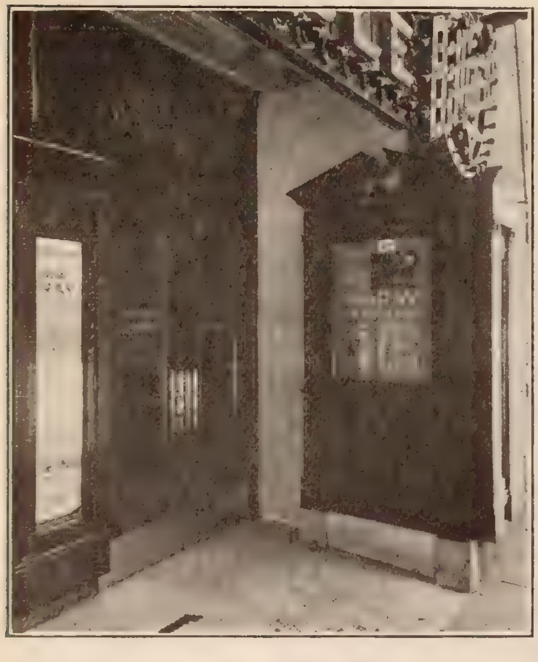
For those who may wish to use this idea we are appending Mr. Laurie's text as it appeared in his booklet "Faith."

"There is something worth while in this little book and you ought to read it. "Faith, Hope and Charity." Someone has said the greatest of these is Charity. Faith, however, is a big factor in the life of people. Faith in your fellowmen, your employees, your employer, is wonderful, but have you faith in yourself? Faith in one's ability to make good is half the battle. You must have faith in your proposition too, or else you will fail. Faith to a very large degree is the foundation of all religious organizations. Without it they would totter and fall to the ground.

"And faith shall make you whole"—"by faith ye shall be cleansed." By faith miracles have been performed in modern as in olden times. Faith in the British fleet was one of the chief factors making for morale in the Allied Armies. Faith in Foch kept his soldiers ready for instant response. Faith means trust or confidence in a person; belief in the statement of another; confidence and trust in God; fidelity to promises, honesty. The engineer has faith in the track foreman. The foreman has faith in the trackmen. The trackmen have faith in the ties, rails and spikes.

And the train rolls on at sixty miles an hour. But if one of these break faith there is sure to be a catastrophe. The same applies to your life as you live it in enjoyment because you have faith in those who are responsible for your safety.

Four crooks had faith in their ability to victimize. A wondrous character had faith in the ability of faith to cure broken minds and broken bodies. He won—although he was to be the victim. He was the Miracle Man, and faith wrought wondrous changes in four crooks. The story cannot b told in detail in this little book. If you see th great Paramount-Artcraft production, "The Miracle Man at the Alhambra——."



Corner of the lobby at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, showing Manager Franklin's attractive program card

Franklin Employs Girl Ushers fron Choice Now

MANAGER HAROLD B. FRANKLIN calls i the Shea Hippodrome "traffic squad." Hippodrome patrons call it the "beauty squad. It's both!

The quintette pictured above is the personnel o the officers that direct the "traffic" at Shea's Hipprodrome, Buffalo. In other words Mr. Frankli looks to these five girls to solve all problems o seating the patrons that attend the big Buffal house. They direct the work of the corps of th 25 usherettes. Each is in command of a squad o five "patron charmers."

These girls for a half hour each day before th house opens go through drills and calisthenic exercises in the basement of the Hippodrome. Thes drills fit the girls to better perform their work, giv them much needed exercise and aid in physical upbuilding. Long periods on the floor are neve complained of by these athletic "traffic girls."

When one says that these girls solve the problem incident to the work of ushering, that statemen must be taken literally because there are few patrons that can resist the smile of any of thes girls. If a patron cannot find a seat and gets a trifle noisy, a smile comes forth from the face o one of the usherettes and the patron is content t stand all night if need be.

There is a certain psychology in an usherette' smile. A big house will find it a valuable asse when the audience begin to overflow; whe patrons begin to display the "blues." The gir ushers at Shea's Hippodrome have proven a bi success. They were engaged when the countr entered the conflict overseas. It was an experiment, but Mr. Franklin is authority for the statement that boys will never again be employed a ushers in Shea's Hippodrome.

The girls have proven their worth and have become a permanent part of the Hippodrome system Their gentle ways, winning smiles and ever presen willingness to make patrons feel at home, ha brought forth many laudatory remarks fron patrons.

Live News from the Producers

Three New Americans on the Way

The next special feature now about to be distributed by the American Film Company is "The Valley of Tomorrow," which has just been given its first press and trade showings Stephen Fox was both the writer of the script and the scenarist.

Following "The Valley of Tomorrow," a new "Flying A" special—unnamed as yet—will be put on the market. It is a romance by Daniel F. Whitcomb. The cast includes Margarita Fisher, Harry Hilliard, Beatrice Van, Harvey Clark, George Periolat, Neil Hardin and Mary Talbot. Artistic titles and effective art work, a matter to which the American gives particular care, are about completed.

The coast print of "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, has just been shipped from Santa Barbara to the American's Chicago laboratory. With Madame Marguerita Sylvia, the famous prima donna, in the leading role, this de luxe picture is expected to be a great success.

First of Art-O-Graf's Series Delivered

Art-O-Graf Film Corporation of Denver has just delivered to Arrow, the first of a series of special productions which are being made by Director Otis B. Thayer for release through Arrow during the year 1920.

The first subject is a western, starring Edmund Cobb, a rising young actor who will also be featured in the other pictures of the series.

"The Desert Scorpion" is the name of the first release which is scheduled for release on January 15th. It is a story dealing with the enmity existing between the ranchmen and the sheepherders in the pioneer days of the west.

Production has also been started by Director Thayer on the second picture of the series which will be called "Wolves of the Street" and which is scheduled for release early in February.

Tyrad Appointments

Moe Kerman has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange of Tyrad Pictures, Inc. Kerman resigned as assistant manager of Realarts New York territory to take over his new duties. He was formerly manager of the United Picture Theatres' Albany office, and is well known to the local exhibitors, having operated a chain of theatres in Brooklyn for a number of years.

Charles P. Saunders has been placed in charge of Tyrad's recently opened Albany office at 680 Broadway.

Theatre Screen Service DeLuxe

National Screen Service Outlines Its Plans and Functions

AFTER several months of preparatory work, during which time it has been generally known that the film market is due for an innovation, the National Screen Service, Inc., now explains its activities to the trade.

National Screen Service offers to theatres, both large and small, at a small figure, a service in motion pictures by which the exhibitors can announce from the screen the attractions coming to their theatres. While the very mention of motion picture announcements may remind some of the so called "trailers" which have been issued by various film producers only occasionally, the difference is really said to be a tremendous one. The National Screen Service makes an issue of the permanency of its service and the absolute removal of any limitations on it.

In the National's plan it makes no difference whether a theatre changes its programme once a week or seven times a week. The exhibitor gets his own house opening in animation design, with artistic and various novelty effects, introducing the words "—— Theatre Presents," this is followed by day titles, such as "Coming Monday" or "Coming Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday", as the case may be, and this is always done in novelty art. A title now announces the production, the star and the producer, after which comes a scene from the photoplay announced or a close-up of the star. On a service basis, the exhibitor is thus enabled to always announce several shows ahead in motion pictures instead of through the methods now in use.

National Screen Service is claimed to be the only proposition in the motion picture business on which the leading producers have ever gotten together. It is pointed out by the Company that they hold exclusive contracts with the film producers, including the largest of them, such as Paramount, First National, Goldwyn, Selznick, United Pictures, Universal, etc.

The company's offices are now at 1476 Broadway and its extensive laboratory and assembling work will be done at the Stellar Plant at Cliffside, N. J. One of the officials of the National, in a statement to the trade press, says:

"We are past the experimental stage, our service begins February first, and already a great number of the finest theatres and chains of theatres in the East have signed up with us. The exhibitors all tell us that our service is something that had to come some day and that it fills a great gap in the theatre's show. We supply efficiency, refinement and novelty where it has all these years been lacking. We believe that exhibitors everywhere will recognize that our contracts with the producers establish our responsibility and substantiality. We believe that exhibitors want to know about the standing of concerns that contract with and we are more than glad to answer all inquiries as to our personnel, and our facilities for carrying this work through. We are covering the Eastern territory with our salesmen as rapidly as we can and are aiming to soon present our service to the exhibitors on a nation-wide basis, but we shall not expand any faster than our ideal of efficiecy and expert service will permit."

F.P.-Lasky Signs Jack Holt, Leading Man

Jack Holt, well known leading man, has signed a long term contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to appear in leading roles in Paramount-Artcraft pictures. His first work under the new contract will be in a leading characterization in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Held by the Enemy," which is to be directed by Donald Crisp.

Mr. Holt has appeared heretofore in a great many big productions and will be recalled for his excellent work in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," and in "The Life Line." He is considered a genuine acquisition to the regular forces of the Lasky studio.

Full Exploitation Aid on Triangle Release

All press matter, campaign books and posters on "A Gamble in Souls," the Thomas H. Ince production which Triangle will release on Jan. 25th, is ready for distribution to exhibitors. "A Gamble in Souls" is expected to be one of the biggest and most profitable releases issued by Triangle in its new series of recreated productions.

First Part of Ben Wilson Serial Due Soon

Prints of the first three episodes of the second Ben Wilson serial, "The Screaming Shadow," have arrived from the Coast. The three episodes are titled "The Screaming in the Dark," "The Virgin of Death,"' and "The Fang of the Beast." The first episode of "The Screaming Shadow" will be released this month. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are co-starred.

Famous Players Issues Reports

REPORTS from the offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation give indications of new enterprises soon to be undertaken and of efforts to perfect some of the productions already on their way to be released. One report deals with Cecil B. DeMille's new Paramount-Artcraft picture "Why Change Your Wife" and the artistic backgrounds being arranged for the titles. "Specially selected art objects of porcelain and bronze, says the report, have been utilized by Cecil B. DeMille's production manager, Howard Higgin, to augment the beauty and power of the title backgrounds in Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount-Artcraft creation, 'Why Change Your Wife?' soon to be released by Famous Players-Lasky. To emphasize the change in the wife and to establish by suggestion the type of the 'other woman,' Cecil B. DeMille chose the medium of art title backgrounds selected by himself and Howard Higgin.

"Exquisite porcelains were chosen and photographically blended into the finished production. For the first stage of the wife's career, an owl was chosen. A perfect specimen of a fifteenth century Sevre peacock serves for the second period. A magnificent Dolton fox, much sought by art collectors, appears in the title backgrounds in connection with the 'other woman.' Another specimen of unusual interest which appears in the title backgrounds is a bronze figure which achieved fame in a recent Paris salon exhibition."

Another report from the Famous Players-Lasky offices advises of the return of "Fatty" Arbuckle to the Lasky studio in the West after a four-weeks' vacation trip to the East. The report speaks of Mr. Arbuckle as glad to get back to California and as eagerly anticipating prospects of getting into action in the forthcoming production of "The Round-Uu." "Roscoe Arbuckle comedies," says the report, "returned to the Lasky studio last week wreathed in smiles and rolled a cigarette with one hand as he used the other to shake hands with George Melford, who is producing 'The Round-Up' in which Mr. Arbuckle is to appear as the fat and faithful sheriff.

Prepares for New Pictures and Perfects Work Now Done

"By arrangement with Joseph Schenck, 'Fatty' Arbuckle becomes temporarily Roscoe Arbuckle. When he has completed the production he will resume his comedy pictures. But this flyer in the 'legit' is something that is decidedly to his liking."

A third report from the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that in his direction of Enid Bennett, in "The Man in the Moon," Fred Niblo brings to his task a wealth of knowledge which he acquired in his former forays with Mr. Paul Armstrong into the denizens of the underworld in New York and Chicago at which time both men were seeking material for future pictures. "At the time of his association with Mr. Armstrong," says the report, "Mr. Niblo conceived the ambition to direct a play dealing with the life of the underworld, and now, at last, his ambition has been achieved and he is bringing to the direction of Miss Bennett a wealth of first hand knowledge of the character she is portraying in the present Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft."

Lillian Gish in a Reissue

Triangle Announces "Tiger Girl" for Feb. 13; Four Comedies During Month

TRIANGLE announces that "Tiger Girl", featuring Lillian Gish, will be released Feb. 15th. This production was supervised by D. W. Griffith and is adapted from the Triangle feature "The Lilly and the Rose".

"Tiger Girl" will be the only Triangle drama release during February and follows the Thomas H. Ince production "A Gamble in Souls", with Dorothy and William Desmond, which will be released on Jan. 25th. "Tiger Girl" is said to be one of the best productions made by the D. W. Griffith-Lillian Gish combination. Due to the popularity of both Mr. Griffith and Miss Gish at this time, this production has large money-making possibilities and will undoubtedly score a great success with the public. A large advertising campaign will be begun by Triangle to acquaint the public with this master production of the master director, and exhibitors will have the same opportunity to cash in on this feature as they have on Mr. Griffith's more recent productions.

Triangle will release four comedies during the month of February. These will be a continuation of the recreated comedy releases which are meeting with much favor among exhibitors, due to their advertising value, as many of the best known comedians, such as Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Syd Chaplin, Chester Conklin, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Swain, Ford Sterling and the original Mack Sennett-Keystone Bathing Beauties are featured in each of these productions. On Feb. 1st, "His Baby Doll," a one-reel comedy will be released. "The Dancing Master," a two-reel Triangle comedy will be available Feb. 8th. Another one-reel Triangle entitled "His Day of Doom" will be released Feb. 16th. Feb. 24th is the date set by Triangle for the release of the two-reel comedy "The Love Riot."

Screen to Show Character Revealed by Hands

Alon Bement, professor at Columbia University, New York City, and an artist who reads character from the hands, has been engaged by the New Screen Magazine, distributed by Universal to make a series of moving pictures in which he will reveal how character and personality is exposed by the hands. Professor Bement has a large collection of painted hands of noted men and women. Some of the most interesting of these are of Ada Sassoli, the Italian harpist, Lady Forbes-Robertson, Helen Smith Woodruff, and Sarah Bernhardt.

"Why Women Sin" Said Not To Be Suggestive

Burton King, who is now engaged in the filming of the Burton King Production for the Wistaria Company, "Why Women Sin," in speaking of his initial creative effort of the New Year, said:

"I desire to emphasize the fact that while to some minds the title of this feature might lead them to believe that there was an element of suggestiveness about it, I have never in my nine years of directorial activity been associated with nor sponsored a production which savored of uncleanliness. The fact that the play, from which the screen version was adapted, has an international reputation extending over a long period of years and the added fact that it impressed me as being such wonderful photoplay material and not the title alone decided me when we purchased the motion picture rights."

"I was indeed very fortunate in securing the services of Lloyd Lonergan to make the actual scenario and the resultant work will prove that a better choice could not have been possibly made."

"Miss Luther, who is featured in this production, has never been seen to better advantage.

June Elvidge Not Starred in "Law of Yukon"

Contrary to an erroneous report, June Elvidge is not to be featured in "The Law of the Yukon," which Charles Miller is directing. The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, for whom this production is being made, does not feature players. The leading feminine role in "The Law of the Yukon," Goldie Meadows, is being portrayed by Nancy Deaver, who is a new ingenue type, making her first screen appearance in this photoplay. She is a Mayflower "find." Miss Elvidge's role, Mrs. Meredith, the doctor's wife, is an unusual one, not exactly a vampire adventuress, but still a character who relieves her Yukon surroundings with Oriental features. She thinks the dance-hall girls immoral, having her own code of morals. The engagement of a star to play such a role is quite in keeping with Mayflower's policy to have the best players available in every role.

Tyrad Handles "Wonders of Nature" Series

Tyrad Pictures, Inc., have secured the State and World's rights for "Wonders of Nature," a series of single reel nature studies, compiled and produced by Prof. W. L. Brind, the Naturalist, Author and Cinematographer. There are fifty-two subjects in the entire series and under the arrangement with Matthias Radin, President of Tyrad, they will be released one each week.

"Wonders of Nature," as produced by Prof. Brind, are described as entertaining educational subjects, snappily titled and presenting actual events in the little known lives of living creatures.

Hyman Believer in the Old Masterpieces

The masterpieces of the silent drama ire bound to live and have a lasting 'alue, like the paintings of the old nasters and the plays of the great lramatists, according to Arthur S. Iyman, vice-president and general nanager of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, who is enthusiastic about ome of the older classics of the screen ind declares that his own personal experience shows every reissue of a 'eally great picture is a source of rofit to owner and exhibitor.

One of the things Mr. Hyman is interested in at present, is the showing hroughout Michigan of "Quo Vadis," he massive picture first presented by George Kleine, and he declares the splendid reception it has met from exhibitors and public alike, bears out his contention that a picture of this class has a powerful drawing power, even when it is several years old.

"There is nothing in the plays of today," Mr. Hyman said, "that will even compare with this masterpiece, which is both entertaining and educational, and that the public appreciates and desires to see pictures of this calibre, regardless of their age, has been proved to me by my experience in Michigan, where I have been more successful with the reissues of the better pictures than I have with the newer pictures of today.

"Age seems to me to make no difference in the value of the picture, if it really is a great photoplay and for that reason, while it is not up to me to criticise D. W. Griffith or other great producers, it seems unfortunate that he should waste his time in producing some of the small productions, when he has and can bring out such super productions as 'Birth of a Nation,' 'Hearts of the World' or 'Intolerance.'"

More Sales on Burston Productions

From the office of Burston Films, Inc., comes the announcement of the following additional sales on the two serials they are at present releasing through the W. H. Productions Company:

"The Mystery of 13," starring Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas to Specialty Film Company, 107 S. St. Paul St., Dallas, Texas. "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot with Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Twentieth Century Film Co., 1337 Vine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Emmet J. Flynn Directed "Valley of Tomorrow"

When Emmett J. Flynn, directing at the "Flying A" Studios in Santa Barbara, was handed the scenario of "The Valley of Tomorrow," and advised that the glorious region of Lake Tahoe was to serve as the locale of the picture, this latest American Special immediately began to make the grades towards success. It is considered the biggest thing he has yet done.

Leonard Serial Is Given Title

Named "The Evil Eye"; Extensive Exploitation Planned

"THE EVIL EYE" is announced by Frank G. Hall, and Ascher Enterprises, Inc., as the title for the serial production in which Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, is to star. The title, suggested by the author of the serial, Roy L. McCardell, was selected from more than one hundred submitted and was chosen for its briefness, its adaptability to advertising and its melodramatic possibilities.

In producing this fifteen episode serial, Mr. Hall who is the prime mover behind the signing of Leonard for this serial believes he has two big possibilities behind it. One of these is, the star, Benny Leonard. The other is the author, Mr. McCardell, who will be remembered as the author of the successful serial production, "The Diamond from the Sky," which was produced more than six years ago, and, according to reports from foreign countries, is still showing in Africa, Asia, China and South America. Mr. McCardell was also the adaptor of one of the screen's most successful dramatic productions, "A Fool There Was," adapted from Porter Emerson Browne's play of the same title as suggested by Rudyard Kipling's famous poem.

In charge of the production of the Benny Leonard serial, Mr. Hall announces that Wally Van will supervise with J. Gordon Cooper, director. Mr. Van recently completed the supervision of Hallmark's first Ben Wilson serial, "The Trail of the Octopus." Mr. Van had his first experience in the motion picture business as light comedian for the Vitagraph Company, having co-starred with Lillian Walker in a series of Vitagraph Comedies. Following this Mr. Van directed a series of comedies for Vitagraph and also a series of short subjects in which Norma Talmadge was featured during her early career.

From prize ring to screen star, Benny Leonard, who is playing in "The Evil Eye," a new serial by Roy L. McCardell

Mr. Cooper, who will direct Benny Leonard, has for a number of years acted in the capacity of assistant director to Raoul Walsh, who supervised some of the biggest successes on the screen, including "The Honor System." More recently Mr. Cooper has become a director in his own right, and has just completed a series of two-reel detective stories in which Herbert Rawlinson is featured.

Mr. Hall announces that the actual production of the Benny Leonard serial will commence immediately after Benny Leonard's fight with Johnny Dundee, in New Haven, January 16. Hallmark's Thirty-eighth Street Studio will be used for the interiors, after which the company accompanied by Supervisor Van and Director Cooper and a publicity man will leave for the Coast, stopping off in every big city between New York, and there to take exteriors. The company expects to be en route most of the winter.

In following this method of production, Mr. Hall believes that he is popularizing the serial to the advantage of every exhibitor in the United States. Supervising Director Van is now completing arrangements for the casting of Leonard's support, and expects to be able to announce the names of the supporting members within the next week. He expects to have the first episode of the serial started by the third week of January.

"Pollyanna" Is Strongly Exploited

Folders Just Prepared Have Many Valuable Ideas, Is Report

"POLLYANNA," Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists Corporation release on January 18, lends itself to a wonderfully wide range of exploitation, advertising and publicity, the United Artists Corporation states, and the "Big Four" certainly has taken advantage of every angle in its exploitation folders which have just been issued to exhibitors booking the production, according to reports.

There are five complete folders contained in the large envelope, one on posters, lobby display, slides, window cards and special outdoor accessories; another on program, advertising and exploitation suggestion; another on newspaper advertising, a fourth on newspaper cuts and an eight page publicity folder of unusual ideas and suggestions.

In the publicity folder many of the stories are printed four times, it being explained that the preparation of these identical sets of publicity stories is to save time for the theatre staff, making it possible for the publicity man to clip as many of the stories as there are newspapers in the community, fill in the blank spaces with the name of the theatre and the date of the run and hand them to the newspaper editors. Besides, there are a large number of stories, all different, that can be used as exclusive articles. A number of stories are also printed to be used in connection with the photographs that are issued with the picture. The handling of publicity matter in this manner has proved highly successful with the earlier "Big Four" productions.

"The folder with program advertising and exploitation suggestions is replete with exceptional ideas," states the United Artists report. The first page tells of the picture's general possibilities together with a complete synopsis of the story; the second page is devoted to what Dr. Frank Crane, the well-known writer, thinks of "Pollyanna," together with a reproduction of his editorial, "Pollyanna," permission for the use of which Dr. Crane has granted Miss Pickford, and from which a very attractive and original three-sheet has been made by United Artists. Page three is devoted to how and why John Wanamaker, the country's leading merchant, boosted "Pollyanna," with suggestions showing how exhibitors in their respective communities can get their leading merchants to do the same thing.

The Page Company, of Boston, publishers of the book "Pollyanna," are co-operating with the Advertising and Publicity Departments of United Artists in a concentrated exploitation campaign on the book and the picture. It is said by officials of the United Artists that they have communicated with their thousands of dealers throughout the States and advised them to get in touch immediately with the theatre managers who have booked the picture.

One complete folder of eight pages is devoted to advertising cuts of the production, prepared lay-outs in one, two and three column sizes, of which cuts and mats are supplied. Another folder of four pages represents the exact sizes of all of the newspaper star cuts and the newspaper-scene cuts for which mats are also issued.

Canyon Sales on Franklyn Farnum Series

Canyon Pictures Corporation report the following sales on the Franklyn Farnum two-reel Western pictures: North Carolina and Virginia to Truart Feature Film Co. of Richmond, Va.; Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico and Southern Idaho to Arrow Photoplay Co. of Denver, Colo.; Western Pa. & West Virginia to Apex Pictures, Inc. of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Michigan to Strand Features, of Detroit, Michigan; Northern Illinois to Doll-Van Film Corp. of Chicago, Ill.; South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee to Savini Films, Inc. of Atlanta, Ga.

Negotiations for practically the rest of the United States are being carried on at the present time, and from present indications before very long the entire territory will be disposed of.

Work on a fifteen episode serial, also starring Farnum, is reported as well along.

New Selznick Offices Abroad

Twenty-two New Offices Will be Opened; Joseph Plunkett European Representative

FOLLOWING close upon the heels of the New Year announcements carrying the news of the expansion of various departments of Select Pictures and Selznick Enterprises, it was made known this week by Lewis J. Selznick that plans are under way to add several selling and distributing branches to the organization in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Italy and Switzerland.

The growth of Select, it is announced, makes it necessary to add these branches to the English and French corporations.

Twenty-two new branches will be established, according to the Selznick statement, nine of them being under the English corporation and the balance under the French. Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd., London, presided over by Maxwell Milder and Edith Koch, intends to open branches at London, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds and Newcastle, England; Glasgow, Scotland; Cardiff, Wales, and Dublin, Ireland. Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd., in Paris, looked after by Jean Rosen, plans to establish branches at The Hague, Holland, Brussels, Belgium; Lille, Paris, Strasbourg, Bordeaux, Lyons and Marseilles, France; Madrid and Barcelona, Spain; Milan, Venice and Rome, Italy, and Geneva, Switzerland.

Joseph L. Plunkett is general European representative, with offices at the Hotel Savoy, London, England.

The Canadian Corporation of Select, in Toronto, of which Phil Kauffman is managing director, has branches at Calgary, Alta.; Montreal, Que.; St. John, N. B.; Toronto, Vancouver, B. C., and Winnipeg, Man.

D. J. Selznick is managing director of the Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd., of Sydney, New South Wales, Australia; Phil Selznick, representative; Hyman Fine, representative, and John Corbett Jones, general manager.

The revised list of Select branch offices in the United States shows representation in over twenty-five cities throughout the country.

Noted Sennett Comedy Revived by Tower

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" is being revived by Tower Film Corporation. This production of Mack Sennett's, featuring a cast of the most notable comedians of the screen,—Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain and Chester Conklin—has the reputation of being one of the biggest comedies of the screen ever produced.

Attractive one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters are being made. A large and interest-compelling lobby display will also soon be ready, comprising 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28 photographs, also 30x40 and 40x60 beautiful oil paintings in color.

" Law Bringers " is First for Ralph Ince

Following the announcement in last week's motion picture trade press that Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures, would present through Select distribution a series of specials known as the Ralph Ince Production, in which the director will appear as star, it was announced this week that the first of these features will be "The Law Bringers." This is a screen adaptation of the well known novel

" What Would You Do? " by Fox Film Corp., which is said to present a most daring screen situation. Madleine Traverse is starred

Some beautiful flowers and a beautiful actress, May Allison, whose next picture for Metro will be " The Walk-Offs "

Dustin Farnum Film Tie-Up

United Cigar Stores and Marmon Auto Agencies Will Help in Exploitation

ARRANGEMENTS have been made, it is said, to give "The Corsican Brothers" heavy exploitation throughout the country. Various methods will be pursued in giving the United Picture Theatres of America feature an extensive advertising campaign, according to reports.

Probably the biggest nation-wide advertising that this Dustin Farnum picture will get is through United's cooperation with the United Cigar Stores Company. It is stated that very soon there will appear in the windows of all these cigar stores all over the country a poster, showing a photograph of Dustin Farnum smoking a Ricoro cigar and calling attention to the fact that his latest photodrama, "The Corsican Brothers," is to be shown in the theatres.

"This tie-up will be far reaching, for it will cover the entire United States. Every one of the thousands of United Cigar Stores in all parts of the country will show the particularly attractive quarter sheet posters, displaying them for many days at a time," says the United Theatres report.

Another exhibition tie-up that can be used effectively on "The Corsican Brothers" is the endorsement of the Marmon automobile by Dustin Farnum. Wherever there is a local agency for this car, the theatre owner should have no trouble in arranging for a window display, it is said. The home office of United is ready to send out the letter of endorsement with Farnum's signature, photographs and the necessary captions to go with them. Such a display was used in New York recently, the letter and photographs being given the central position in the Marmon's large Broadway window.

" 13th Commandment " Current F.P.-Lasky Release

America's most common vice is said to be spending more than we earn. Rupert Hughes wrote a striking novel about it, called "The Thirteenth Commandment," and it is to be released on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule January 11. Ethel Clayton is the star.

Miss Clayton has been surrounded with an excellent cast. Charles Meredith, remembered for his work in the past with Marguerite Clark and other stars, is the leading man. Anna Q. Nilsson is the idle wife. Monte Blue is the harassed husband and Irving Cummings has a congenial villian role. Winter Hall, Arthur Maude, Beverly Travers, Lewis Morrison and Jane Wolff are also in the cast.

Next Schlomer-Ross Production

Agnes Egan Cobb, who is handling the sales of Schome-Ross Productions, Inc., advises that their next production is going to be "some picture."

Doubleday to Prepare Series of Comedies

According to a report from the office of the Doubleday Production Company, F. L. Smith and Harry Owens, who are handling the sales of the two-reel westerns, featuring Vera Mack, state that the films are selling very favorably on the state-rights basis. Their communication further advises of a heavy demand among state-righters for funny and fast-action comedies, and in response to this call C. Mack, production-manager of the Doubleday Production Company, has arranged with Harry Moody to direct and write stories for fifty-two one-reel comedies, featuring popular comedy players.

Selznick Plans to Invade South Africa

Selznick pictures are about to invade South Africa, it is announced, a deal having been recently closed by Louis Brock, Export Manager, whereby the South African Film Trust will distribute Selznick pictures in its market. The deal involves the entire star series of the Selznick studios for the coming year and is considered one of the biggest transactions in the foreign market this season.

Congressmen Patronize Pictures Regularly

Even our Congressmen in Washing-on are motion-picture fans, according o Congressman D. J. O'Connell, of New York, who declares that members of the House form theatre parties each week to see the newspaper comments about world events, flashed on the picture screen in The Literary Digest "Topics of the Day." This reel is produced by Timely Films, Incorporated, and distributed by Pathe.

Shirley Mason's First for Fox Finished

Fox Film Corporation announces hat Pearl Doles Bell's story of circus ife, "Her Elephant Man," in which Miss Shirley Mason makes her debut as a star on the Fox program, has been completed at the Hollywood Studios. Scott Dunlap directed the production.

State Rights News will be ound on Page 881.

"Bringing Up Father" in Film

MacManus Cartoons Being Brought to Life Under the Direction of Christie

"BRINGING UP FATHER," that classic of the "funny section," is being transformed into real living comedies at the Christie Studio with Al Christie, pioneer among comedy director-producers in charge of Mr. Jiggs and family in their celluloid debut.

"It will be great news for the kiddies and the grownups too, as the McManus cartoon characters are by far the best known of all cartoon creations. "Jiggs," the browbeaten hero of the famous comics, will be played by Johnny Ray, of vaudeville fame, an Irish comedian, who would be the selection of nine out of ten persons delegated to choose a man to portray Jiggs.

Mrs. Jiggs, or "Maggie," will be played by Margaret FitzRoy, a well known stage and picture character player. Miss FitzRoy has made a long time study of the boss of the Jiggs home and she will bring to the screen a characterization that will be faithful to the cartoonist's ideal. Miss FitzRoy comes from an old theatre family, the Cullingtons, her stage name having been Margaret Cullington.

There was quite a contest in the selection of the heiress to the Jiggs fortunes, that pretty marcelled debutante, who has never been called upon to do much except just look beautiful. After the artist himself had cast a vote, Laura LaPlante, one of the prettiest and youngest of the Christie beauties, was chosen. Miss LaPlante is just sixteen and recently out of school.

Producer Al Christie promises a series of two reel comedies that will be true to the artist's conception of the noted characters and as funny as any "Jiggs" fan could hope for.

Goldwyn Buys Two Stage Hits

"Milestones," Klaw and Erlanger Presentation, and "Officer 666," Secured

"MILESTONES" by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. It will be given an elaborate production according to the reports from the Goldwyn offices. For a long while producers have recognized the great picture possibilities offered in "Milestones." Bids for the screen rights have been insistent.

"The play created an artistic and popular sensation when it was presented by Klaw & Erlanger at the Liberty theatre, New York, September 17, 1912," says the Goldwyn report. At the conclusion of the New York engagement, the play visited the leading cities throughout the country. The broad publicity "Milestones" has received over a long period both in this country and in England assures the interest of the public in the screen production, it is stated.

Among those who appeared in the cast of the original stage production were: Leslie Faber, Auriol Lee, Eugenie Vernie and Warbúrton Gamble. The players for the Goldwyn picture have not yet been selected, but it is announced that in every way the play will be handled as a genuine special.

"Officer 666," reputed to be one of the greatest farce successes of the modern stage, has also been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will be given an elaborate production, it is said.

Goldwyn has not announced who will play the characters originally interpreted on the stage by Wallace Eddinger and George Nash.

Making a supreme comedy for Robertson-Cole release with Jimmie Liddy and Molly Malone

Lionel Barrymore's greatest screen role is said to be that in "The Copperhead," the historical feature produced by Paramount-Artcraft and about to be released

United Theatres Purchase "Women Men Forget"

President J. A. Berst of United Picture Theatres of America, announces that the organization has purchased outright the feature photodrama, "Women Men Forget," starring Mollie King, and which was produced by the American Cinema Corporation.

The feature is in six reels, directed by John M. Stahl from the original scenario by Elaine Sterne. It presents Miss King in a role to which she is particularly well suited—one that shows her as a New York society girl. This fact, of course, permits Miss King to wear an elaborate wardrobe.

Supporting Mollie King in "Women Men Forget" are Frank Mills, Lucy Fox and Edward Langford.

As yet it has not been decided when "Women Men Forget" will be released, but an announcement setting a definite date and outlining exploitation details will be forthcoming within a short time.

Willemsen's Camera-Man Back from Guatemala

Dr. J. D. Stickler, one of Willemsen's camera men, has just returned to the States from Guatemala with additional negatives for the above company's "Tales of the Tropics" series. Dr. Stickler has spent the last month, it is said, collecting Indian curios and tapestries among the Guatemalan natives.

Cissy Fitzgerald Busy on Her New Comedies

A statement from the offices of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., reports that Cissy Fitzgerald and her company are making comedies in California, and that Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston are producing two-reel comic pictures in Florida.

Real Forest Fire Scenes in "The Sagebrusher"

One of the most terrible and destructive forest fires of recent times, that which swept the Sierra Madre and San Bernardino Mountain Ranges north and east of Los Angeles, raging unchecked for nearly two weeks last September, is seen in Benjamin B. Hampton's second Great Authors production, "The Sagebrusher," the photoplay of Emerson Hough's novel.

Oriental splendor adds to the dramatic values of "The Beggar Prince," Sessue Hayakawa's latest contribution to Robertson-Cole's program

Hayakawa's First For New Year

AFTER a noteworthy year, Sessue Hayakawa makes his 1920 debut in the Robertson-Cole forthcoming release, "The Beggar Prince." William Worthington, who directed "The Beggar Prince," is unstinted in his praise for the production and the work of the Oriental star, and declares that in it he will mount to even greater success than he achieved in "The Bottle Imp," the screen production which first sent Hayakawa's stock skyward.

Hayakawa, who has scored in light and heavy stellar roles, is now to be seen as a lover of the times. His director has given him a part in which he can display his original natural make-up and portrayal of difficult roles.

Film critics throughout the United States and in foreign lands are in accord with their criticisms of the calibre of Hayakawa's starring vehicles and the manner in which he has earned additional fame and box office attractions. A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, declares that the leading exhibitors throughout the country are eager for first runs on the 1920 pictures.

"The prediction made by us some time ago, that we were going to allow Hayakawa all the time demanded to make real pictures, has proven more than satisfactory," declared Mr. Kirkpatrick. "There is no doubt that Hayakawa has really outdone himself in his productions which swept the country like wild fire in the year just closed. Our books show that almost every first run exhibitor in the country demands this star's screen appearance in all of his Robertson-Cole productions.

Robertson-Cole Officials High in Praise of "Beggar Prince"

"It is a good sign when theatre managers want to secure all of the 1920 Hayakawa releases and are willing to pay real money for them. But they shall not be sorry, for we have planned to give Hayakawa all the big stories he can successfully handle during the next twelve months. He is going better than ever, and I honestly believe that his forthcoming production can be a sample of what his followers may expect for his next series."

In order to obtain quaint effect for "The Beggar Prince," William Worthington, with the aid of Hayakawa planned and had erected a fisher village, and a palace overlooking it. These were situated along the Pacific Coast, at one of its most picturesque parts. The chief interior set was made for some elaborate throne room inside the palace. The fisher huts, built of strong frameworks and thatched with straw, and the palace, built along the picturesque lines of those in fairy tales, both represent a goodly investment in time and money.

Hollywood Hums with Action

Preparation in the Erection of Sets Keeps Everyone Busy and on His Toes

ADVICES from the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation state this to be one of the busiest seasons that has ever been experienced at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in Hollywood, Cal., as a result of the fact that during the next few weeks five or six new productions will be started, and all require a great numer bof special sets.

"The sounds of hammer and saw, the swish of the paint brushes, the clank of iron upon iron, make the studio seem like some enormous factory—which, indeed, it is," says the report.

Each of the big studio stages is filled with framework, sets just begun, others in different stages of construction, and still others completed and decorated. An army of carpenters, painters, paperhangers, etc., throng these sets which will be later employed for interiors and some exteriors for the forthcoming productions, including "The Round-Up," "Thou Art the Man," "The Dancin' Fool," "Held by the Enemy," "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," "The Prince Chap," etc.

Charles F. Eyton, general manager; Fred Kley, studio manager, and the other executives, are busy every moment of the day, for the present activities, are, it is understood, but a forerunner of the actual activity at the big plant in the months to come.

Maurice Tourneur Company Goes to Universal City

On the expiration of their lease at the Goldwyn Studio, Culver City, California, the Maurice Tourneur Productions, Inc., will move their offices and production companies to an immense stage and private offices at Universal City, California.

This step was found necessary when Maurice Tourneur decided to produce two and three pictures at the same time, which he intends doing the first of the year. Details are not forthcoming as yet who his co-directors will be or whom he will engage to play the leads in his different pictures.

Webb Named Manager of Mayer's New Studio

Millard L. F. Webb has been named manager of the new studio of Louis B. Mayer, at 3,800 Mission Road, Los Angeles. Five years ago he started in as property man and assistant director with the Franklin brothers, in the making of "kid pictures." After two and a half years he went with Fox where he remained nearly a year.

Leaving the Fox studio, Webb went to the Douglas Fairbanks studio as co-director with Joseph Henabery in the production of "The Man From Painted Post." On the opening of the Mayer studios Webb became assistant director with Joseph Henabery in the directing of Mayer's "First National star, Mildred Harris Chaplin.

"Other Men's Shoes" to Be Released Feb. 1

Pathe reports that with the approach of the release date of "Other Men's Shoes," the first of the series of big photoplays produced by Edgar Lewis for release by Pathe, comes numerous letters from many exhibitors to the different Pathe exchanges, congratulating Pathe on securing the Lewis productions. Release date has been set for February 1. Crauford Kent and Irene Boyle play the leading roles. Harold Forshay appears as the heavy, with John Wade as his companion in villainy.

Walsh Planning Realart Production

R. A. Walsh, now directing for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has completed his last picture for William Fox and has left New York City for upstate where he will devote the next fortnight to working out new production ideas with which he expects to create a new standard of super-features for Realart Pictures Corporation.

Adaptation of London Novel Begun

Albert S. Le Vino, of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario department, at the Metro studios in Hollywood, has started work on the screen adaptation of "Burning Daylight," by Jack London, which will be Mitchell Lewis's first Metro production for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc.

Cameraman Faces Danger Aboard Burning Ship

Charles Cottar, who is a cameraman engaged by the C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., to secure scenics of British East Africa, announces his safe arrival at Nairobi after a thrilling journey up the coast of East Africa on board of a burning vessel. According to the letter received at the offices of the C. L. Chester Productions, the cameraman sailed from Durban with all his paraphernalia for an extended tour into the jungle. The day after leaving port the ship took fire and for five days at sea the crew fought the flames with little success.

The steamer put in at Zanzibar, but made a hurried departure when it was discovered there were no facilities available for extinguishing the fire. As the crippled boat pulled into the harbor of Mombasa, it blew up. Mr. Cottar lost four automobiles, his tents and other supplies, but managed to save his camera and film.

Stereospeed Camera Has New Shop in New York

The Motion Picture Producing Company of America announces "the completion of a new machine shop at 121 West 52nd Street, New York, in which will be manufactured Stereospeed Cameras. The new shop which will house the mechanical department of Stereospeed Productions, Inc., is being opened in anticipation of the demand for the output of these cameras. It is planned to have at least five of these machines in operation within six months."

"The Sporting Duchess" Race Scenes Filmed

Alice Joyce and some twenty members of her supporting company, who have been in New Orleans for a few weeks taking the racing scenes for Miss Joyce's next Vitagraph production, "The Sporting Duchess," will return during the next few days. All the other scenes for the screen version of this Drury Lane melodrama have been made; and with the completion of the race, club-house and paddock scenes in New Orleans, the picture will be finished. George Terwilliger directed.

Author Praises Goldwyn Methods

Gouverneur Morris Says Head of Concern is Meeting Crisis

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS whose writings are being produced by Goldwyn, is well pleased at the manner in which that corporation is putting the works into film form. Commenting on the able manner in which productions are put on, Mr. Morris writes:

"Samuel Goldwyn is the most hopeful force in the moving picture world today. And that is because he is the first man (with power to get his will in the matter) to see that actors, scenes, and directors bear the same relation to telling stories, that pens, ink, editors and printing presses do.

"The story is the thing.

"The judgment of moving picture audiences is always one jump ahead of the season's productions. And after each jump the audience thinks less of stars, flim-flams, false logic, impossibilities, camera craft, etc., and insists more urgently upon dramatic and human stories clearly and movingly told.

"Samuel Goldwyn was the first to perceive this trend, and to perceive that it was no paltry whim on the part of the public but a logical, irrefutable step, in the development of the most vital of all the arts.

"The Public wants good stories well told, and, unless exceptions prove rules, they are not getting them. This is a crisis in the industry that has to be met. Some have tried to meet it by discharging this director and engaging that, others have doubled their advertising, some have asked the stage carpenter to perform prodigies and the camera miracles. And all have begun to buy up (as cheaply as possible) the rights to plots that have proved their worth in the old fashioned medium of story telling; that is to say, words. But one man has had the vision to buy not only plots, but men who have invented plots and unfolded them convincingly.

Florence Deshon, Goldwyn artist, who is playing many important roles with leading stars

"'Why,' asks Samuel Goldwyn, 'shouldn't men who have told good stories with words, and told them well, be better able to tell stories with pictures, than men who have had no practice in telling stories at all?'

"Rex Beach has proved that Samuel Goldwyn is right. If you want to see a good story, well told, have a look at 'The Girl from Outside.'

"Once Mary Rinehart and Rupert Hughes have learned to feel at ease with the new medium, they will tell you stories in pictures as exquisitely and movingly as they have in words.

"Samuel Goldwyn gives his authors generous terms, so far as money goes, which is good, but so far as trusting them and backing their judgment go, he gives them the limit. And that is better.

"It is obvious that in irreconcilable differences of opinion as to how a given story should be told, the trained-story teller's opinion is the best bet. 'But,' objects the story teller 'certain scenes cannot be faked. They will have to be shot in Tasmania.'

"This is no objection to Mr. Goldwyn. Full of fire and enthusiasm he says 'What of it?' 'Take a camera, some of your principals, go to Tasmania and shoot the scenes. Let me know the day you can leave, and all the arrangements will be made . . . I want you to go!'"

Big Circuits Will Take Realarts

B. S. Moss and Keith and Proctor Are Latest Acquisitions

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION reports that twenty-two of the biggest picture houses in the East will give Realart features an adequate introduction to their audiences, following the contract signed last week with the Keith & Proctor and B. S. Moss Circuits. Deals were closed with E. M. Hart, booking manager for the Keith and Proctor interests and with B. S. Moss, representing his chain, by Lester W. Adler, manager of Realart's New York exchange. This announcement by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland follows closely the tie-up he concluded a week ago with the Saenger chain in the South.

"This matter of circuit contracts is one on which Realart has occasion to congratulate itself," is the opinion of Mr. Ragland. "In the New York territory we have the Marcus Loew chain of twenty-six houses, the Keith and Proctor chain and the B. S. Moss circuit. This is a total of about fifty theatres.

"In Chicago we have signed Ascher Brothers, Lubliner and Tinz and Balabon and Katz with a total of some forty houses. In California we have Turner and Bahnken and Kahn and Greenfield. And in the South we are represented in all three big circuits—E. H. Hulsey, Texas; Saenger Amusement Company, Louisiana and Mississippi, and the S. A. Lynch houses. The signing of any of these representative concerns ordinarily would be considered an achievement, but Realart has them all, and they have been coming so fast we have not really had a chance to make a fuss about it.

"Do not imagine, however, that I have given a complete list. For instance, we have many of the Stanley houses in the Philadelphia territory; the Frank Thielen theatres in Illinois; Jake Well's Virginia chain; Jensen and Von Herberg in the Pacific Northwest; Baker and Grubel in Kansas and Missouri; J. C. Hostettler in Iowa, and probably other circuits which I do not recall at this moment.

"The contract signed by Mr. Hart for the U. B. O. chain of houses is the outcome of the historic policy of the Keith and Proctor management to take on a product that has proved its value both as entertaining feature and as box-office attractions," declared Mr Ragland. "'Soldiers of Fortune' has been on Broadway twice, and each time it was a clean-up. 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' is proving to be the type of mystery drama that is taking the popular imagination by storm today. The first two Realart super-features combine the two vitally necessary picture-play attributes—fan-popularity and money patronage."

The motion picture houses that will show the Realart features comprise several of the finest theatres in New York City proper, and in surrounding cities, according to reports. "Soldiers of Fortune" will begin the Realart run on the Keith and Proctor circuit at the following theatres: Keith's 81st Street, Keith's Harlem Opera House, Proctor's 58th Street and Proctor's 23rd Street. The picture will be seen in Brooklyn at the Halsey Theatre; Keith's Greenpoint; Keith's Prospect; and outside of the city at Proctor's Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J.; Proctor's Plainfield, N. J.; Keith's Jersey City; Proctor's, Portchester, N. Y.; Proctor's, Yonkers; Proctor's, Mt. Vernon; Proctor's, Albany; Proctor's, Troy, and Proctor's, Schenectady.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" will follow over the same circuit, it is said. The conclusion of arrangements with B. S. Moss followed the showing of "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Broadway Theatre, where it ran for a week. It had had a previous showing on Broadway, at the Capitol Theatre.

Capitol Campaigns Strongly on Metro Offering

One of the biggest exploitation campaigns recently attempted in New York City, accompanied the presentation at the Capitol Theatre this week of Alice Lake to Broadway theatre-goers in the Metro-Classic production of "Should a Woman Tell?" in which she appears as the featured player. More than 150 billboards displaying twenty-four sheets were secured for the advertising smash, the point of concentration being about Times Square. This was in addition to the usual space taken by the Capitol.

Short-Reelers Get Attention

Universal Producing Short-Reel Subjects in Response to Heavy Demand

UNIVERSAL reports that in response to the heavy demand for short-reel subjects, which that organization declares to be prevalent, no less than a dozen tabloid productions have been turned out or started at Universal City within the last three weeks.

Edward Kull has just finished two short western features — "Blind Chance" and "Kaintuck's Ward." Robert Burns, the cowboy star, is featured in both productions, and assisting him are Peggy O'Dare, formerly leading lady with Eddie Polo; Natalie Warfield, Charles Dorian and Dick LeReno. "Blind Chance" is by Phillip Hubbard and William Pigott, and "Kaintuck's Ward" is from the pen of J. G. Hawkes, author of many of Bill Hart's scenarios.

Phil Rosen has just filmed for Universal a two-reel rural melodrama called "Roarin' Dan," from the pen of Arthur H. Gooden. "Hoot" Gibson, the cowboy star, is featured in this story with Ethel Shannon, Mrs. Kruge and Leo Pattee in his support.

Reeves Eason has finished a two-reeler entitled "Back From the Dead." It is described as a feature in miniature, with the plot and situations of an ordinary five-reeler condensed into 2,000 feet. Mildred Moore, Pat O'Malley, George Field, Tote DuCrow, Charles Newton and Breezy Reeves appear in this picture.

Director Eason, immediately on the completion of "Back From the Dead," started production of "Who Wins," a melodrama in two parts by DeRochfort, with a cast including "Hoot" Gibson, Mildred Moore and Beatrice Dominguezs.

Virginia Faire has started in a two-reel playlet at Universal City, called "Runnin' Straight." "Hoot" Gibson is featured in this production, with Miss Faire in the leading feminine role. Others in the cast are Ted Brook, Rhea Haines, Louis M. Wells and Captain Anderson.

Edward Sowders is now directing a two-reel story of the plains, "A Sagebrush Gentleman," by Karl Coolidge. Charlotte Merriam has the principal role.

John West, a new addition to Universal's directional staff, is directing a new comedy, "Miss Fortune," with Chris Rub in the leading role, supported by Bennie Hill, Beatrice Burnham, Merta Sterling and Captain Anderson.

Realart Salesman Commended for Bravery

According to reports from the Realart offices, R. E. Goldsmith, a film-salesman attached to the Washington, D. C., branch of Realart Picture Corporation, has been officially cited by the United States Railroad Administration for heroic work in a wreck on the Norfolk and Western Railroad at Walton, Va., Dec. 18th, in which five persons were killed and eleven injured.

"A Modern Salome" Now Being Edited

"A Modern Salome," the first of the Hope Hampton productions in which this young star will make her screen debut, is now being edited and cut by Leonce Perret and his staff. Miss Hope's leading man is Wyndham Standing. The rest of the cast includes Agnes Ayres, Arthur Donaldson, Sydney L. Mason, Percy Standing and Meeda Stewart.

Mayer-Stars in New Features

Anita Stewart in C. Lockhart's Story—Mildred Chaplin Vehicle Ready Soon

THE reports from the office of Louis Mayer lay special stress on "The Fighting Shepherdess," starring Anita Stewart, and "Polly of the Storm Country," featuring Mildred Harris Chaplin. In Caroline Lockhart's "The Fighting Shepherdess," Miss Stewart is stated to assume an unusual role. She is seen as Kate Prentice, a young girl who is delivered from her slovenly dissipated mother and her evil roadhouse environment by Mormon Joe, a sheepman. Joe takes a fatherly interest in Kate and regards her as a partner in his ranch, but the narrow-minded town of Prouty sees fit to put another construction on their companionship.

Anita Stewart, it is stated, makes Kate a wholesome girl of affectionate nature and delightful feminine whims. This is the Kate that Prouty sees on her first trip to town, but the prejudiced little community leaves no chance for making the girl unhappy go by unnoticed.

The continued persecution destroys Kate's faith in humanity, and she devotes herself to making money. From a sweet girl of delicate tastes she becomes a cold, unemotional business figure, intent on gaining wealth and power. The achievement of her desire brings the realization that money alone does not create happiness. A young Easterner, who on a previous trip to Prouty had fallen in love with Kate, returns and the story ends in the development of their romance.

Mildred Harris Chaplin, who is starring in "Polly of the Storm Country," a Grace Miller White story written especially for her, will complete the picture during the coming week. Cutting of the picture will be finished within a day or so after the completion of the filming, as Director Arthur Rosson has cut the film during the progress of production.

Many of the scenes were taken at a picturesque fishing and lumber village near San Pedro, Calif. Had Grace Miller Write written this gripping story in the village itself, she could not have found more ideal atmosphere for this class of story, it is stated.

Both of the above pictures are "First National Attractions."

Announces Six All-Star Casts

Republic Reports High-Class Features on Its List of Releases for New Year

A REPORT from the offices of the Republic Pictures makes the following announcement: "Six high-class productions, not featuring any one star but having all-star casts, are scheduled among the unusual features of the releases for the Republic distributing exchanges during the year 1920." The announcement of the production of this group of six pictures was made this week from the headquarters of the Republic Pictures.

One of the six pictures which are being made by the Weber Productions Co., for Republic release, has already been completed. It is the Anna Crawford Flexner story, "The Blue Pearl," and has in its cast Edith Hallor, Faire Binney, Florence Billings, Lundsen Hare and H. Cooper Clisso.

The Republic announcement states that each of these productions will be produced with the utmost care. "It is the intention of the Republic officials," so the announcement states, "to make these productions of such a quality as to create a demand for them from the public. It is one of the many progressive plans of the organization, and it is thought the excellence of these productions will do much to assure exhibitors in the country of the high standard they may expect from coming releases.

Simplex Notes

A timely machine installation was that which Sam Kaplan of the Simplex Staff was responsible for on the last day of December and through his efforts a complete projection room was equipped at the Kings County Hospital, Brooklyn.

Both Dr. Jones and Mr. Adams, superintendent and supervisor respectively, had planned to use the special appropriation for a complete motion picture equipment and decided upon a Simplex Projector to supply the most necessary portion of same.

It was planned to run the first performance on New Year's Eve in order to cheer the hearts of the numerous inmates of the Almshouse.

It is needless to say that the thoughts of cheering the old and infirm acted as an added stimulus to those connected with the installation and that the show was a huge success was later borne out in the statement of Mr. Adams who made a personal tour of the Simplex factory during the latter part of the week.

The institution in question has its own lighting plant which supplies direct current for the regulation motor driven Simplex that was installed in the chapel of the building group where it is to be used for frequent entertainments planned by Dr. Jones.

Lewis M. Swaab, that energetic and progressive Simplex distributor in the "City of Brotherly Love" can well look back upon the pages of 1919 and feel that he has used all of his working hours to good advantage.

Not only has the greater portion of the Swaab territory become "Simplexized" including fifteen of the Stanley group of theatres where thirty Simplexes were installed, but the monthly Messenger, Swaab's well-known house organ, has been released promptly on every specified date without any delay during the year.

The January Messenger is truly an attractive little sheet carrying the announcement on its first page of the fact that the Simplex banner has been firmly planted in the city of Trenton, which city will soon be added to the long list of communities that Swaab has Simplexized.

Throughout the Messenger are sandwiched many of the humorous paragraphs that tend to make the Messenger so entertaining and different from the many industrial house-organs. On various pages are contained interesting notices of the many articles carried in stock by the "House of Swaab" that are needed in the up-to-date projection room.

Rawlinson Signs Agreement with Blackton

Herbert Rawlinson has been engaged to be the star of a forthcoming production to be made under the personal supervision of J. Stuart Blackton. The picture will be an adaptation of "Passers By," the Frohman stage success of a few seasons back, in which Richard Bennett was featured in the role of Peter Waverton. Actual filming of the story will commence on January 7th, at the Blackton Studios in Brooklyn, it is stated.

Realart's Release in January

Alice Brady in "The Fear Market" Said by President Kohn to Excel Previous Work

ALICE BRADY'S production, "The Fear Market," is announced as the first January release of Realart Pictures Corporation. Kenneth Webb was the director.

The picture was adapted by Clara Beranger from the play of the same name by Princess Troubetzkoy, which had a successful run on Broadway four years ago. With a plot that was written around an actual society-sheet blackmail scandal of the time, the first offering of Miss Brady under Realart auspices gives the actress a varied opportunity for emotional and dramatic acting, and provided her with constant opportunity to display costly gowns, furs, and hats.

"In sending forth 'The Fear Market,'" declared President Morris Kohn of Realart, "we are combining every available chance to benefit the exhibitor who has been waiting for the first work of Miss Brady.

"In the first place we are adhering strictly to our basic policy to furnish a story that will not alone entertain, but will cash in on its former popularity as a Broadway success.

"A second reason for offering this play to exhibitors," said Mr. Kohn, "is the fact that it abounds in dramatic situations and gives Miss Brady a chance to put on the screen the unusual personality which is making her one of the foremost actresses on the American stage. Miss Brady is not merely a motion picture star. She is an actress.

"And to conclude the combination of definitely selected qualities which Realart put into this film, we have laid great stress on a lavish display of fine clothes by this actress, knowing as we do that Miss Brady has a reputation for wearing good clothes well. The display of fashionable wearing apparel by a woman who can really act up to them is a genuine drawing card among the millions of women and young girls who make up the largest part of picture patronage."

"The Fear Market" is the most elaborate film production, in which, according to her own opinion, Miss Brady has ever appeared.

Norma Talmadge Offering

New Year Ushers in Special Production "She Loves and Lies"; Highly Praised

"HAPPY NEW YEAR" is declared to have meant a great deal more than the usual holiday greeting to exhibitors who show Select Pictures on their screens.

The season's salutations were accompanied by an announcement from Sam E. Morris, general manager of Select Pictures, that the New Year, generally referred to at present as Kid 1920, would be ushered in with the release of the second extra special Norma Talmadge production, "She Loves and Lies."

In "She Loves and Lies" Miss Talmadge is presented by Joseph M. Schenck, who has contributed previous motion pictures through Select Pictures with this actress as the star. It was largely through these Select films that Miss Talmadge won the fame and popularity which are now hers, and with the presentation of her second extra special it is believed audiences throughout the country will extend the exhibitors and Lewis J. Selznick a unanimous vote of thanks for beginning 1920 in a manner that promises to eclipse records for better motion pictures.

The announcement from the office of General Manager Sam E. Morris this week, regarding the release of "She Loves and Lies," fairly bubbled with optimism created largely through the indication that this production is to take its place as one of the first "Longer Run" motion pictures of the new year. It is even hoped and believed that this feature will set a mark in runs and bookings for other productions to shoot at. Indications point to more prints being used on "She Loves and Lies" than on "The Isle of Conquest," the first extra special Norma Talmadge production in which the star was presented by Mr. Scherch through the Select Pictures.

Among the players, besides Miss Talmadge, are Conway Tearle, Octavia Broske, Phillips Tead and Ida Darling. The direction is by Chester Withey. All these names are well known to both exhibitors and audiences, and are valuable in billing the production.

Empey's Next Said to Promise Well

"Oil," Guy Empey's next picture will come as a great surprise both to the exhibitors and photoplay patrons, according to those who have been privileged to see results of the first three weeks' filming at Paragon studio in Fort Lee. The next Empey photoplay is to be presented as a big special production in not less than six reels and its nature will be totally different from either of Mr. Empey's previous screen offerings, "Over the Top," and "The Undercurrent." With the addition of "Oil" to his repertoire, Mr. Empey will be shown to be an actor with a very wide scope of versatility, since this picture is a straight American drama dealing with business life, but so punctuated with humorous action that at times it partakes of high-class comedy. Empey's role is that of a taxicab driver who blunders on to $15,000 and acts as if he were the millionaire incarnate.

From the Paragon comes word that very satisfactory progress is being made in the filming of the picture. Mr. Empey is particularly opposed to undue hurrying in the making of this production.

First Drew Screen Adaptation at Pathe's

"The Charming Mrs. Chase," first of adaptations to be based upon Julian Street's "After Thirty," has been cut a series of Mrs. Sidney Drew's screen and assembled, and is now at the Pathe Exchange, according to a recent report from Mrs. Drew's studio. Immediately following the finishing of the first picture of her new series, Mrs. Drew began work upon the second, which will be known as "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton."

W. E. Atkinson Arrives on West Coast

William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, has arrived at the Metro studios in Hollywood on a business trip.

Mr. Atkinson was met at the Santa Fe station in Los Angeles by Maxwell Karger, Metro Director General, under whose guidance the general manager will make a tour of inspection of the company's studios in Hollywood, where six productions are now under way. These comprise the third round of the "fewer and better" productions made by Screen Classics, Inc., for release through the Metro distributing organization.

While he is on the west coast Mr. Atkinson will spend considerable time at the Los Angeles exchange, and also take a run up to San Francisco, where another Metro branch office is located.

"The Gray Brother" Set for Release Soon

"The Gray Brother," which is the title of Edward A. MacManus's latest production, will probably be released this week. It is a picture made around a romance of prison life that Thomas Mott Osborne wrote specially for the screen, it is said. Sidney Olcott, who directed the production, gathered around him, it is said, "a cast of players who fitted in their respective scenes as if they had been born to crime." According to reports, thirty-five hundred people were filmed in this production of "The Gray Brother," many of the scenes being taken within prison walls with the prisoners themselves assisting in the visualization of conditions.

New Blackton-Pathe Release Booked Fast

Not since the days when he produced "Womanhood" and "The Battle Cry of Peace," has Commodore J. Stuart Blackton produced such a box office winner as "My Husband's Other Wife," in the announcement made by Pathe. The third of the Blackton series for release by Pathe, the first of the new year, is said to be booking rapidly in every territory; and in New York City virtually every prominent theatre on Broadway from 59th Street to 180th Street is reported to have booked the feature. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are co-starred in the offering, with Warren Chandler playing an important part in the support.

Leah Baird's Company in Florida

Leah Baird, Arthur F. Beck, her producer, and her company of fourteen prominent players have arrived at Tampa, Fla., to enact some of the important outdoor scenes in her forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," by Louis Joseph Vance, under the direction of Perry Vekroff. On her way South from New York the star detrained at Washington on Friday to make a personal appearance at Tom Moore's Strand Theatre in conjunction with his presentation of "The Capitol," Miss Baird's current success.

First of Drew Series Filmed

Julian Street, Author of the "After Thirty" Comics, Is Well-Known Writer

MRS. SIDNEY DREW has just completed "The Charming Mrs. Chase," first of her series of "After Thirty" comedies, adapted from the stories by Julian Street, in which John Cumberland is starred. Production of the initial two-reel Drew comedy was started more than a month ago.

In its report on "The Charming Mrs. Chase," the Pathe Exchange devotes considerable space to the past accomplishments of Mr. Street, the author of the story. "Julian Street," says the Pathe report, "author of stories with which Mrs. Drew is working, is one of America's most famous short-story writers. Two of his 'After Thirty' series appeared in McClure's magazine, and the three ensuing subjects ran in the Saturday Evening Post.

"In addition to his 'After Thirty' series, Mr. Street is known to literary patrons through his contributions to American, McClure's, Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan, Colliers and other big magazines. He also collaborated with Booth Tarkington in the writing of the celebrated stage play, 'The Country Cousin.'

"Street's contribution to Colliers of a series of articles entitled, 'Abroad at Home,' won him national repute. He visited practically every big city in the United States, and in his series, 'reached the heart' of these cities.

"The author believes in taking his characters and developing them, rather than the plot, assuming that it is the unfolding of their lives that count most. He does, however, also inject sufficient plot into his article to warrant a maintenance of interest and suspense."

Giegerich Leaves Vitagraph; Will Write

Charles J. Giegerich announces that he will sever his connection with Vitagraph's West Coast studio on January 4 and will devote himself to the writing of original stories for production. Mr. Giegerich has been associated in the past with Guy Empey, the Universal Film, and the four pioneer companies, Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, and Essanay, in the capacity of publicist.

Editorial Calls Chaplin Real National Asset

What Charles Chaplin declares to b the highest honor ever paid him is a editorial in a recent issue of the Chicago Tribune, published during th first run presentations in Chicago o "A Day's Pleasure," the fourth of hi productions for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The editorial follows, in part: "M Charles Chaplin is a matter of seriou concern in this democracy. He is th corn and circuses of the republic. H is distributed and presented to main tain that general good humor upo which the safety of empire, autocrati or democratic, rests.

"Mr. Chaplin has been the salva tion of us masses. He has been th pink in life. He has made the million laugh and laughing millions are sa millions. Bookings Continue Heavy on "Blind Husbands"

"Blind Husbands," the Universal-Jewel production featuring Francelia Billington, written and directed by Eric Von Stroheim, continues to be booked heavily in all quarters. The Fox Theatres, New York City, booked "Blind Husbands" for forty-two days; the Western Greater Theatre Company took it for twenty-eight days; the Meyer & Schneider Circuit for twenty-two days; Fitzgerald & McElroy's Michigan Circuit seventeen days; the Consolidated Amusement Company, fifteen days.

The Imperial theatre, San Francisco, ran the film for two weeks; at Ziegfeld's, Chicago, it had fourteen days; at the Dundas theatre, Hamilton, Canada, it ran twelve days. A host of other theatres ran it for two weeks, t is stated. Among the houses booking "Blind Husbands" for seven days, were: The Strand, Buffalo; Fays, Rochester; Casino, Chicago; Majestic, Columbus; Strand, Cincinnati; Dayton, Dayton; Liberty, Youngstown; The Strand, Akron; The American, Denver; The Superba, San Diego; The Lyceum, Winnipeg; The Rialto, Washington; The Capitol, New York; and The Rex, Racine.

Selznick Begins Zena Keefe Pictures

It was announced this week from he offices of Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures, that production work has begun on "The Woman God Sent," written by Sophie Irene Loeb. The feature is to present Zena Keefe in the principal role, with Joe King opposite. The screen adaptaion was made by Larry Trimble, who s directing the picture, with William Shilling assisting.

Coincidental with the beginning of he new Zena Keefe picture, Myron Selznick announced that Owen Moore's atest, "Sooner or Later," has been ompleted and is on its screenward journey via the cutting room. Wesey Ruggles directed this feature.

Many Stars Working at Garson Studio

The Garson Studio at Edendale, Los Angeles, now houses quite a number of prominent film folks. Clara Kimball Young, Conway Tearle, Gareth Hughes, Pauline Starke, Mary Alden, Kathryn Adams, Edward M. Kimball, Sam Sothern, Ralph Lewis, Miss Davenport, Winter Hall, Mildred Reardon, Eva Novak, and Stanton Williams are now busily engaged here.

Pathe Assumes Protector's Role

Styles Itself as Friend of the Small-Town Exhibitor

IN a statement just issued, Pathe Exchange, Inc., represents itself as the steadfast friend of the small-town exhibitor, floundering helplessly between the opposing forces that struggle to gain control of the motion-picture market. The statement is repeated below in full:

"In the maze of combinations formed by producing and distributing organizations to control the motion picture market, both from the selling and exhibiting ends, the small town theatre owner has been compelled to seek cover at almost every turn. To defend himself, he has been obliged to resort to vigorous protective methods, for with him it is a fight to the death.

"With the aim of insuring themselves a steady, continued output of high class features, distributed by an organization each one knows is with the exhibitor to the end, they are booking Pathe features solidly. They are taking their pick of the Pathe features for all the business of the great distributing concern is transacted on the open-booking plan.

"For months it has been noted that the small town exhibitor has been booking more pictures at a time than ever before. Instead of taking two or three features from a salesman, he is today booking from ten to fifteen attractions at each visit of a Pathe representative.

"In support of its assertion that it is receiving a large portion of the small-town exhibitor's business, Pathe, in a statement issued this week, cites numerous instances where an exhibitor has booked sufficient Pathe features to last for several months in advance. In other instances, exhibitors book as many days Pathe service per week as the output accumulated and present will permit, some actually running several weeks solidly Pathe.

"Exhibitors, who during the past week signed up virtually solidly for Pathe features, include: Crystal, Greenville, Tex., which has booked all the big Pathe specials for the next six weeks; the Grand, San Diego; Empress, Gordon, Neb.; Star, Bayard, Neb.; Washington, Philadelphia; Auditorium, Highlands, N. J.; Palace, Netcong, N. J.; Strand, Red Bank, N. J.; Star, Janesburg, N. J.; Third Avenue, Watervleit, N. Y.; Pastime, Iowa City; Variety, New Orleans; War Theatre, War, West Va.; Princess, Boomer, W. Va.; Berwind, Berwind, W. Va.; Victory, Jackson, O.; McPherson, Perrington, Mich.; Strand, Holland, Mich.; Neechwood, Detroit; Lyric, Mt. Pleasant, Mich.; Princess, Tohula, Miss.; Hippodrome, San Francisco; Palace, San Francisco; Goldman, St. Louis; New Central, Freeberg, Mo.; Crystal, Joliet, Ill.; Molrose, Melrose Pk., Ill.; Lyric, East Chicago, Ind.; Bluebird, Magnum, Okla.; Arrow, Broken Bow, Okla.; Cozy, Checotah, Okla.; Goodtime, Baltimore; Gopher, Minneapolis; Agate, Minneapolis; Cozy, Minneapolis; New Franklin, Minneapolis; Waynem, Dayton; Variety, Cincinnati; Broadway, Jackson, O.; and Auditorium, Georgetown, Tex.

"Pathe's aim has always been fair play for the exhibitor, and today it is standing as strongly as ever for this object. Pathe was the leader in the open booking market, and the foresight of the great organization in moving on the new track of distribution is evidenced by those who have followed."

Cody Picture Scores Heavily

"The Beloved Cheater" Breaks Records for Two Days at Atlantic City is Report

PLAYING against some of the biggest productions of the year the Robertson-Cole special, "The Beloved Cheater," starring Lew Cody, is reported to have broken all records at the Criterion Theatre, Atlantic City, New Jersey, two days last week. Although booked against three special first run pictures within three blocks, "The Beloved Cheater" was received with auspicious greetings and when the star, Lew Cody, made his personal appearance on Friday night another chapter in his history of success was written.

The Criterion Theatre is situated on the Board Walk facing the ocean. At the opening performance, more than 1700 men and women braved a flurry or snow and weather registered ten above zero and fought to get into the theatre displaying "The Beloved Cheater". The afternoon performances and the last evening also saw the "Standing Room Only" sign displayed before the up-to-date film playhouse.

Manager O'Keefe after the four day showing asked for return dates on "The Beloved Cheater". He said that the film no doubt was one of the very best ever playing his theatre and predicted great things for the first of the Robertson-Cole specials for the new year. The theatre was especially decorated for the showing of "The Beloved Cheater" and a musical program in keeping with the tantalizing heart film added entertainment to the evening's program.

After the film was shown, Mr. Cody appeared and gave an interesting talk on the making of the picture.

Officials of Robertson-Cole declare that to-date there has not been one adverse criticism on the first big 1920 special and that almost every film critic of note was loud in declaring that it is one of the sure box office money makers for the new year.

"The Garage," Arbuckle Comic, Due Jan. 11

Fatty Arbuckle's newest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Garage," is scheduled for release January 11.

Mystery and melodrama are keynotes in "The Tree of Knowledge," the Famous Players-Lasky picture starring Robert Warwick

"Copperhead" Cost $1000 a Day to Film

With the distinction of being perhaps the largest production ever filmed in the East, "The Copperhead," from the play by Augustus Thomas, marks an achievement in the progress of the making of motion pictures, according to F. P. Lasky officials. In the picture, which will be released January 25, Lionel Barrymore will be seen in the role of Milt Shanks, the same character in which he made his greatest success on the stage.

Filming this great American play cost the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation something approaching $1,000 a day. Thousands of extras, men, women and children were employed.

United Theatres to Issue 25 Features in 1920

The United Picture Theatres of America announce, through President J. A. Berst, that they will release some twenty-five feature productions during the coming year. Many of these will be produced by the United Picture Productions Corporation which organization is now ready to begin active work in filming, it is stated.

Star Back on Screen in Successful Play

Beatriz Michelena, who has been seen seldom on the screen of late, has the type of role in "The Heart of Juanita," her latest production for Robertson-Cole, that fits her admirably. This production, made by her own company, is being favorably received by the leading exhibitors throughout the country.

Title Artist Joins the Selznick Forces

The Selznick Eastern studio forces have been further augmented, it was announced this week, by the addition of a California title artist.

Irvin J. Martin has arrived in Fort Lee from the Sunset State to take charge of the Selznick Art Department at the New Jersey studios.

Begins Work on "Round-Up"

Film Version, with Its Real Western Scenes, May Surpass the Stage Play

ACTIVE work is said to have been started at the Lasky studio on George Melford's production of "The Round-Up," Edmund Day's stage-play, which will be brought to the screen as a Paramount-Artcraft Special. The stage version will be surpassed, it is believed, by the Melford picture, which will have for its setting the real hills, valleys and mountains of the West.

The principal interest centers in the announcement that Roscoe Arbuckle, the inimitable "Fatty," by special arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck, will tuck his wide trouser legs into typical Western boots and play "high comedy" as the good-natured, self-sacrificing sheriff, the featured role of the play.

Another interesting feature of the production concerns Tom Forman, who plays the juvenile lead. Forman, it develops, wrote the scenario for "The Round-Up" and is said to have turned out such a finished product that even professional scenarists were warm in their praise. And now the good-looking juvenile, who is recognized as an excellent actor, who has written more than one successful scenario and who has tried his hand at assistant-directing, is looking about for new worlds to conquer.

Meanwhile, Mr. Melford has begun some of the scenes in which Mabel Juliane Scott, who was engaged to play the feminine lead, appears. Some elaborate sets have been constructed at the studio, but much of the production will be made at a distant location characterized by its natural beauty.

Rupert Hughes' Film Screened

Special Showing of "The Cup of Fury" Wins Praise of the Goldwyn Officials

IN a report recently received, Goldwyn announces "Since a special showing of 'The Cup of Fury' to the executives of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and Rupert Hughes, telegrams of congratulation and appreciation have been speeding across the wires from New York to the Culver City studios, where this first production for Eminent Authors Pictures was made under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter.

"Helene Chadwick, who plays the part of Mamise, is singled out for special praise. She had a wonderful acting opportunity and made the most of every scene in a series of picturesque situations. Mamise is first a vaudeville actress, then a society girl of London, a stenographer, and an assistant riveter in the ship yards of a great American concern. Rockliffe Fellowes plays opposite Miss Chadwick. Others in the cast are Herbert Standing, Sidney Ainsworth, Kate Lester, Frank Morgan, Florence Deshon, Clarissa Selwynne, Frank Leigh, and Dwight Crittenden.

"Novel effects have been obtained in the camera work that will cause a lot of favorable comment along with the suspense and surprise that Rupert Hughes has kept in preparing the continuity for the screen. The building of ships in the midst of labor troubles and against secret intrigue is part of this tremendous American drama. It far surpasses anything that Rupert Hughes has previously contributed to the screen. The production has won his highest endorsement. It will command the admiration of the entire motion picture public."

Harry Rapf Finishe "Just a Wife"

News reached New York this wee from the coast to the effect that Howard Hickman, who has been directin "Just A Wife" for distribution as National Picture Theatres, Inc. releas finished shooting the last scenes. Th announcement carried the further information that the production is nov being assembled and cut and will probably be ready for shipment East i about two weeks. This would mea that "Just A Wife" should reach th Seventh Avenue offices of National i New York about January 12.

Mabel Normand Startin on New Comedy

After a two months' vacation New York, Mabel Normand, tl Goldwyn comedienne, left for tl Culver City Studios last week. Wh she arrives on the Coast, Miss No mand will find everything in reac ness for the beginning of work her next production, which it is a nounced at the Goldwyn offices, w be "The Girl With The Jazz Hear a novelette by Robert Shannon pu lished in Munsey's Magazine.

Ince Studios

TWO very notable additions have been made to the Scenario Staff at the Thomas H. Ince Studio by the engagement of Bayard Veiller and Louis Joseph Vance. The former, who is author of "Within the Law," "The Thirteenth Chair," and several other stage and screen successes, is to create vehicles for Ince stars exclusively. Mr. Veiller has arrived at Culver City and is now at work on his first plays written especially for the screen.

Mr. Vance has also arrived at Culver City and is working on his first story. Vance, it will be remembered, is the author of "Lone Wolf" which was produced by Mr. Ince several months ago. Later, the Vance story, "False Faces" was produced by Mr. Ince and proved to be highly successful. The stories written by Mr. Vance will be for special production, to be released under the brand name of Ince-Vance production. Mr. Vance has been identified with the industry in every capacity, with the exception of that of an actor, and produced several pictures for Paramount about two years ago.

After many thrilling experiences, Director Irvin Willat and Star Hobart Bosworth have completed the sea scenes for the submarine pictures "Below the Surface," at Catalina Islands.

The Charles Ray company, which is being directed by Jerome Storm, spent the week at Los Nietos, California, where they used two complete trains of the Santa Fe Railroad for several days in the filming of scenes for Ray's last Ince picture, "Homer Comes Home." About one hundred extra people were required for these scenes, and the location being quite a distance from Los Angeles, made the filming of this section of the film very expensive for the producer.

Thomas H. Ince has added two new men to his staff in the persons of Bernard F. McElroy and Hunt Stromberg. Mr. McElroy will serve in the capacity of personal representative of Mr. Ince. He has had an interesting career in newspaper work and this has taken him to all parts of the world, where he had various experiences as soldier, sailor, miner and soldier of fortune.

Hunt Stromberg comes to the Ince organization from the position of director of publicity advertising and exploitation from Select Pictures Corporation in New York. As head of the Ince publicity staff he will inaugurate a co-operative system of serving exhibitors and editors with news of the Ince producing staff and productions, and plans to inaugurate a folder designed to keep the public informed of activities of Ince people and news of coming pictures. Stromberg is a former newspaper and advertising man.

Entry has been made in the Thomas H. Ince $50,000 Trans-Pacific flight to Australia by Sir Captain Arthur Whitten Brown, who flew across the Atlantic in sixteen hours and twelve minutes. Brown recently visited the Ince Studios at Culver City and officially entered his name as a contestant to go across the Pacific by airplane. While at the studio; he was invited to inspect the Ince aviation field at Venice and pronounced it a perfect place from which to "hop off" on a trip across the Pacific.

Juanita Hansen Finds Working With Animals Doubtful Pleasure

Juanita Hansen, star of "The Lost City," produced by Warner Brothers

JUANITA HANSEN, now in New York, and who has completed her role as the leading character in the wild animal serial, "The Lost City," which is now being released by the Warner Brothers, when asked to tell of her experience during the making of the popular serial, replied:—

"When I signed my contract to appear in 'The Lost City,' and Col. Selig handed me the script to take home and read, I was very happy, but after I finished reading it I was half ready to resign my role if its fulfillment proved nearly as hazardous as it looked in the story; however, I became determined and set my mind on fulfilling my part of the contract at any cost.

"After we journeyed to the locale of the story and had entered upon the first stage of the trip to the jungle, I began to lose my fear of the strange looking natives who accompanied us, and by the time the camera was ready to 'shoot' the first scene of the picture, I had already witnessed the natives, women as well as men, advance fearlessly toward snarling beasts and aid in their capture, again and again barely escaping their savage attacks, and all without the least sign of fear.

"It shamed me to feel that I, too, could not ignore that feeling of fear that swept over me at the first sign of warning of an approaching animal. It was the sight of the natives fearlessly, but with exact precision and safety trapping these wild specimens, that finally enabled me to shake off that terrible feeling of fear, and I soon began to experience a sense of reliance upon them that eventually left me with an assurance of safety almost as great as if I was merely watching the same caged beasts at a circus.

"I will not deny that some of the things I was called upon to do caused shivers to go up and down my spine. For instance, I was called upon to expose myself to the attack of a leopard who was to spring at me from a high rock while Mr. Chesebro, who worked opposite me, was to lasso the beast in mid-air. But I had already learned that Mr. Chesebro had mastered the art of lassoing to the extent that I felt confident that he could throw the rope about the neck of the beast before it could reach me. When the scene was actually 'shot,' however, and the animal was caught after its spring at me, I was not acting, for when you will see this particular scene you will be convinced that the expression of fear on my face was real in every sense, I can assure you.

"To be truthful about it all, I guess it was pride more than anything else that conquered my fear, for I felt that if those dusky native girls could risk their lives in such an unconcerned manner, a white girl could hardly afford to show cowardice. So I finally finished the entire fifteen episodes with only one serious mishap—when one of the leopards really did get a little closer than it was intended and managed to sink its claws into my arm and shoulder—but it was not serious, and I was able to continue my work very soon after.

"I can really say that it was the most exciting period of adventure in my young life, and I was very happy when we were back again on the vessel that carried us back to America. Would I like to do it all over again? Well, I can hardly answer that question. But one thing is certain—I am glad now that I had that thrilling experience and more than gratified since I have witnessed the result of it upon the screen."

Miss Hansen is taking a well-deserved rest since the completion of "The Lost City," and will remain here in New York indefinitely.

The production, which will be released shortly throughout the country, will be offered in fifteen distinct episodes, one each week. Elephants, tigers, lions, camels, alligators, and many other beasts of the jungle, all enter into the telling of this exciting photo-sensation; and because of its acute realism, the giant thrills that have been crowded into it, this extraordinary film serial will undoubtedly prove the most phenomenally successful of any yet that has been offered to the lovers of thrilling photoplays.

Why should Sammy Burns look so mournful and Marion Warner so prim? They are both working in King Cole comedies at Dongan Hills, S. I.

Brunton Studios

ROY CLEMENTS is now editing a special production filmed at the Robert Brunton Studios starring Mitchell Lewis. It is an adaptation from the novel "King Spruce" and will be released under that name. Mr. Clements has not definitely decided on any plan for releasing this production. Mignon Anderson is the leading woman opposite Mitchell Lewis. Melbourne McDowell takes the leading character role and an ingenue part is taken by Betty Wales. Joe Ray is juvenile of the picture.

Mitchell Lewis, following the completion of his work in the film, went east for a short trip but plans to be back in Los Angeles by the latter part of January when it is expected work will be started on the Jack London stories at the Metro Studios.

Robert Brunton has selected "One Week End" as the next vehicle for Jack Kerrigan and work of filming this story of New York society life has been started. Fritzi Brunette who has played opposite Kerrigan in six previous productions has been engaged in this capacity for the coming film. Others in the cast will be Lillie Leslie, Emmett King, John Steppling and others. Ernest C. Warde, who has directed several Kerrigan pictures, will be in charge of producing this film.

Robert Brunton and Pathe Exchanges, Inc., have taken out a $60,000 insurance policy on Jack Dempsey, champion heavyweight pugilist, to be effective during the making of the fifteen episode serial now in production.

Equity Exploitation Idea Winner

ENTERTAINMENT is entertainment and exploitation exploitation, but when the two are allied—they form an unconquerable combination.

In the midst of the present tremendous wave of money spending on national campaigns, it is well worth while in the belief of Equity Pictures Corporation to note the exception.

Equity Pictures Corporation, one of the new big producing and distributing concerns has taken as its maxim for the present season, to do what advertising and exploitation it does, outside of ambitious trade paper campaigns directly in towns and in only such instances as will couple the money spent with the theatre at which one of Equity's productions is announced for presentation.

And this policy is said to be reaping its fruits.

Harry Reichenbach, head of Equity's exploitation department, has been struggling for years to experiment with a pet idea—viz., to follow a print of some subject, from town to town and use in each succeeding place, the better elements of exploitation from the preceding towns. And after eight weeks of this form of absolutely direct co-operation, the following financial results are announced as having been achieved in various places.

Direct Campaign in City Where Picture Runs Proves Its Value

Clara Kimball Young and Conway Tearle in "The Forbidden Woman," an Equity picture

Chicago, having been the first to open, received initial attention from Equity and the report from this city nas already been broadly published. The first Equity picture, "Eyes of Youth," broke records at Chicago, while other nationally advertised films were being taken off mid-week, then came Louisville where The Big Feature Rights Corporation got behind the preliminary work with a zest and the result was that Christmas week, one of the real bad weeks of the year, universally, was converted into a record breaker at the Strand theatre and the picture "Eyes of Youth" is being returned to the same house for an additional run.

Pittsburg, where the Million Dollar Grand and Rowland & Clarke's Liberty theatres ran the film day and date, an unusual activity, business exceeded expectations by many hundreds of dollars and portends exceptional results in the entire territory.

Worth remarking upon preliminary to the Pittsburg showing, was the daily paper results secured by Mr. Connelly of the Grand and Samuel Sivitz of the Clarke and Rowland offices. On Sunday, January 4, the five newspapers published that day in Pittsburg, carried from five to eight stories each on the engagement, and from three to five pictures of Miss Young or scenes from the play.

The Woodlawn theatre at Chicago, the first residence house to play "Eyes of Youth" following the loop engagement, was forced to play midnight shows to take care of the holdout crowds and no less than five houses gave midnight performances New Year's Day to capacity crowds.

At Atlanta, where "Eyes of Youth" opened for an indefinite engagement at the Criterion theatre, more people attended the opening day than during any one day in its history and the second day fell off less than two per cent. Reports from Atlanta as the week goes, state that the house record will be broken by almost fifty per cent.

Portland, Oregon, sent a voluntary wire to the New York office of Equity that never in the history of the city had such business been enjoyed as that which "Eyes of Youth" attracted and that it would be given return bookings in every town in the Northwest. The same story was heard at Cleveland, where after playing two houses simultaneously, in the heart of the city, "Eyes of Youth" was brought back to one of the houses for a repeat booking, then played another house directly across the street.

Bruznova in Kaufman Weekly

FOLLOWING the increased interest aroused by the far flung national trade paper campaign being conducted in behalf of Selznick Pictures, included in which are the Herbert Kaufman Weekly subjects filmed from the widely known writer's editorials, it was announced this week by Lewis J. Selznick that Madame Halina Bruznova is to have the leading role in the second Kaufman Weekly, "The Faded Butterfly." This subject is now in the process of production at the Fort Lee studios, and upon release will be distributed by Select.

Appearing with Madame Bruznova, in the leading male role of "The Faded Butterfly," is Warren Chandler. Little Helen Reinecke, child actress who has appeared in several Selznick productions, and who has been credited with unusual success, is to appear in this picture as the daughter.

The first Kaufman Weekly, "Little Red Riding Hood," has gone through the cutting room, emerging from the process in what is announced as "first class condition" and pronounced excellent to show on the screen of every motion picture theatre in this or any other country.

Third of Writer's Creation Will Shortly be Started

The third Kaufman Weekly is scheduled as "Puppy Love," and is expected to be well under way shortly at the Fort Lee studios.

In connection with the national advertising on the Kaufman weekly, Lewis J. Selznick used four full pages in the Saturday Evening Post of December 27, thereby fulfilling his purpose to create audiences for the exhibitors even before the release of the first subject, "Little Red Riding Hood." It would be a hard matter, probably to find anywhere in the country a person who has not read faithfully the Kaufman editorials, and who will fail to attend any theatre presenting the subjects. The Chicago Tribune, in referring to Herbert Kaufman, said: "It may be doubted if any man before him ever had so many readers in his own time."

In Mr. Selznick's message to the public, through the nationally and internationally read magazines and periodicals, it was especially accented that the millions who have followed Herbert Kaufman during the past decade will now find concentrated in their local theatre the full range of his genius. As a real first aid to the exhibitor this published fact is pointed out as worthy of special attention.

In the production of the Kaufman Weekly subjects it is declared that the same attention is given as in the filming of Selznick features. Many improvements in production facilities are announced at the Fort Lee studios, and additional experts and artists have been added to the production staff.

Alice Joyce and Marmont Lead Cotillion

Alice Joyce, her leading man, Percy Marmont, and the rest of the company of principals who are now in New Orleans filming exteriors on "The Sporting Duchess," celebrated New Year's Eve by having a cotillion, which was led by the star and her leading man. The principals in this company have been employed on "The Sporting Duchess" for many weeks, in Vitagraph's endeavor to give the story an adequate presentation, so that they have all become acquainted and very friendly with one another and the cotillion was in the nature of a family party.

Added interest in the occasion was caused by the wearing of their picture costumes by all the members of the cast.

AIN'T ART AWFUL!

REX INGRAM, who directs Alice Lake in "Shore Acres" for Screen Classics, Inc., has a poor memory.

"I know just the man for this part—but I forget his name," he will tell Horace Williams, who casts Metro productions.

"What does he look like?" Williams asks. He has a remarkable mental card index of screen players. . Then Director Ingram's training in the Art Student's League comes in handy. He seizes a scrap of paper and sketches a head, profile and full face. Williams looks at it.

"Oh yes, Frank Patootie!" he exclaims—and gets that actor on the 'phone!

Thus do art and business mix.

"Hawk's Trail" Shown in Several Territories

Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., has announced the releas of "The Hawk's Trail", his latest seria de luxe to the state rights market through the W. H. Productions Co Already the serial is said to have bee received well in the middle western southern and coast states where mucl territory has been disposed of.

"The Hawk's Trail" is said to giv promise of becoming even more suc cessful than its predecessors, all o which were directed and supervised b Mr. Burston.

Supreme Comics Maintain Standard

"Hearts and Diamonds," the current Supreme Comedy released by Robertson-Cole is considered one of the best turned out by the Southern California Producing Company. The story is from the pen of W. Scott Darling and was directed by William Beauding one of the best short subject pilots in the game today. Katherine Lewis and James Liddy are featured in this laugh thriller.

In speaking of "Hearts and Diamonds," Mr. Beauding commented. "We are doing our very best to give clean, wholesome, comedy and I believe our policy has been vindicated by the manner in which Supreme Comedies have gone over during the past three months. We have the stars who produced and the best comedy scenario writers that money could assemble are with us."

Film Planned to Supplement Text Books

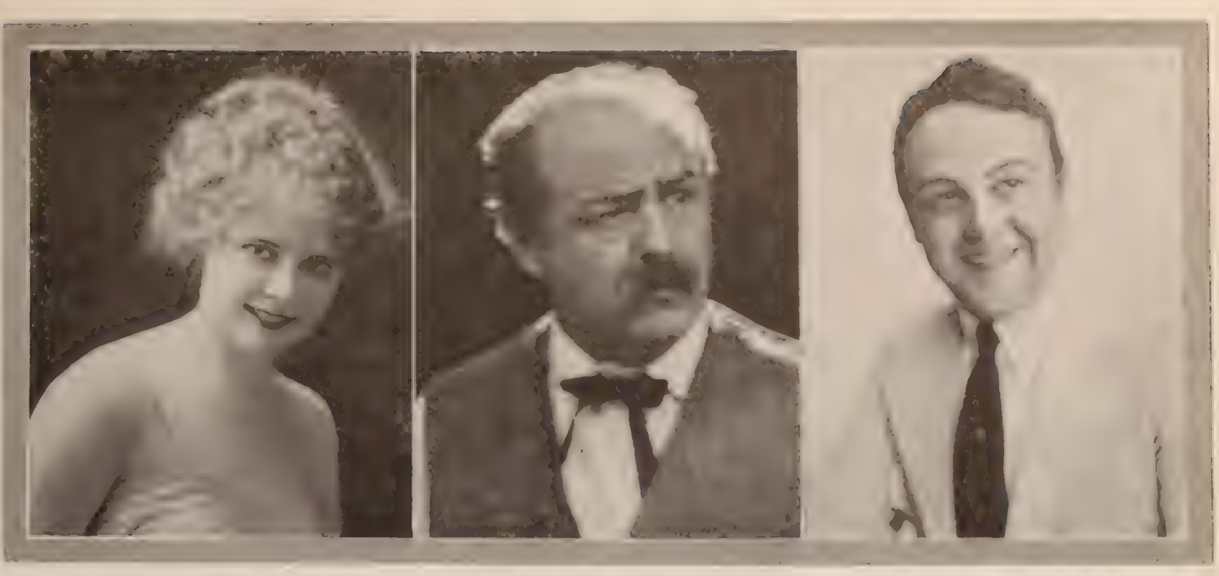
A far-reaching plan for the introduction into the schools of systematic series of instructional films as supplements to standard text books is being rapidly developed by the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in cooperation with D. Appleton and Company, school book publishers. The first of the series is to be exhibited at the February session of the National Educational Association at Cleveland, Ohio, during the last week in February. Under this plan films closely paralleling the text books are to be built up in close co-operation with the authors of the texts, whose names will appear on the films as evidence of correctness and authenticity.

Mary Pickford Selected Cast for "Pollyanna"

Heretofore, according to a report from the offices of the United Artists, Mary Pickford has made suggestion as to who was to play in the pictures in which she was featured. In the case of "Pollyanna," however, says the same report, Miss Pickford was given the entire task of selecting the cast for her forthcoming feature. This, in the view of Miss Pickford, was no easy task, because the cast selected for this picture will have to face thousands of exacting critics among the public, who have long ago become acquainted with the characters of the story in their reading of the book. "Pollyanna" will be released on January 18th.

"The Six Best Cellars" Received Favorably

Famous Players-Lasky reports that according to advices from the Coast "The Six Best Cellars," starring Bryant Washburn, "went big" at its showing at the Lasky studio recently. Elmer Harris wrote the scenario. Donald Crisp directed, and Wanda Hawley is the leading lady of the picture. Snappy subtitles and the good character depiction of the members of the cast are set forth as especially strong points of this new comedy.



Three players? No, only two. Both the centre and right hand illustrations are pictures of Harvey Clark as he is and as he appears (centre) in "Eve in Exile," produced by the American Film Co., Inc., and released by Pathe. The lady is Violet Palmer, also a member of the cast of "Eve"

American's Next Super-Feature

William Russell in "The Valley of Tomorrow" Through Pathe

AMERICAN Film Company, Inc., will shortly issue another super-feature in which William Russell enacts the leading male role. It bears the title, "The Valley of Tomorrow," and is said by the reviewers who have seen it at private advance showings to be fully as powerful if not even more gripping than was "Six Feet Four," the preceding Russell subject.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" is a story of life in the mountain fastnesses and is enacted by a cast of specially selected players amid scenic backgrounds of a rather unusual nature. The majority of the exteriors were taken in and about Lake Tahoe, famous the world over for its scenic grandeur. Some "shots" were obtained along the banks of the Truckee River and they too will undoubtedly attract much favorable comment when the production is publicly shown.

The basic motif of the feature is optimism, showing after many trials and dramatic situations, that tomorrow will, of a certainty, be a better day.

"I am positive," remarked President Samuel S. Hutchinson of American to an interviewer, "That every exhibitor who screened 'Six Feet Four' will find 'The Valley of Tomorrow' even more to his liking. It is a story that for suspense has seldom been equaled. Strong scenes are unfolded in the early part of the very first reel—the interest of the spectator is centered on 'Dabney Morgan,' the hero of the tale, and from that point on to the very end there is never a let-down in the suspense element. Time and time again the beholder may perhaps imagine that he can guess what is going to happen next, only to discover a few moments later that he was wrong and that from a scene that appears to be the climax of the story, he is led into a situation still more powerful.

"A well known critic who looked at the film a week or two ago, turned to me at the end of the exhibition and said, 'Mr. Hutchinson, I don't recall having seen a film in over a year in which the suspense was sustained over such a long period. When it goes on the theatre screen, I am certain it will hold any audience spell bound in its seats. It builds up to a climax which continues through at least two full reels, and there is never an instant's let-down during all that period.'

"The exhibitor who caters to the very highest class of patrons—those exceptionally well to do and who travel extensively—will book 'The Valley of Tomorrow' in a moment because of its scenic beauties.

"Stephen Fox, who prepared several of the Russell productions in the past that proved most successful from a box-office standpoint, is the author of 'The Valley of Tomorrow,' went on Mr. Hutchinson, "And he himself adapted the story to the screen. In the role of 'Dabney Morgan,' handsome, fearless, debonair—William Russell has a part that fits him like a glove. He is supported by a company of carefully chosen players, among whom may be mentioned Mary Thurman, Harvey Clark, Fred Malatesta, Frank Brownlee, Pauline Curley, Frank Clark and Lewis King. Emmett J. Flynn, known to exhibitors as a most capable director, directed the production.

"All the usual exhibitors aids—one, threes, sixes and twenty-four sheets—lobby photos—campaign books—press sheets—newspaper cuts — exploitation stunts of every kind are provided and can be secured from the American Film Company representative at any Pathe Exchange."

Exhibitors may view the picture at their nearest Pathe Exchange and arrangements for booking can be made with the American Film Company representative stationed there.

"In Search of a Sinner" Has Been Completed

Constance Talmadge's fourth First National picture, "In Search of a Sinner," from Charlotte Thompson's story of the same name, is now being cut and titled by Director David Kirkland, John Emerson and Anita Loos, and is expected to be ready for distribution through the First National Circuit some time in March.

Marie Walcamp's Party Reports from Orient

Reports received at the Universal offices from the Orient advise of the progress made by Marie Walcamp's party. The party, headed by Mr. Henry McRae, is filming the Universal serial, "The Dragon's Net," with Marie Walcamp doing stellar honors. The plot of the serial takes the party to Shanghai and then further afield to Peking and the Gobi desert. From there they will go to Hong Kong and Manila, and afterwards to India, where they will be engaged on a separate picture.

In Japan, a number of places were used as settings for parts of the serial. Yokohama, Tokio and Kamakura, all are said to play parts in the picture; while Miss Walcamp, in the character of a pilgrim acted one episode with the great Daubutsu as an important part of the background, it is stated.

Pathe Opens Up a New Exchange in Boston

With business in the New England territory reported to be increasing steadily for months past, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been compelled, it is said, to open new quarters in Boston. An entire three-story building in Stanhope street, in the heart of the Hub film district, has been taken over, and equipped as a modern and thoroughly efficient motion-picture exchange building.

Every comfort for the patrons of Pathe is said to have been provided. For the convenience of exhibitors who visit Boston to book their pictures Pathe has provided a reception room, which any exhibitor can make his headquarters during his stay in the Hub, it is stated.

British Ace Becomes a Pathe Representative

Pathe announces that Bob Bartley, who achieved considerable notice for his exploits during the war as an aviator of the Royal Flying Corps, has just been engaged by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a special feature representative. Announcement of the territory that he will cover will be made, it is said, in a few days.

Kerrigan in New Production

Brunton Studios Announce "Live Sparks," Which Will Be Released in Mid-January

THE W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces for mid-January release J. Warren Kerrigan's fourth Robert Brunton production, "Live Sparks," a delightful comedy-drama of the Texas oil fields, prints of which were shipped this week to all Hodkinson exchanges.

As a story "Live Sparks" is said to leave little room for improvement. The Hodkinson offices say it has rollicking humor, drama, cohesive action and a striking plot and that as a production it is remarkable for technical finish, clear photography and clever casting. Mr. Kerrigan's company includes Fritzie Brunette, Joseph J. Dowling, Arthur Millette, John Steppling, Roy Laidlaw and Mary Jane Irving.

The leading role of "Neil Sparks" is suited to the star. He is seen as a lively young millionaire with a decided faculty for getting himself into one scrape after another. He attends an illegal prizefight and is forced to fight his way out with his girl companion when a squad of bluecoats raid the place. Through his good nature and exaggerated sense of chivalry he is led into an engagement with a girl who has an eye on his millions. Then a pair of unprincipled oil promoters attempt to trick him out of valuable oil lands. Neil goes after the grafters, upsets their game and meets the girl of his dreams. He contrives a break with his designing fiancee and brings the story to an end with the righ girl nodding "Yes."

The new Kerrigan picture, directed by Ernest C. Warde, who supervised the production of all Kerrigan-Brunton vehicles, is from the pen of Caroline Sayre, the well-known fiction author, who lists among her successes "Kentucky Lew," "Missouri Folk" and "Sold."

A number of pre-release engagements of "Live Sparks" have been contracted for by big exhibitors in the Chicago and San Francisco territories.

Ibanez' Novel Being Prepared

June Mathis Returns to Metro Studio After Conference with Author in East

JUNE MATHIS has returned to Hollywood, Cal., and taken possession of her new suite of offices at the Metro studios. The first work of the young scenario chief will be the adaptation of the novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," to which she brings the inspiration of personal suggestions from Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the author whom she met in Chicago while en route from New York to the Pacific Coast.

"Senor Ibanez made several wonderfully inspirational suggestions, very clever and very valuable, for effects in the motion picture production," said Miss Mathis. "In fact, he showed a remarkable knowledge of the making of motion pictures, at least from the European angle. He readily understood our technical terms too.

"Blasco Ibanez is widely travelled. He described conditions in South America, where some of the scenes in 'The Four Horsemen' are laid, and told of the tango days in pre-war Paris when he was living there.

"He assured me he was certain that whatever I did with the novel would be all right. The novelist recalled that I had picturized 'Out of the Fog,' and was responsible for 'To Hell With the Kaiser.' He was so good as to assure me that the woman who had written those scenarios must be 'all right' to picturize 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.'"

Realart to Build Larg Los Angeles Exchange

Realart Pictures Corporation is build a $100,000 structure in Los A geles to house its local exchange. Th acquisition by Realart of its own buil ing, which is planned to be modern every detail, is cited as being in kee ing with the rapid progress which th corporation has made since its ince tion six months ago, and as substa tial indication of the company's inte tion to remain a permanent factor the motion picture industry.

Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles, Ma ager for Realart, has just signed ten-year lease on the property at 8 South Olive Street, for the erection the exchange building. A large fra structure was recently removed to pe mit the beginning of construction Realart's new building.

Edith Hallor Figures on Selznick Schedule

During the year 1920 the Select exchanges will have for release six productions starring the well-known stage actress, Edith Hallor. This announcement was made this week by Myron Selznick, head of the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

The six productions will be made by the Lawrence Weber Photoplays company, under the supervision of Bobby North, as Select releases. This is among the first big announcements of the enlarged plans of Selznick Enterprises made this year although it will of course be followed by many additional interesting ones. Mr. Selznick declares that the Hallor plans will rank among the highest class productions of the new year and that no expense in the selection of stories or in the selection of the supporting casts will be spared. They will in every way, Mr. Selznick states, not only uphold the high standard set by the Select pictures last year but will in all probability raise this standard.

Edith Hallor left New York last week to start work at the Selznick West Coast studios where the productions will be made.

Ruth Chatterton will not be a Louis B. Mayer star despite a mysterious report which is said to have gotten into circulation to the effect that the star had been signed. Louis B. Mayer today issued a denial that he had a contract with Miss Chatterton and declared that he did not know how the story started or who had reported it to various theatrical magazines.

"South Likes Universal Stars"

So. America Hails Them As Favorites Claims Recent Report

UNIVERSAL has issued a statement, reciting the popularity with which its stars are said to be meeting in Cuba and South America. The serials are said to be special favorites in the Southern countries of the continent, and the westerns of the blood-and-thunder variety appear to be the least liked, according to the Universal statement. The report follows in full:

"Universal favorites are not without honor in other countries. From Cuba comes the news of a popularity contest run by the Roleaux magazine in which many prominent American screen stars were contestants. Eddie Polo was the winner, beating by 500 votes Pearl White and William S. Hart. Priscilla Dean and Dorothy Phillips took second and third place respectively among the stars of the fair sex.

"While the contest itself was only a small matter it is indicative of the success serials are having in South American countries. The Eddie Polo serials are always attended by great applause wherever they are shown.

"All Universal export records are being broken by the successful South American bookings on Elmo the Mighty featuring Elmo Lincoln, who previously scored in "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan."

"As another example of the serials' drawing-powers in the Latin countries, Universal is in receipt of advices from Brazil to the effect that after The Broken Coin had been circulated about the country for four years, it was re-booked at a Rio de Janiero house and the phenomenal crowd blocked street car traffic in front of the house.

"Dorothy Phillips because of her emotional acting and fiery temperament appeals to the warm blooded Spaniard and is well liked everywhere. In 'The Right to Happiness' she is taking Porto Rico by storm, as the picture is booking a larger amount of business than any other single production put out by Universal. 'The Heart of Humanity' is also enjoying enormous popularity.

"In Mexico the dramatic critic of De El Universal, the leading newspaper, has found a source of comment in Mary MacLaren's picture, 'The Petal on the Current.' Silvestre Bonard, the writer, picks Mary MacLaren as the typical American girl by her work in this picture. He writes extensively on her traits and compares them with the Mexican girls' peculiarities. This picture he says proves to the South American that the North American girl is just as romantic as her Latin sister, although her ideals are expressed differently. He is sincere in his praise for the picture.

"In Argentina Priscilla Dean made a sweeping hit with her clever portrayal in 'The Silk Lined Burglar.' Miss Dean also has found a warm spot in the South American's heart. Her pictures are displayed in all the local periodicals and always are captioned with words of commendation for her screen work.

"The South American likes breezy western pictures but have tired of the blood-and-thunder variety of film. For his clean and brisk action in his forceful Universal pictures, Harry Carey is 'going big' in all photoplay houses.

"The poets have taken to Monroe Salisbury and he has been the theme for numerous glowing tributes in the rhymed line. He is well liked for his work in 'The Savage,' and in 'The Desire of the Moth.'"

Clemenceau's Novel Now in Film

French Premier's "The Strongest" Completed by Fox

GEORGES CLEMENCEAU'S only photodrama has been completed at the New York studio of Fox Film Corporation, and R. A. Walsh, the director, is busy cutting it. Some time this month this story by the famous Premier of France will be released as a Fox special.

"The Strongest" is a drama of the natal passions of life. It propounds a great question, "Does the soul of woman rule the world today?" and answers it through the mind of the "Tiger of France."

Raoul A. Walsh has visualized this story. He has put into it all his genius for detail, all his knowledge of dramatic values.

The director has had the benefit of a cast of international favorites, headed by the Parisian artist Renee Adoree, was prevailed upon to make his screen and the Belgian actor, Carlo Liten. If was the desire of the French author that Renee Adoree portray the charming young heroine of "The Strongest," and that Carlo Liten—whose special performances in Belgian plays in New York during the making of "The Strongest," has won the unstinted praise of the Metropolitan critics, interpret the part of the restrained and refined Marquis.

The part of the steel king of the French republic required a great actor. It was only after much persuasion that Harrison Hunte, for thirty years an outstanding figure in the spoken drama, debut in the Clemenceau story.

George Walsh and his director, Geo. Beranger, who have just finished "Find the Woman" for Fox Films

So much for the three leading characters in the drama which the mighty Clemenceau has created. For the villain and his clever accomplice, Jean Gautier de Trigny, and his pretty wife, Georgette Gautier, both artists of international note were chosen. The ingenue is Teddy Piper, who makes her screen debut in the Fox production of "The Strongest." Other artists, all chosen with great care for the parts in which they have proved their ability, assure for the screen version of Clemenceau's only photodrama a perfect presentation.

William Fox put into the hands of Raoul A. Walsh unlimited money with which to make "The Strongest" among the greatest of all photoplays. There has been no financial stinting. With a lavishness that is in keeping with so great a story from the pen of such an author, William Fox has put into "The Strongest" his greatest efforts. Scenes and sets, constructed under the watchful eye of an experienced French architect, were built at the big studio in New York and in place of the imitation period furniture so often used in screening chateau interiors, genuine furniture, some of it purchased in France and specially imported for the production—has been used.

To the minutest detail all of the scenes are said to represent exactly the places pictured in the powerful story. Nothing that is shown in this production is faked. Even the tapestries used represent an outlay of nearly $75,000.

Norma Talmadge in her initial First National production, "A Daughter of Two Worlds," playing this week at the Strand theatre

Norma Talmadge Billed at Two Broadway Houses

A report has been received to the effect that Norma Talmadge's last Select Picture, and first First National Picture have been both scheduled for their initial New York showing during the same week at two Broadway houses. "She Loves and Lies" will be shown at the Rivoli, while "A Daughter of Two Worlds" is billed for the Strand.

Goldwyn Distributes Neat Booking Chart

During the past week Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has distributed to exhibitors throughout the country a practical booking chart. It is cut to a measurement that fits conveniently into the pocket; the paper is of durable quality, and without any wasted space ample room is allowed on the well arranged pages for all the notes that an exhibitor may wish to make in connection with the booking of pictures.

On the inside cover there is a complete calendar for 1920; facing this comes a concise statement about Goldwyn's "Promise and Performance."

Engineers' Club Endorse "Soldiers of Fortune"

Realart Pictures Corporation reports that the Engineers' Club of Philadelphia, has officially endorsed "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, following a private showing of the picture at its club house. This Realart Film which was adapted from the Richard Harding Davis story of pioneer mining men, was dedicated by Allan Dwan to the civil engineers of America.

Harry Van Meter has been engaged to play Tozer in the Metro-Screen Classic production of "Judah," the drama by Henry Arthur Jones, in which May Allison will be starred.

Rothacker Aiming High

Time and Money Expended Liberally to Make Series the "Supreme Scenics"

THE Scenic Supreme—that's what Watterson R. Rothacker believes he is going to present to the trade this year. Whether he does it or not he prefers to have the exhibitors say later. Right now he is only believing that the verdict on 1920 "Rothacker Outdoors" releases will be: "They're the superlative in scenics."

Neither money, brains, patience nor courage was spared in getting the pictures for this year's "Rothacker Outdoors" series, release arrangements for which will be announced in the trade papers in the near future.

It took money to send out expeditions which required twenty and twenty-five pack horses to transport them over the mountains. On some expeditions there would be a director and two cameramen.

Brains were "spent" right along with this money. On arriving in a territory the Rothacker men would first make a survey of the country as to scenic and wild game possibilities. Next a scenario would be written. Then the camera would get on the job. On these expeditions there was no shooting at random at any piece of scenery which looked good to the director—every scene was a part of a carefully planned continuity.

Among the earlier releases will be "Goat Getting," "Lamping the Laplanders," "The Spell of the Game-Clan," "The Rhines of the Raftsmen," "A Little Bit of Heaven," "The Wonderlusters," "The City Chap's Chant" and "Where the Spray Meets the Bow."

In the Chicago laboratory of the Rothacker film Mfg. Co., the technical experts took up the work where the venturesome cameramen and directors left off. The pictures proved an inspiration to the laboratory folk whose tinting has helped to make Rothacker prints noted. The result of this inspiration has been some duo toning effects which the experts frankly admit they are proud of.

Tarkington Series in March

"Edgar" Comedies for Goldwyn Release Well Along; Author Titling Pictures

DIRECTOR E. MASON HOPPER has completed the first two-reel episode in the series of Booth Tarkington "Edgar" Comedies being made by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the Culver City Studios and the film is now being cut and edited. Most of the titles have been supplied by the author himself, who has adhered to the style familiar to the readers of the Penrod and Billy Baxter stories. It is announced at the Goldwyn offices that distribution of the Edgar pictures will be started about the first of March.

With Johnny Jones in the title role, supported by a company of players selected with the greatest care in order to assure a correct interpretation of Tarkington's characters, this series promises to be unique in the annals of motion picture production.

Not content with presenting the boy Edgar as he appears to others, the author has gone further and provided an insight into the mental and emotional reactions of the youngster, so that his behavior may be thoroughly understood. In the opening sequences we are introduced to Edgar and the family of which he is a part. We meet his mother, his father, his aunts, his uncles and the "most beautiful girl in the world," and through an ingenious arrangement of the scenes are shown just how these people appear to a normal American boy. The opportunities for comedy and penetrating characterization offered in these introductory passages have been utilized to the full, it is declared by those who have seen Mr. Hopper's film.

As the action develops, the stories provided by Mr. Tarkington give, what has never been given on the screen before, a veracious and humorous picture of the life of a healthy young boy whose horizon is still bounded by the outskirts of the town in which he was born.

Tie-Up with Publishers for Mark Twain Film

A tie-up which is expected to prove of much benefit to exhibitors booking the William D. Taylor's Paramount Artcraft Production, "Huckleberry Finn," has been effected by the publicity department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with Harper & Bros., publishers of Mark Twain's story.

One feature of the tie-up is the publication of a special photoplay edition of 100,000 copies of "Huckleberry Finn." This edition, which will be put on the market immediately, is illustrated with stills taken from the Paramount-Artcraft picture, and on the jacket of each book there will be this credit line: "Illustrations taken from the Paramount Artcraft photoplay version made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Massive Interior Set in Universal Feature

A massive interior set is said to have been constructed at Universal City for a single sequence of scenes in "The Beautiful Beggar," the story by H. H. Van Loan now being produced by Universal, with Priscilla Dean as star, and Tod Browning, directing.

The set is reported a faithful reproduction of the interior of the mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople, and is 142 feet wide and 228 feet in length, according to reports.

Special Sales Drive on Triangle Releases

Announcement is made by Triangle that a special selling campaign will be inaugurated on the Taylor Holmes and Olive Thomas series of Triangle plays. These include Olive Thomas in "The Follies Girl," "Love's Prisoner," "Totan," and "Prudence on Broadway." The Taylor Holmes series include "Upside Down," "A Regular Fellow," "It's a Bear," "Taxi," and "Three Black Eyes."

Universal Releases for Week of January 12

Universal releases for the week of January 12th include "The Triflers," in which Edith Roberts and David Butler are featured; a Lyons-Moran, one-reel comedy, "Some Shimmiers;" a one-reel Okeh Komedy, "Bill's Wife," featuring Ben Wilson; a Jewel, "A Baby Doll Bandit," in which Mrs. Joe Martin cavorts with Jimmy Adams; another clever Century Animal Comedy, "Naughty Lions & Wild Men;" and one Western, "West is Best," with Hoot Gibson and Josephine Hill showing us why.

The serial is twice represented in "Hemmed In," the fourteenth episode of "The Great Radium Mystery," featuring Eileen Sedgwick, Cleo Madison and Bob Reeves; and in "The Kidnappers," the third episode of "The Lion Man," in which Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin have stellar roles.

Bryant Washburn Will Be Star in Farce-Comedy

With "The Six Best Cellars" completed and in the cutting room, Bryant Washburn has started the production, under direction of James Cruze, of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," at the Lasky studio. The picture rights to this farce-comedy by Frank Wyatt and William Morris were recently purchased by Famous Players-Lasky for Mr. Washburn, and the play was immediately put into scenario form by Elmer Harris. Mr. Washburn's leading woman is Wanda Hawley, and Carmen Phillips plays the "other girl."

Denver Leading in First National Race

First capitulation of the business of each First National Exchange on the basis of quotas established by H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of the Circuit for the Honor Office Contest announced this week, shows that the Denver branch, under the direction of J. H. Ashby, its manager, leads the field in the race for the $5,000 in cash awards which will be made to the winning exchange men and salesmen at the second annual convention of the First National Sales Club, to be held on April 22, 1920.

Goldwyn Directorial Staff Grows

Claim That It Is Most Competent Force Under Any Banner

RECOGNIZING the director as the great creative factor in bringing a story to the screen, and realizing that the strongest plays ever written and the most inspired acting may be ruined by poor direction, Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and Abraham Lehr, vice-president, located at the Culver City Studios, have enrolled what they consider as among the greatest force of directors ever placed under contract by any one company.

The work of building up the organization of directors who will picturize the plays and novels secured by Goldwyn has been conducted quietly. One by one, men who have risen to the top of their profession have been added to the Goldwyn roster.

Attesting the quality of the minds behind Goldwyn Pictures today are such renowned names as Reginald Barker, Frank Lloyd, Clarence Badger, Victor Schertzinger, William Parke, Wallace Worsley, T. Hayes Hunter, Tom Mills, Harry Beaumont, E. Mason Hopper and Paul Scardon. Every member of this group has won a reputation either as a director of drama or comedy.

Reginald Barker's work has reached such a high plane that as a compliment to the director, Mr. Goldwyn recently ruled that pictures which he directs shall be known as Reginald Barker Productions. Among current releases, Mr. Barker is responsible for the presentation of Rex Beach's "The Girl From Outside."

Frank Lloyd's experience with Goldwyn has been particularly fortunate. His first production was Geraldine Farrar in "The World and Its Woman," and since then he has been doing unfailingly good work with Pauline Frederick and other stars at Culver City.

Victor Schertzinger is doing much mand pictures as comedy hits of the day, and is expected to provide a towards putting over the Mabel Nor- worthy successor to "Jinx" and "Pinto." For many months Harry Beaumont and Tom Moore were co-workers. "Lord and Lady Algy," "The Gay Lord Quex" and "Toby's Bow" all carry the name of Harry Beaumont, as will Madge Kennedy's next picture, "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness," an original story by Octavus Roy Cohen.

Wallace Worsley is represented in Goldwyn's list of coming pictures by "The Street Called Straight," the first of Basil King's contributions, and "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," the John Fox, Jr. story which will mark Jack Pickford's debut as a Goldwyn star. T. Hayes Hunter recently completed a powerful drama in the picturization of Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury" and is now working on "Earthbound," the second of Basil King's novels.

William Parke is a veteran stage and picture producer who joined the Goldwyn forces last summer.

E. Mason Hopper was selected as the ideal director for the Booth Tarkington series of Edgar Comedies.

Frohman Serial Near Completion

Four Months Spent on "Invisible Ray"; Showing Soon

"THE INVISIBLE RAY," the fifteen-episode serial now in the course of production by The Frohman Amusement Corporation, is rapidly nearing its completion. After continuous work for a period of sixteen weeks the first five episodes are in completed form and are now being titled and cut.

To consume sixteen weeks in the making of five episodes is under ordinary circumstances considered more than the required time, but it is explained in this instance by the fact that the subject of "The Invisible Ray" required the building of not less than forty-seven sets of unusual construction and the employment of mechanical and scientific devices as well as an unusual form of trick photography that required weeks to complete.

Mr. Guy McConnell, the author of the production, has expressed the opinion that the present popularity of serials will receive an added impetus because of the fact that "The Invisible Ray" will demonstrate that there is a larger field and broader scope to serial photoplays than has heretofore been conceived.

Jesse J. Goldburg, general manager of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, stated: "The rock and foundation of serials heretofore has been hair raising escapades and sensationalism of the Simon Pure brand with little story and less sequence and the only thing that permitted these photographic attempts, for most of them were nothing more, to be entitled to the name serial was the fact that no episode was complete and in fact the last episode was no nearer the end of a 'story' than the first."

"In 'The Invisible Ray' we first acquired the screen rights to a manuscript that was written in the first instance for publication in a magazine and it was only after The Frohman Amusement Corporation agreed to compensate the author for what he is sacrificing by allowing the story to be filmed before publication that the contract was closed. Then we secured the services of a physician of note to collaborate with us in reducing to the level of the lay mind the many scientific matters that form a part of the plot.

"Every device used in the production is practical. By that I mean it actually works. Secret doors were equipped with workable springs. Electrical apparatuses used in the picture were practical.

Three scenes which typify the action and thrills of "The Invisible Hand," Vitagraph's new serial in which Antonio Moreno is starred

Final Scenes Taken of MacLean-May Picture

Douglas MacLean and Doris May have practically completed their fourth production as co-stars for Thomas H. Ince. They and their supporting company, directed by Lloyd Ingraham, spent Monday on the bay at Balboa Beach taking some water scenes which were originally scheduled to be taken at sea, but owing to the heavy surf now running it was found advisable to seek the security of the bay.

Strong Cast in Doris Kenyon's Next Picture

Though Doris Kenyon, because of her stellar Broadway theatrical engagement, can devote only part of her time to acting before the camera in her forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Harvest Moon," from Augustus Thomas' famous stage play, work on the new Deitrich-Beck production is progressing rapidly at Arthur F. Beck's studio at Cliffside, N. J., under the direction of J. Searle Dawley.

Among the actors engaged to support Miss Kenyon in "The Harvest Moon" are Wilfred Lytell, Earl Schenck, Marie Shotwell, Stuart Robson, Peter Lang and Grace Barton.

Blackton Gets Big Play as Rawlinson Vehicle

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, whose productions are distributed by Pathe, has just purchased, through Edgar Selden, C. Haddon Chamber's play, "The Passers-By." Mr. Blackton also stated that he had engaged Herbert Rawlinson to play the leading male role. Elaborate preparations have been made for the filming in the Blackton studio in Brooklyn, it is stated. "The Passers-By" will not be released by Pathe until after "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier," all of which have been completed.

Barbara La Marr Deely Will Write for Fox

Barbara La Marr Deely has been engaged by William Fox to write six stories for Gladys Brockwell. The first of these will be "The Mother of His Children," according to reports.

Big Demand on Moreno Serial

Bookings on "The Invisible Hand" Are Said to Surpass All Previous Records.

"THE Invisible Hand," the new Antonio Moreno serial, is said to be breaking all previous records for bookings in Vitagraph chapter plays. Although the first episode was released but little more than two weeks ago contracts have already been made for its showing in a greater number of theatres than any other of the Vitagraph continued-plays, it is stated, not excepting "Smashing Barriers," recently completed.

Vitagraph declares that "more than 5,000 theatres throughout the United States and Canada are now giving weekly instalments of "The Invisible Hand" to its patrons, or have contracted to do so. It has been booked in every big centre in this country and Canada. It has already been shown in three-quarters of the theatres that show chapter plays. It is being shown by many exhibitors who have never before had a serial on their bill."

"The growing popularity of the serial play in general and "The Invisible Hand" in particular, is especially gratifying to Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, who has always been a staunch supporter of chapter plays, says the Vitagraph report.

"He has contended, and consistently, that they should be welcomed in every theatre, no matter how large or small, or where located, and regardless of the class of their clientele. Firm in his belief that the chapter play is here to stay he has recently arranged to increase Vitagraph's output of serials by the formation of a new company. This will be headed by Joe Ryan and Jean Paige as co-stars."

New Fairbanks' Film Scores

United Artists Reports Doug's Latest to Have Won Instant Success All Over

ACCORDING to a report received from the offices of the United Artists Corporation, "When the Clouds Roll By," starring Douglas Fairbanks, is being hailed everywhere in the most laudatory manner. "Exhibitors from all sections," says the report, "have wired Hiram Abrams their heartiest congratulations on this production; critics have given the picture the best reviews any Fairbanks production has ever received; and the motion picture fans have crowded every theatre where it has been shown.

"From the Tivoli theatre in the West, the Criterion theatre in the South, the Randolph in the North and the Rivoli in the East, and innumerable points between, reports have been received, all to the effect that the picture drew capacity houses. The Alhambra theatre in Toledo wired: 'Doug Fairbanks in "When the Clouds Roll By" broke all house records'; and many other houses wired similar reports. The crowds that jammed the Rivoli theatre, New York, at all performances, particularly the afternoon performances, have never before been equalled, and it is reported that the week ended with the biggest gross business in the history of the house."

A few of the principal theatres throughout the country that presented the latest Fairbanks picture during its first week and are said to have reported unprecedented business, are the following: Coliseum at Seattle, Majestic theatre at Portland, Ore.; Tivoli theatre at San Francisco, McDonough Opera House at Oakland, De Luxe theatre at San Jose, Liberty theatre at Fresno, Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles, Criterion theatre at Atlanta, Palace and Columbia theatres at Washington, Wizard at Baltimore, Victoria at Wilmington, Rivoli at New York; Strand at Rochester; Hippodrome at Buffalo, Goodwin at Newark, State Street theatre at Trenton, Capital theatre at Elizabeth, American at Denver, Randolph and Castle theatres at Chicago, Majestic at Detroit, and Stillman at Cleveland.

Hughes Endorses Picture Version of His Work

With his reputation at stake, Rupert Hughes has given his highest endorsement to the Goldwyn production of "The Cup of Fury" under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter. In a letter to Mr. Goldwyn he expresses profound admiration and satisfaction. "When I saw it, I forgot that it was mine," Mr. Hughes remarks, and further, "I feel that the general public will feel quite as great a thrill as I have felt."

Never have I seen a finer cast, or more perfect photography. The direction of T. Hayes Hunter reveals him as one of the foremost masters of the new craft.

Gale Henry Starts Work on New Comic, "Help"

"Help" is the title of a new two-reel comedy, featuring Gale Henry, work upon which started this week at the Bull's Eye studio in Hollywood. The picture deals with a family's troubles in keeping a housekeeper. Gale, of course, plays the part of the housekeeper. Tom Gibson is directing, while the comedienne's support includes Billy Franey, Hap H. Ward, Blanche White, and George Jeske.

Second Eminent Authors Picture Ready

Basil King's story "The Street Called Straight" is the photoplay that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will release as the second Eminent Authors Picture. Mr. King spent six weeks at the Goldwyn Studios working with Wallace Worsley, the director of the production. Like "The City of Comrades," also by Basil King, this story has a fine spiritual quality; and several branch managers have wired to the home office the highest praise for "The Street Called Straight."

Freight Car Serves as Theatre in Siberia

What is described as one of the most unique motion picture theatres in existence is a battered, much-traveled, American-made freight car which has been barnstorming around Siberia during a great part of the past year. This traveling "theatre" is part of the equipment of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, a New York non-theatrical distributing organization which is under government contract to show all films to American soldiers, sailors, and marines on active duty.

Cast for "Capt. Swift" Has Been Completed

Earle Williams' supporting cast for "Capt. Swift," his next Vitagraph feature, has been completed. It will include Florence Dixon, who will play opposite Mr. Williams, Alice Calhoun, Adelaide Prince, Edward Martindale, Downing Clarke, Barry Baxter, James O'Neil and Hebert Pattee.

Pathe Erects Electric Sign on Broadway

Pathe announces the erection of a new electric sign on the top of the Greenwich Bank building at the corner of 45th street and Broadway. The feature of the display is a large crowing rooster whose wings flash brilliantly above the crows in the street below. Provision is made for a monthly change in the subject to be played up, but the roosters is to remain a permanent factor. This month Harold Lloyd's two-reelers occupy the advertising space.

Old Bowery Lives Again in Universal Picture

Universal announces that those of us who have a weakness for O. Henry's tales of little Old New York are going to experience a real treat in the coming Universal attraction, called "The Prince of Avenue A." This latest vehicle for James J. Corbett is said to depict vividly all of the old characteristics of the Bowery as it appeared in the days of the horse-cars. The supporting cast includes Mary Warren, Harry Northrup, Richard Cummings, Cora Drew, Lydia Titus, Frederick Vroom, George Fischer and Johnny Cooke.

Contest for Lobby Displays

Universal Announces Prizes Will Be Given Exhibitors for Best Displays

EVERY exhibitor knows the value of attractive lobby display. The finest posters and the cleverest ads will not attract the attention of the passerby as will some unusual exploitation stunt tried out in the entrance of the theatre. While most of the exhibitors know this, many of them have been backward in utilizing this sort of advertising to its best advantage, even though it always brings them additional business.

To encourage bigger, better and more original ideas in the lobby exploitation of pictures, Universal will offer prizes for the best displays of this kind arranged by any exhibitor in this country on any one of the Universal Big Money Twelve Pictures.

The initial prize will be $100 and will be awarded for the best display in the first three months of the contest. Exhibitors in sending in photographs will accompany same with a brief letter touching on the effectiveness of the lobby decoration in getting extra business for the house, and also mention what addiitonal exploitation work was done to put over the picture. These letters will be considered in arriving at the award.

The Universal publicity department announces that it is prepared to offer suggestions for dressing of lobbies, to any exhibitor who may require advice. Hundreds of photographs of displays are at the various exchanges for reference of the exhibitor who is looking for ideas.

Ralph Ince in Leading Role

Former Director Will Return to Stardom in Selnzick's "The Law Bringers"

ACCORDING to an announcement received from the Selznick offices, Ralph Ince is again to have the leading part in a screen production. "The Law Bringers," one of the new Selznick pictures, is to serve as Ince's vehicle in returning to the screen as an actor.

"The Law Bringers" is a story of the great Northwest, written by G. V. Lancaster. It is now being put into scenario form by Edward Montaigne. Practically every scene in the story is laid in the Northwest, and every scene in the pictured version of the story will be taken in that country. "A special cast and producing staff is being selected by Mr. Ince; and as soon as the story is in scenario form, the company will leave the East to begin work," says the Selznick report.

Ralph Ince was one of the first directors to join the Eastern organization of Selznick, and prior to that time had been active on the West Coast. Having been associated with the most successful stage stars, and having made an exhaustive study of motion picture technique, he is considered to be well-fitted to assume the directorship as well as the leading part in a screen drama.

The followers of pictures will probably recall many of Mr. Ince's successful screen productions in which he had the leading role, and the reputation he has achieved will do much to further his popularity as a star, it is hoped.

It is said that "The Law Bringers" is an action story throughout. Just how long the company will be in the Northwest country is not known at present.

Two Weeks Broadway Run

Strand Theatre, New York, Takes Hampton Production, "Desert Gold," for Run

MOE MARK, president of the Mark-Strand enterprises, and Jack Eaton, managing director of the New York Strand, have booked for two weeks Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," opening it in New York on January 11 and in Brooklyn at the Strand on January 18. This production was held out of the metropolitan territory for sixty days because Mr. Mark wanted it for its Broadway first run and was congested with New York Strand bookings. But four of the largest cities of America remain open to book "Desert Gold" and contracts are being closed for these, making a clean sweep of first run bookings in every one of the larger cities except one.

On their values and power, Mr. Hampton's initial productions, Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" and Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" have received first runs in the biggest first run houses of the nation.

First National franchise holders, with much fine product of their own, and exhibitors committed to a sustained volume of the product of other companies, have, on the merit of the Hampton productions, booked them through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with reported heavy patronage.

Among the important first runs just completed or about to begin on "Desert Gold" are: the Empress, Akron, Ohio; the Majestic, Tulsa, Okla.; the Rialto, Atlanta, Ga.; the Alhambra, Los Angeles, Cal.; the Strand, Chelsea, Mass.; the Strand, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

"Capitol" Plays to Big Washington Crowds

Frank Campeau Signs a Long-Term Contract

Frank Campeau, who has been featured as the "bad man" in many of the former Douglas Fairbanks' pictures, has just signed a long-term contract to continue his appearance with the inimitable "Doug." Mr. Campeau's latest work is seen in "When the Clouds Roll By," Fairbanks' second United Artists' release, in which he plays the role of "Mark Drake" and is directly responsible for many unique comedy situations. Prior to this picture he appeared in six others in which "Doug" was star.

The report from the offices of the United Artists asserts "There are few other men on the screen who are so well and favorably known for their portrayal of villain parts and certainly very few quite as capable of the same finished artistic naturalness."

Fox Distributes Farnum Calendar for 1920

According to an announcement just received, the advertising and publicity departments of the Fox Film Corporation have designed and published an attractive William Farnum calendar for 1920. Each month is said to be represented in conjunction with a character photograph of Mr. Farnum in one of his successful screen vehicles. It is planned to distribute fifteen thousand of these from all the Fox exchanges to the exhibitors either by mail or through the sales-forces at the various exchanges.

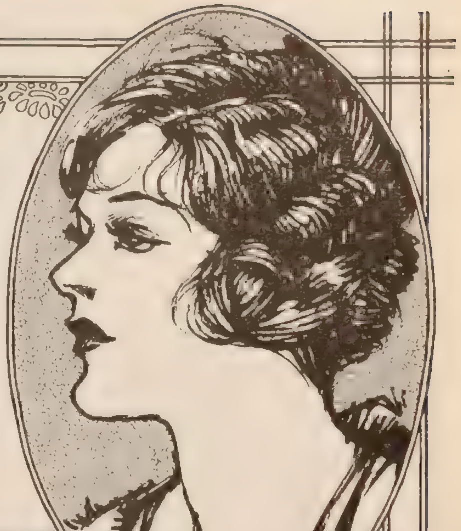
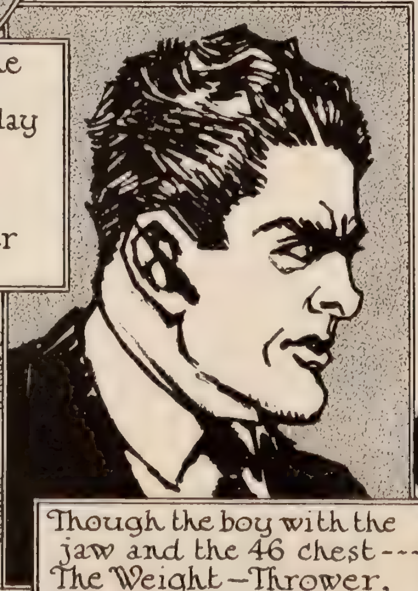
This Monocle Man, with the glass in one eye,
Who snoops through the play such a lot.
Who is he---besides a mysterious guy---
Is he baron, or bounder --- or what---?



Gwendolyn, Gwendolyn, just because Bob
Said he loved you alone for your wealth,
Was that any reason to act like a snob,
Cut him dead, and so menace his health?



Though the boy with the jaw and the 46 chest---
The Weight-Thrower, burly and rough---
Was more like a thug
than a house-party guest,
No one told him so, oddly enough.

The Iron men at stake on the bet—
You'll admit it's a plenty to make quite a gash
In the healthiest— bank-account yet.

Could hold a convention and have room to spare

A COMEDY OF MIRTH MYSTERY & MISUNDERSTANDING

DISTRIBUTED BY METRO PICTURES CORP.

The State Right Field

Lesser Producing Units Progressing Rapidly

About a month ago Sol Lesser announced that he would enter the producing field, and would begin work within sixty days. Mr. Lesser now announces that his first unit, the George Beban Producing Corp., is well under way on the first picture, "One Man In a Million." Mr. Lesser plans to produce a series of six pictures with this star, all directorial and story details to be left to the selection of Mr. Beban.

Mr. Lesser's second producing unit is with Annette Kellerman, the famous "mermaid." She will head her own company, with full charge of production, and this picture will exceed her former ones, it is asserted, in splendor and expense. The locale is to be laid in Hawaii and Australia.

C. B. Price Agents Will Visit State Righters

C. B. Price Co., Inc., dispatched three of its representatives throughout the United States on January 5th to interview state rights buyers in different sections. A. L. Ehrgott will traverse New England and the Middle West; R. Alexander will cover Pennsylvania and the Central West, and A. E. Smith goes South as far as Tennessee.

They will carry sample copies open for state rights, including the two reel special, "The Log of the U-35"; fifteen single-reel Indian specials, featuring the Indian Princess, Mona Darkfeather; eleven two-reel Tom Moore dramas; a five-part feature, "The Decoy," starring Frances Neilson; a five reel feature entitled "The Prodigal Wife," and another five reeler, title not yet given.

Hank Mann on the Fifth of His Arrow Series

Hank Mann, under the direction of Herman C. Raymaker, has started work on the fifth of his new series of two-reel comedies for Arrow. The first scenes were taken at the shipbuilding docks at San Pedro, Cal., where special permission was granted the company for filming. Madge Kirby has the feminine lead, while Vernon Dent, Jack Richardson and Jess Weldon also appear in support.

Selig Has Ambitious Program

Outlines His Plans for Productions for the Coming Year

IN a detailed statement from the offices of the Selig Polyscope Company's Studios at Los Angeles, Cal. W. N. Selig's program for the future has just been made public. It is stated therein that more wild animals, a great array of new "props" and equipment, including electrical apparatus, and three elaborate covered stages have been installed at the big Los Angeles studios. An administration building has also been erected, according to the report. The statement deals at length with the production program which has been laid down by Colonel Selig, and, according to the statement, several production enterprises have already been launched at the Los Angeles studios. The statement is submitted in the following:

"One of these enterprises has to do with the Selig Polyscope company, Limited, of London, which corporation has begun the production of new Selig specials. The first of these is "The Mask," after the noted book of that name, written by Arthur Hornblow. Such stars as Jack Holt, Hedda Nova, Fred Malatesta and William Clifford form the big cast in this baffling and stirring story, now in the hands of Director Bert Bracken.

"The presentation will be followed by productions of other famous books from Colonel Selig's great library, such as "Kazan," by Curwood; "The Kingdom of Slender Swords," etc. This Selig organization proposes to issue from six to eight special feature productions a year, each one with a selected, all-star cast, according to the peculiar demands of the stories.

"Another new Selig branch is guiding the destinies of a feature-serial, with Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson as stars. William E. Wing, the psychological writer, author of Griffith, Biograph, Vitagraph and Selig specials in past years, has been engaged to write this serial, from a story by his own pen, dealing with the country which Mr. Wing has known since the early 70's, the Great West.

"A notable Western cast attends this production, including Duke Lee, Bud Osborne, Vester Pegg, Pedro Leon, W. A. Orlamond, Bob Burns, Harry Lonsdale, L. M. Wells, George Pankey. Tom Nash is business and production manager; Leon de LaMothe is director. Colonel Selig's "human" dog, Prince, plays an important but peculiar role in the mystery.

"The second animal-serial ever offered to the screen also is in production through another Selig organization. It is an ultra-modern story conceived by Colonel Selig himself under title of "The Lost City" and concerns the lost white race of the interior of Africa, a race announced to exist by such eminent authorities as Explorers Livingstone and Stanley. Juanita Hansen, George Chesebro, Frank Clark, Hector Dion, Alfred Ferguson and others compose the cast. Myriads of wild animals appear in this fascinating tale.

"Colonel Selig also has his writers busily engaged preparing for production, his second special, based upon the famous novel, "Kazan," by James Oliver Curwood, whose fascinating stories of the virile Far North country have been read by the millions who love mystery and red-blooded tales."

"Kentucky Colonel" Soon to Have Showing

Director William Seiter, in charge of the production of "The Kentucky Colonel" for the National Film Corporation of America, is watching with interest the manner in which the picture is received by the public. Mr. Seiter's particular reason, it is said, is because of the number of "types" it was necessary to find before the production could be started.

"The Kentucky Colonel" will be given its first Eastern showing within a short time, according to Joe Brandt, general representative of National, who is in charge of the New York office.

Pioneer Starts the New Year in Happy Mood

With fourteen exchanges in the United States and Canada, four of which are under direct control and the remainder on co-operative basis, handling its pictures, with four companies producing exclusively for it, the Pioneer Film Corporation starts out on the New Year with plans which will in another twelve months make it "the biggest and most influential independent film organization in America," claims the Pioneer Film Corporation.

According to reports, the year 1919 saw the Pioneer business increase six fold. This result was due to the application of conservative business methods, and proves that the great picture industry is not a gamble, but a field in which integrity, service and intelligence are rewarded with success.

New Canadian Exchanges Handle Pioneer Film

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces the opening of two exchanges last week at Montreal and St. John, N. B., by the Sterling Films, Ltd.

The Montreal exchange is located at 315 Henry street, while the office at St. John is at 87 Union street. Within a short time both of these offices will be fully equipped, and will have on hand the full line of Pioneer attractions, as well as the Facts and Follies series, it is stated.

"Tarzan" Company Prepare to Come East

With but a few more days of photographing left them, and the work of cutting and assembling the films already in process, Numa Pictures Corporation's players in "The Return of Tarzan" are ready to turn their faces toward the East, according to the reports from the home office of the corporation.

Second of the National Film Series Selected

The second of the National Film Corporation's series of the 1920 season will be "Mary Minds Her Business," based on the serial story by George Weston, now appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Big Claims Made for "The Lost City"

If the circus may be said to be "The Greatest Show on Earth," then it is claimed by the producers that "The Lost City" is "The Greatest Film of the Screen." It is a fifteen episode production, starring Miss Juanita Hansen, George Chesebro and a big cast of favorite players.

Animals of every variety and species are introduced in the picture.

Juanita Hansen, in a special interview published on page 867 in the Professional Section tells of her experiences and feelings in the filming of the production.

Hirsh Buys "The House Without Children"

Nathan Hirsh has purchased Argus Enterprises' production of Robert McLaughlin's human interest drama, "The House Without Children" for greater New York, Westchester County, Long Island, and Northern New Jersey, and will give it big exploitation, devoting his entire personal time and attention to placing the important first runs.

Jans Signs Up James Morrison

Will Be Leading Man for Olive Tell in "Love Without Question" New Film

WORK is progressing rapidly and satisfactorily on the initial production of Jans Pictures Inc., "Love Without Question," in which Miss Olive Tell is to be starred.

Under the direct supervision of B. A. Rolfe, director-general of the Jans' company, scenes are being made for the interiors upon completion of which the company, under Mr. Rolfe's supervision, will begin the filming of the exteriors.

It is said that "Love Without Question," which is a filmization of the widely read novel "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp, permits of a great number of highly dramatic scenes that will provide something very unusual for theatre goers.

Jans Pictures Inc., having taken over the Peerless Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., the interiors are being photographed there. The studio being one that has exceptionally good equipment affords an opportunity for director and camera man to produce many novelties in the way of lighting effects that would be impossible to obtain in a smaller and less adequately appointed studio.

Still another announcement of interest to both exhibitors and fans is the fact that James Morrison has been engaged to play one of the leading roles in "Love Without Question." "Jimmie" Morrison is too well known to need any introduction to motion picture people. Mr. Morrison has but recently been discharged from the army. The role he has been cast for is said to be one that especially suits him.

Character Pictures Formed

Plummer, New England Exhibitor, C. W. Buck and David Shapiro Behind Firm

A NEW motion picture company, the Character Pictures Corporation, has thrown its hat into the movie ring and announces very ambitious plans for the coming season. The company, which has taken temporary offices at 17 West 42d street, was formed with the purpose of joining the ranks of independent producers in the making of big special productions. It is planned to make six of these special, all star productions the first year.

However, this does not mean that the company will not also feature stars, as negotiations have already been entered into with several of the foremost screen favorites with the intention of signing them on the character program.

Among the incorporators of the Character Pictures Corporation are Albert W. Plummer, prominent New England Exhibitor, who has been connected in various branches of the film business for several years; Charles W. Buck, importer and manufacturer, 15 West 38th street, and David Shapiro, lawyer and real estate owner. There are also other well known film men financially interested in the company, but whose names are being withheld for the present.

The rights to several successful novels have already been purchased and full announcement regarding them will be made known shortly. The director and cast for the first picture will be engaged in a few days and production will begin immediately.

"It was only after quite some thought that it was decided to give the name of Character Pictures to our productions," said Mr. Plummer in speaking of the plans of the company.

Allied Players States Plans

Announces Program for 1920; Will Film Abroad If Setting Is of Foreign Type

AN announcement from the offices of the Allied Players, the newly organized producing concern, sets forth its plans for the coming year and its intention to produce abroad when this is necessary to preserve accuracy in the local color of the picture.

Twelve productions are to be released during the coming year, six of these being already completed, or in the last stages of completion, three others are in preparation, while the remainder have been assigned directors and rapidly being organized. Productions of the Allied Players are created and produced in America, or in Europe under American supervision, depending entirely upon the requirements of the story selected for production. Among the books and plays by prominent authors, secured during the past two years, for production by the Allied Players, some of these called for distinctive foreign settings and, in some cases, characters.

Commenting on its policy to produce abroad when the local atmosphere of the picture demands it, the organization has the following to report: "To avoid inaccuracies, so prevalent in American made productions when attempting to reproduce old world atmosphere, background and characters, these stories were picturized with due respect for their locale among scenes and types impossible to secure or reproduce in this country. In carrying out this purpose it was possible to secure for Allied Players production the very highest class of talent abroad, many famous stars and directors, photographers and technical directors of the allied countries, being used to make the plan a success."

Hypnotism as a Science Shown in New Serial

The Supreme Pictures, Inc., in a report recently received, announces that the new Reeve and Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," now being produced at their Supreme Pictures, Inc., studio at Flushing, Long Island, deals with hypnotism as a science. "Arthur B. Reeve first made science popular on the screen, and he and John W. Grey are the first to treat hypnotism from the scientific angle and to seek to show its beneficial qualities," asserts the Supreme Pictures report. "To do so they secured the services of the eminent French scientist, Dr. J. Robert Pauline, long known as the greatest hypnotist in the country."

C. B. Price Going West

C. B. Price, President of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., leaves for the West the latter part of January to see the state rights buyers there, and will spend some time at Los Angeles meeting his numerous friends in that section.

Actor-Director Plays Role by Proxy

Victor Seastrom, the actor-director of the Swedish Biograph Company, employs a double in his own role during rehearsals of film-plays, only portraying the part himself when the actual photographing of the scenes is going on.

"By viewing his own role from behind the camera, Seastrom derives a better understanding of the character," declared Ernest Mattsson, American manager of the Swedish Biograph Company, in a recent interview.

Hallroom Boys Resume Production Jan. 16th

It is reported that after a short tour of the largest of the Pacific coast cities, where they will make personal appearances, Flanagan and Edwards, the "Hall Room Boys," comedians of the National Film Corporation, will resume production on their comedies January 16.

Special Features' List of Current Releases

In a recent communication the Special-Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., announces its list of releases for January and February. Among the productions that appear are the following: "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot; twelve two-reel Northwood dramas, featuring Edgar Jones and Evelyn Brent; twenty-six two-reel westerns, starring Myra Cunard and made by Frohman; Romayne Comedies, with Dot Farley; Kathlyn Williams, in some sensational jungle dramas; a five-reel feature, "Staking His Life," with William Hart in the leading role; "Everybody's Business"; and a six-reeler of daring stunts and thrills, entitled "The Superman." The second series of the "Texas Guinan," two-reel Westerns are also listed.

"The Kentucky Colonel" Gets Thirty Offers

Since the announcement was made that the National Film Corporation of America was to produce "The Kentucky Colonel" with J. J. Dowling in the title role, I. Bernstein, production manager, reports he has received no fewer than thirty offers for the finished production, according to advices from the west coast studios of the National. Among those in the cast are J. J. Dowling, Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Fred Kohler, Thelma Salters and Gordon Griffiths.

Extensive Improvements by the National Film

Additional administrative buildings, a new combination light and dark stage and an electric power plant are some of the improvements to be made at the National Film Corporation's studios on the West Coast, according to I. Bernstein, production manager. A sum in excess of $200,000 has been set aside by the board of directors for this purpose, it is stated.

Arline Pretty and Harry G. Sell in the Serico serial, "A Woman in Grey"

"Whose Your Servant?" Coming

Much Is Expected of New Independent Picture Shortly Available

Scene from "Whose Your Servant?" to be released on the States Rights market by L. Hiller

IN a lengthy statement just issued, the independent production, entitled "Whose Your Servant," is made the object of considerable speculation as to the effect that it will have on the film industry when released for its first public showing. The speculation is decidedly optimistic in tone. One assertion has it that the production "is destined to cause a sensation," while another expresses the opinion that it is due to become "one of the great films of screen development." The statement further announces that the picture will be supported by "a gigantic advertising and exploitation campaign."

L. L. Hiller, with offices in the Longacre Building, New York City, controls the world's rights to the production, and, according to the report at hand, "it is upon the advice of several leading directors and producers that the picture is being valued at its true worth and is being backed on that basis upon its initial appearance."

"It is beyond question as great a motion picture as 'The Cheat,'" was the verdict reported to be given by those at the private showing, and one leading producer is stated to have said, "That picture must not be permitted to just slip out and wait for the slow process of the forming of public opinion to make its value. It is one of the real sensations of the day, and as such it should be heralded far and wide."

An extensive advertising campaign is being rapidly planned for the production, according to reports, and in addition it is expected that the theme will provoke widespread comment by the press of the country. One of the features of the campaign is said to be an elaborate press book, consisting of more than twenty pages with considerable display-copy in three colors. Trailers, slides, heralds, and a score of effective aids to exploitation are being prepared, it is stated.

Releasing arrangements will be announced shortly through the daily press and the motion picture trade journals, and intensive advertising showing in New York City and vicinity will precede the Broadway premiere of the production, it is announced. Pending the conclusion of the definite releasing arrangements, Mr. Hiller is somewhat reticent relative to the picture, but in the immediate future, the trade papers will carry full information.

The picture, it is stated, deals with a situation in the home vital to every woman in the country, but aside from its pure dramatic value, it is said to possess a story that will interest leaders of thought everywhere. It is described as a thoroughly American theme with a touch of the mystery and intrigue of the Far East in it.

"In connection with the nation-wide advertising campaign which has been planned for the picture the aid of thousands of merchants will be had in introducing it. One angle of the theme makes it seem certain that in practically every first-run house, the exhibitor will be able to avail himself of this support of local merchants, and in anticipation of this a special arrangement for tie-up advertising has been concluded," announces the report issued on this production.

Kremer Chaplins Get Wide Sales

Extensive Exploitation Planned by Medium of Popular Song

IT is reported that unusual interest is being displayed by the various state right buyers in the Chaplin comedies now being distributed by Victor Kremer. During the past week several sales were consummated by which these pictures have been acquired for many different territories. "A Burlesque on Carmen," starring Charlie Chaplin, has been purchased for the states of Ohio and Kentucky by T. J. McAvoy.

H. A. Lande, of the Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa., who already controls "A Burlesque on Carmen" for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, has acquired the four other Chaplins controlled by Victor Kremer; viz.: "The Champion," "Work," "Jitney Elopement" and "By the Sea" for this same territory. "A Burlesque on Carmen" has been purchased for North and South Dakota by A. Glasnapp, of Bowman, N. Dak. This sale was consummated by Phil Goldstone, sales-representative of Victor Kremer in the Northwest.

Bert Lubin, recently appointed roadman for the Kremer organization, has consummated a contract with Arthur C. Bromberg, of Atlanta, Ga., whereby "A Burlesque on Carmen" and the four other Chaplins will be distributed by Bromberg for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina.

Since the sales drive inaugurated by Mr. Kremer a little less than a month ago, the following territories have been disposed of for the five Essanay-Chaplin comedies, according to reports received:

Illinois, Indiana, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, District of Columbia, North Carolina, Maryland, Delaware, Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Iowa, Nebraska, Kentucky, Ohio, Wisconsin, Western Missouri, Kansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and South Carolina.

Arrangements were completed this week whereby "Carmen," the special comedy song number, written by Wm. J. McKenna, will be published by the Joe Morris Music Company. Mr. McKenna, the author of "Carmen," has been responsible for many song successes, including "Mandy Lane," "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly," and for the lyrics and music of the "Bride Shop," a well-known vaudeville success.

One of the most comprehensive tie-ups ever entered into between music publisher and film producer will feature the publication of "Carmen." The closest kind of co-operation will be entered into to publicize the song for the benefit of those exhibitors who will present Chaplin in his famous feature comedy, it is stated.

According to reports, the Victor Kremer organization has prepared a moving-picture trailer, incorporating the chorus of the song to be used as an introduction to the presentation of the film. Thousands of miniature cards, carrying on one side a scene from "Carmen" and on the reverse side the chorus of the song, will be distributed, it is said, throughout the country by the state right buyers of the picture and their exhibitors.

Special slides have also been prepared to supplement the trailer, carrying verse and chorus of the McKenna number. It is asserted that orchestras in the various picture houses will feature "Carmen" as an introduction to the presentation of the picture. The music publishers will pursue an intensive campaign, including the use of singers in the various houses, window displays in which copies of the song and window cards will be combined to attract the eye of the passer-by, and the use of the "Carmen" number by several vaudeville headliners on the big time circuits throughout the country.

Portrait of Billie Burke in Pictorial Review

By a special arrangement effected by the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the midwinter number of The Pictorial Review, on the newsstands January 15, carries a full-page portrait of Billie Burke, Paramount-Artcraft star. The portrait is in four colors and is a reproduction of an original pastel by Haskell Coffin.

Several Countries Sold on McLaughlin Film

E. Wertheimer of London, has bought Robert McLaughlin's big special, "The House Without Children" for the British Isles. Mr. Wertheimer purposes giving special presentations of the picture in the principal cities of the United Kingdom, and in order to obtain the spectacular American theatrical effect he has ordered a vast supply of oil paintings from Kraus Manufacturing Company.

Max Glucksman of Buenos Ayres, has purchased the South American rights to "The House Without Children."

Many of the biggest exploiters of special productions throughout the world are negotiating for rights to the McLaughlin feature.

Hallmark Has Territory on Grossman Feature

Hallmark Pictures Corporation has purchased from Grossman Pictures, Inc., the American and Canadian rights for "Wits vs. Wits," the first of a series of detective-story features starring Marguerite Marsh. The picture was recently completed at the Grossman studios at Ithaca, N. Y., and is said to be an absorbing story of the brand of detective fiction. Miss Marsh is supported by a cast including Coit Albertson, Bernard Randall, Charles Middleton, Joseph Marba, and Leora Spellman.

Screen Gets Vaudeville Team

Clark and Bergman Signed by Jack and Harry Cohn Who Leave for Coast

ON the eve of his departure for California where he is to supervise the production of Hall Room Boys comedies, Harry Cohn, who, with his brother Jack Cohn, has been producing this style of pictures for the last year, has announced the signing up of the famous vaudeville team, Clark and Bergman to appear in an entirely new series of two reel comedies.

There are few followers of the stage who have not seen these two entertainers in the years they have graced the vaudeville stage.

Mr. Cohn planned to leave New York for the Coast on January 9th, but delayed to talk over matters with Miss Clark and Mr. Bergman. These two, who have been stars on the Keith circuit for years, were not quite ready to renounce vaudeville for the films upon Mr. Cohn's mere say-so, but were finally convinced.

Gladys Clark and Henry Bergman leave vaudeville with the best wishes of hundreds of friends. The latter is proud of the conversation he held with E. F. Albee, head of the Keith Circuit, and a big figure in the vaudeville world, when Mr. Albee was advised of his projected excursion to Filmland. The team was offered the sincere best wishes of the Keith head, who also told them that when they were ready to return to vaudeville, "their bookings would start wherever they happened to be."

Gladys Clark and Henry Bergman, famous vaudevillians who will star in comedies for Jack and Harry Cohn

"We consider ourselves fortunate to secure the services of Miss Clark and Mr. Bergman," said Harry Cohn in announcing the event. Both of them represent types we have been looking for some time.

Grossman Starts Second of Detective Films

Harry Grossman, president of Grossman Pictures, Inc., announces that production has been begun on the second picture of the series of eight detective-story features that are to be made at the company studios at Ithaca, N. Y. Marguerite Marsh will be the star in each of the pictures, the first of which, "Wits vs. Wits," has been completed and sold. The second, which will be completed in January, is "Face to Face."

Francis Ford Plays in Triple Exposure Film

"Crimson Shoals," Monopol Pictures Company's triple exposure feature with Francis Ford in the three parts, is said to be creating no small amount of interest among the fans. The unusual achievement of seeing the player in a scene in three different and widely varying roles is reported to be occasioning comment generally.

Dolores Cassinelli with Schomer-Ross

The Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., have just concluded arrangements for their second production. Mr. A. S. Schomer has signed up Dolores Cassinelli to take the lead and is supported by Ben Taggert. The production started January 5th. The Victor Studios on 43rd Street, have been taken over for this work.

Personal and Otherwise

Edmund Goulding, one time English actor and stage director, later soldier with the A.E.F., author of "The Ordeal of Rosetta," while still in the trenches, and immediately following the Armistice, one of the busiest members of Selznick's scenario staff, is also responsible for the adaptation of "A Daughter of Two Worlds," which is being shown at the Strand theatre this week, starring Norma Talmadge. Mr. Goulding has come into prominence with most amazing rapidity, since first taking up motion picture work in this country less than a year ago. Having established a name for himself as a scenario writer of ability, he is now eagerly looking forward to an opportunity to prove his knowledge of screen technique from the director's standpoint. And being a young man of tremendous energy and talent, we are sure that he will accomplish this too.

Marion Davies promises to wear three of her Christmas gifts in the "Ball of the Gods," perhaps the most elaborate scene of "The Restless Sex," from the Robert W. Chambers novel, on which Miss Davies is now at work under the direction of Robert Z. Leonard at the International Film Company's studios. The gifts are nothing less than a diamond and pearl pendant, and a diamond headpiece, which, together with all the other well-known Davies jewels, will doubtlessly make Miss Davies' appearance in the ball scene a more than usually noteworthy event. Her costume for the occasion, by the way, was made for her specially in Paris, and but recently arrived.

Ralph Ince is playing the part of Abraham Lincoln in a new Selznick special production. Mr. Ince declares that "once an actor, always an actor," and he is directing himself in this particular role, and the rest of the company in their respective parts. In our opinion, Mr. Ince must be an expert among experts in the art of make-up.

Vincent Coleman started something when he challenged George Walsh, the athletic Fox star, to a bout for the wrestling championship of the screen. Several other actors have risen to ask why they were overlooked by the challenger, and Vincent wishes it known that he is ready to meet any other screen player for the title.

Ellen Cassity, who like Martha Mansfield and Kay Laurell, deserted the Follies for the screen, has been chosen by J. Stuart Blackton for the leading role in "Passers By," the Commodore's next production for Pathe.

Captain Richard C. Travers, one time Essanay star, who has been with the A. E. F. in France for some time past, will again take up his picture work. He will be leading man for Pearl White in one of her Fox productions.

Louis Sterns, who is in the cast of International's "Humoresque," believes that he has broken all records. Mr. Sterns has been in motion pictures for about ten years and has appeared in exactly five hundred photoplays.
